The PRESIDENT pro tempore [Hon. LA FAYETTE S. FOSTER] at twelve o'clock called the Senate to order.

PRAYER.

Rev. EDGAR H. GRAY, the Chaplain to the Senate for the Thirty-Ninth Congress, offered the following prayer:

Glory be to Thy name, O God, that the Republic still lives, the nation survives, the country is safe! Glory be to Thy name that our heroic efforts have been crowned with victory, so that the desolations of war have ceased, and the ground no longer shakes beneath the tread of armies! Glory be to Thy name that we are permitted to recognize God in the dispensations of His providence and His grace in dealing with us! We praise Thee with thanksgiving that the statue of Freedom now looks down from our Capitol upon an entire nation of free men, and that we are permitted by the dispensations of Thy providence, and the way being prepared, to give liberty to the captive, the opening of the prison to them that are bound, and to proclaim the acceptable year of our God. O Lord, we bless Thee that Thy servants are permitted to convene in these halls of legislation under circumstances so auspicious to deliberate upon matters grave and important to the interests of the nation. Grant, we pray Thee, that all their deliberations and enactments may be such as to secure the divine approval, and insure the unanimous acquiescence of our people, and command the respect of the nations of the earth. O Lord, grant that the afflictive dispensations of Thy providence, and the public bereavements which the nation and the Senate have suffered since they last convened, may be preëminently sanctified to our good. And bless, we pray Thee, our President and the ministers of State associated with him in authority, and endue them richly with wisdom and strength adequate to their great responsibilities. And grant that the principles of our free and glorious Government may be established upon an everlasting basis, and come, Thou Ancient of days, and reign over us forever. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore took the chair.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. LUKE P. POLAND, appointed by the Executive of the State of Vermont, to fill the vacancy which recently occurred in the representation from that State in this body. I move that the credentials be read, the prescribed oaths administered to Mr. POLAND by the Chair, and that he be admitted to his seat.

The credentials were read, and the oaths prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. POLAND, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I desire to present the credentials of Hon. JOHN P. STOCKTON, of New Jersey, elected a Senator by the Legislature of that State to serve for six years from the 4th of March last. I ask that the credentials be read.

The Secretary read the credentials.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Stockton is present, and is ready to be qualified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Stockton will be good enough to come forward and take the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

Mr. COWAN. Before the oaths are administered, I beg leave to present the protest of several members of the Legislature of New Jersey, protesting against the right of Mr. STOCKTON to take his seat here as a Senator. I do not desire to raise the question as to whether he may not be sworn, because I believe his credentials are prima facie sufficient for that purpose, but I desire that these papers may be laid before the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when that committee shall be organized, in order that the prayer of the memorialists may be heard and such order taken upon it as the Senate in their wisdom may decree.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The protest will be received.

Mr. COWAN. I move that it lie on the table until the Committee on the Judiciary be organized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The protest will be received and laid on the table. If no objection be made, Mr. STOCKTON will be good enough to come forward and take the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

The prescribed oaths were then administered to Mr. STOCKTON, and he took his seat in the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WADE. Is it in order to introduce a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order if there be no objection. It requires a day's notice under the rules, but it can be received if there be no objection.

Mr. WADE. I ask leave to introduce a bill of which no notice has been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is any objection made?

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the title of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The Secretary read it as follows:

A bill (S. No. 1) to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I object.

Mr. WADE. Objection being made, I give notice that I shall introduce it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the objection.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then I could not make myself audible. I want to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California object to the introduction of the bill?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will not; I will look at it afterwards.

Mr. WADE. If there be no objection, I move that it lie on the table until the committees are appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having had its first reading, will lie on the table as a matter of course.

Mr. WADE. I move that the bill be printed. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce the following bills and joint resolution, which were severally read the first time by their titles, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. No. 2) to preserve the right of trial by jury by securing impartial jurors in the courts of the United States.

A bill (S. No. 3) to carry out the principles of a republican form of government in the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. No. 4) to prescribe an oath to maintain a republican form of government in the rebel States.

A bill (S. No. 5) in part execution of the guarantee of a republican form of government in the Constitution of the United States.

A bill (S. No. 6) supplying appropriate legislation to enforce the amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery.

A bill (S. No. 7) to enforce the guarantee of a republican form of government in certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 8) to reorganize the judiciary of the United States; which was read the first time, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 9) to maintain the freedom of the inhabitants in the States declared in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862; which was read the first time, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANTI-SLAVERY AMENDMENT.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following concurrent resolution declaratory of the adoption of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Whereas the Congress, by a vote of two thirds of both Houses, did heretofore propose to the Legislatures of the several States, for ratification, an amendment to the Constitution in the following words, to wit:

"ARTICLE XIII.

"Sec. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

And whereas, at the time when such amendment was submitted as well as since, there were sundry States which, by reason of rebellion, were without Legislatures, so that, while the submission was made in due constitutional form, it was not, as it could not be, made to all the States, but to "the Legislatures of the several States," in obedience both to the letter and spirit of the provision of the Constitution authorizing amendments, there being a less number of Legislatures of States than there were States; and whereas, since the Constitution expressly authorizes amendments to be made, any construction thereof which would render the making of amendments at times impossible, must violate both its letter and its spirit; and whereas, to require the ratification to be by States without Legislatures as well as by "the Legislatures of the States," in order to be pronounced valid, would put it in the power of a long-continued rebellion to suspend, not only the peace of the nation, but its Constitution also; and whereas, from the terms of the Constitution, and the nature of the case, it belongs to the two Houses of Congress to determine when such ratification is complete; and whereas more than three fourths of the Legislatures to which the proposition was made have ratified such amendment: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the amendment abolishing slavery has become, and is, a part of the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That notwithstanding the foregoing resolution, and considering the great public interest which attaches to this question, the Legislatures which have not ratified the amendment, be permitted to express their concurrence therein by the usual form of ratification to be returned in the usual manner.

Resolved, That no one of the States, to the Legislature of which such amendment could not be submitted, by reason of its being in rebellion against the United States, and having no Legislature, be permitted to resume its relations, and have its Legislature acknowledged, and its Senators and Representatives admitted, until its Legislature shall have first ratified such amendment in recognition of the accomplished fact.

RESTORATION OF REBEL STATES.

Mr. SUMNER submitted for consideration the following resolutions; which lie over under the rules:

Resolutions declaratory of the duty of Congress in respect to guarantees of the national security and the national faith in the rebel States.

Resolved, That, in order to provide proper guarantees for security in the future, so that peace and prosperity shall surely prevail, and the plighted faith of the nation shall be preserved, it is the first duty of Congress to take care that no State declared to be in rebellion shall be allowed to resume its relations to the Union until after the satisfactory performance of five several conditions, which conditions precedent must be submitted to a popular vote, and be sanctioned by a majority of the people of each State respectively, as follows:

(1.) The complete reestablishment of loyalty, as shown by an honest recognition of the unity of the Republic, and the duty of allegiance to it at all times, without mental reservation or equivocation of any kind.

(2.) The complete suppression of all oligarchical pretensions, and the complete enfranchisement of all citizens, so that there shall be no denial of rights on account of color or race; but justice shall be impartial, and all shall be equal before the law.

(3.) The rejection of the rebel debt, and at the same time the adoption, in just proportion, of the national debt and the national obligations to Union soldiers, with solemn pledges never to join in any measure, direct or indirect, for their repudiation, or in any way tending to impair the national credit.

(4.) The organization of an educational system for the equal benefit of all without distinction of color or race.

(5.) The choice of citizens for office, whether State or national, of constant and undoubted loyalty, whose conduct and conversation shall give assurance of peace and reconciliation.

Resolved, That in order to provide these essential safeguards, without which the national security and the national faith will be imperiled, States cannot be precipitated back to political power and independence; but they must wait until these conditions are in all respects fulfilled.

CONDITIONS OF RESTORATION.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolutions for consideration; which were ordered to be printed:

Resolutions declaratory of the duty of Congress, especially in respect to loyal citizens in rebel States.

Whereas it is provided by the Constitution that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government;" and whereas there are certain States where, by reason of rebellion, there are no State governments recognized by Congress; and whereas, because of the failure of such States respectively to maintain State governments, it has become the duty of Congress, standing in the place of guarantor, where the principal has made a lapse, to provide governments, republican in form, for such States respectively: Now, therefore, in order to declare the duty of Congress,

(1.) Resolved, That whenever a convention is called in any of such States for the organization of a government, the following persons have a right to be represented therein, namely, the citizens of the State who have taken no part in the rebellion; especially all those whose exclusion from the ballot enabled the rest to carry the State into the rebellion, and still more especially those who became soldiers in the armies of the Union, and by their valor on the battlefield turned the tide of war and made the Union triumphant; and Congress must refuse to sanction the proceedings of any convention composed of delegates chosen by men recently in arms against the Union, and excluding men who periled their lives in its defense; unless its proceedings have been first approved by those hereby declared to be entitled to participate therein.

(2.) Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States being supreme over State laws and State constitutions in respect of these matters upon which it speaks, and the duty being now imposed by it on Congress to legislate for the establishment of government in such States respectively, it is hereby declared that no supposed State law or State constitution can be set up as an impediment to the national power in the discharge of this duty.

(3.) Resolved, That since, also, it has become the duty of Congress to determine what is a republican form of government, it is hereby declared that no government of a State recently in rebellion can be accepted as republican, where large masses of citizens who have been always loyal to the United States are excluded from the elective franchise, and especially where the wounded soldier of the Union, with all his kindred and race, and also the kindred of others whose bones whiten the battle-fields where they died for their country, are thrust away from the polls to give place to the very men by whose hands wound and death were inflicted; more particularly where, as in some of those States, the result would be to disfranchise the majority of the citizens who were always loyal, and give to the oligarchical minority recently engaged in carrying on the rebellion the power to oppress the loyal majority, even to the extent of driving them from their homes and depriving them of all opportunity of livelihood.

(4.) Resolved, That in all those cases where, by reason of rebellion, there is a lapse in the State government, and it becomes the duty of Congress to provide a government for the State, no government can be accepted as "a republican form of government" where a large proportion of native-born citizens, charged with no crime and no failure of duty, is left wholly unrepresented, although compelled to pay taxes; and especially where a particular race is singled out and denied all representation, although compelled to pay taxes; more especially where such race constitutes the majority of the citizens, and where the enfranchised minority has forfeited its rights by rebellion; and more especially still where, by such exclusion, the oligarchical enemies of the Republic can practically compel it to break faith with national soldiers and national creditors to whose generosity it was indebted during a period of peril.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BROWN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce bills of the following titles:

A bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at the city of St. Louis; and

A bill to reimburse the State of Missouri for moneys expended in arming, equipping, and provisioning a militia force to aid in suppressing the rebellion, and for moneys otherwise expended in behalf of the United States.

HOOR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. POMEROY. If there is no business before the Senate, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will not press an adjournment. Perhaps the other House may organize soon.

Mr. POMEROY. I withdraw the motion to adjourn and move that the Senate take a recess for half an hour.

Mr. CLARK. Say till one o'clock.

Mr. POMEROY. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

Mr. SUMNER. Before that is put, I suggest that the better motion would be to adjourn. I believe it is the habit to adjourn early on the first day. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same motion was made by the honorable Senator from Kansas, and was withdrawn on the suggestion that perhaps in a short time we should hear of the organization of the House.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not know it had been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The ordinary course is to wait a little while.

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore resumed the chair at one o'clock p. m.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn. It seems probable that the other House will not be organized in time to enable us to inform the President to-day of the assembling of the two Houses, and their readiness to receive his communications.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Would it not be better first to make a motion directing that notification of our assembling be given to the other House?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that is not usual.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is usual; at least it has been for the last four Congresses. I have looked into the precedents for ten years past, and the practice at the first session of each Congress has been for the Senate to meet and qualify its members, and then to pass an order directing the Secretary to inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has met and is ready to proceed to business, and then sometimes some little business has transpired and the Senate has adjourned until next day.

Mr. SUMNER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. FOOT. None at all. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, with a view to the introduction of the motion indicated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move, then, that the Secretary be directed to inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate has assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I now repeat the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

The following Members and Delegates failed to answer to their names:

Hons. MORGAN JONES, of New York; FRANCIS THOMAS and BENJAMIN G. HARRIS, of Maryland; LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, of Kentucky; DANIEL W. VOORHEES, of Indiana; DELOS E. ASHLEY, of Nevada; WILLIAM H. HOOPER, of Utah; JOHN N. GOODWIN, of Arizona; and SAMUEL McLEAN, of Montana.

During the call of the roll, when the Clerk had reached the name of Hon. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK, of Indiana,

Mr. MAYNARD rose and said: Mr. Clerk, I beg to say that in calling the roll of mem-

The CLERK. The Clerk will be compelled to object to any interruption of the call of the roll.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the Clerk decline to hear me?

The CLERK. I decline to have any interruption of the call of the roll.

The call of the roll was then concluded.

The CLERK stated that, one hundred and seventy-six members having answered to their names, a quorum was present.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House do now proceed to the election of a Speaker of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before that motion is put—

Mr. STEVENS. I call the gentleman to order.

The CLERK. The Clerk rules, as a matter of order, that he cannot recognize any gentleman whose name is not upon his roll.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Clerk, I hope that motion will not prevail until it be settled who are members of this House—whether the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] holding in his hand, I presume, the certificate of the Governor of that State, is entitled to be heard on his credentials or not. I trust that we shall not proceed to any revolutionary step like that without at least hearing from the honorable gentleman from Tennessee. For, if Tennessee is not in the Union, and has not been in the Union, and is not a loyal State, and the people of Tennessee are aliens and foreigners to this Union, by what right does the President of the United States usurp his place in the White House and in the capital of the country when an alien, as he must be, a foreigner, and not from a State in the Union?

I trust there will not be such rapidity of motion as that proposed: I trust that the honorable gentleman from Tennessee will be permitted to be heard. For, if a precedent can be established by the Clerk, and he can make a rule to exclude members from the floor of this House by his mere arbitrary will, this then ceases to be a Congress, and the Clerk of the House, but a servant of the House, is omnipotent over its organization. Is not the State of Tennessee in the Union?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I call the gentleman to order. I ask, what is the question before the House?

The CLERK. The question before the House is, Shall the House proceed to the election, via voce, of a Speaker? on which the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. The honorable gentleman from Illinois, when he is better acquainted with me in this House, will soon learn that I always proceed in order, and never deviate from the rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. Clerk, in the organization of the House it becomes necessary first to know who has a right to vote as to that organization. If the delegation from Tennessee—especially if the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, who would address the House if permitted by the Clerk, is not a loyal man and is not from a State in the Union, what man then is loyal? In the darkest and most doubtful period of the war, when an exile from his own State, I heard his eloquent voice on the banks of the St. Lawrence arousing the people of my own State to discharge their duties to the country. Yet there are honorable gentlemen who will not allow him to be heard upon this floor, although holding in his hand a certificate from the Governor of the State of Tennessee.

And then there is a State of Virginia which the Clerk has not read; I mean the old State of Virginia, and not Western Virginia—the State over which Governor Fairpoint presides, over which he has presided, and to which position he was elected during the war, whose loyalty no man doubts, and who is as much the Governor of that State as the Governor of Pennsylvania is Governor of the State of Pennsylvania. By what right has the Virginia delegation been excluded by the Clerk of the House? I wish the Clerk would tell me. He has given no reason for such exclusion, and I should be happy to yield the floor for a moment to enable him to state why both Tennessee and Virginia have been excluded from the list he has made.

The CLERK. With the consent of the gentleman I will state that if it be the desire of the House to have my reasons, I will give them; but I have not felt justified or called upon to give any reasons; I have acted in accordance with my views of duty, and I am willing to let the record stand.

Mr. STEVENS. It is not necessary. We know all.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I call for the question.

The CLERK. The gentleman from New York is upon the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. I know that it is known to all in one quarter, but that it is not known to many in other quarters in this House, why this exclusion has been made. The State of Louisiana was here upon the floor of the House last year, by the admission of gentlemen from that State. The record is in the Congressional Globe; and now Louisiana is excluded. A Republican House, a Republican majority, permitted two members from Louisiana upon the floor of this House to vote for its Speaker; and now the Clerk of the House assumes the responsibility of excluding the State of Louisiana. Why this subversion of all precedents, as well as this overthrow of all law? Why did the Republican majority in the last Congress permit Louisiana to be represented and to vote for Speaker, and this year exclude Louisiana from the roll of the Clerk? Why this inconsistency of action, as well as this absurdity? We know all, says the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the House is to be content with the declaration of the gentleman, "We know all!"

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York will understand that the Clerk of the last House of Representatives put the names of those two gentlemen from Louisiana upon the roll, and they did, in fact, vote for Speaker; but afterward the House refused to permit them to be sworn in as members.

Mr. BROOKS. Not until after the organization of the House—not until after the Speaker was chosen.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. They were never members of the House.

Mr. BROOKS. But they voted for Speaker of the House, and were permitted here, as the record shows, to vote for Speaker, though the point was first made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and then withdrawn.

We know all the reasons, says the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and we do not want to hear them recited. Why, this is not parliamentary propriety, if it is even decency. I should know but little if I had not the record before me of the resolution adopted by the Republican majority of this House, that Tennessee, Louisiana, and Virginia were to be excluded, and excluded without debate. Why without debate? Are gentlemen afraid to face debate? Are their reasons of such a character that they dare not present them to the country, and have to resort to the extraordinary step of side-way legislation in a private caucus to enact a joint resolution to be forced upon this House without debate, confessing that there are no reasons whatever to support this position except their absolute power and authority and control over this House?

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a point of order. It has once been held by this House that until the House is organized no question is in order except to proceed to the election of a Speaker, or to adjourn. I call the gentleman to order.

The CLERK. The question pending is a motion to proceed to the election of Speaker, which is a debatable proposition, on which the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. And I am debating that question. I trust gentlemen will not be so impatient, even if there is debate. Let us hear. "Strike, but hear!"

Sir, that resolution shows why the Clerk of this House has taken the step that he has taken, and why all this action is to be carried on without any debate whatever. In the whole history of this country, throughout the revolutionary period of the last four years, there is no record whatever of violence like this upon the minority of this House or upon a large portion of our common country in the exclusion of fifty-odd members from the floor of this House, and without debate.

If the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has interrupted me, would but inform me at what period he intends to press this resolution of which he is to be the organ, I would be happy to be informed by him.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to answer the gentleman. I propose to press it at the proper time. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BROOKS. Talleyrand, the great diplomatist, said that language was given to man to conceal ideas; and we all know the gentleman's ingenuity in the use of language.

The proper time! When will that be? Why, as soon as the Speaker is in his seat, and the rules of order can be enforced. The proper time is in anticipation of the message of the President of the United States, to throw himself into collision with such forthcoming message. That is the proper time for an effort to silence the Executive of this country, and to nullify the exposition which he may make to this House, and the recommendations he may submit to the Congress of the United States. That is the proper time, and no other is the proper time. The resolution is introduced for that express period of time, and is to be pressed at that exact moment, to go before the country as the sentiment of the House, as a quasi condemnation of the action of the President of the United States. Sir, I am not his vindicator, supporter, or defender, except upon the record he presents a course of principles consistent with my own; and so far, I am. But I say that in the whole history of this country, in a crisis like this, no effort was ever made like this in a private caucus to pass a joint resolution condemnatory of the forthcoming message of the President of the United States.

I do not choose longer to occupy the attention of the House, but before I sit down I propose to move, as an amendment, that the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] be allowed to present the credentials of the members from Tennessee, and that their names be put upon the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I make the point of order that that amendment is not in order, not being germane to the original motion.

The CLERK. The Clerk considers that a good point of order, and rules out the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to listen to me for a moment.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot yield to any gentleman who does not belong to this body—who is an outsider.

Mr. BROOKS. I have not yielded the floor. The CLERK. The gentleman from New York is still upon the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. I appeal to the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BROOKS. I will yield to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to the floor being yielded.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask permission for but a moment.

The CLERK. There is objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] yielding the floor for any purpose except for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not know for what purpose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] desires me to yield the floor.

The CLERK. The gentleman from New York is bound to know for what purpose he yields the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the Clerk in position to know for what purpose—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] yielding the floor, unless he yields it unconditionally.

Mr. BROOKS. I think I have the right, under parliamentary rules, to yield the floor for explanation.

The CLERK. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] has not been involved in the debate, the presumption is that it is not for purposes of explanation he desires the floor; and, under the rules, it is not in order for a member to yield the floor for any other purpose, when objection is made.

Mr. BROOKS. I will ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] desires the floor for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON. Not for personal explanation precisely, but I do desire the floor for an explanation.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand the Clerk to rule that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] has not the right to an explanation.

The CLERK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] has the right to yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] for the purpose of personal explanation only, objection having been made to the yielding the floor for any other purpose.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman cannot have anything to explain. As he has not spoken there is nothing to explain, nothing to patch up.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not see the relevancy of that remark. I desire to know, Mr. Clerk, first, whether I can yield the floor temporarily to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] for the purpose of explanation; or second, whether I can yield the remaining portion of my time to him.

The CLERK. Under the rules of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] cannot yield the remaining portion of his time to any member if objection is made to his doing so; nor can he yield to any other member, except for purposes of personal explanation in relation to the pending proposition. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHNSON,] as I understand, has stated that he did not rise for the purpose of explanation. Hence by his own statement he is precluded from taking the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not desire the floor for the purpose of personal explanation, but I desire to ask an explanation of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks.]

The CLERK. The gentleman has no right to ask the floor for any such purpose if objection is made. Objection has been made, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks] has the floor upon the pending question.

Mr. BROOKS. I will yield the floor unconditionally for the purpose of order and decorum. After the decision of the Clerk, and without acquiescing in its parliamentary propriety or justice, I can only lament that a precedent like this should be established for future organizations of the House, when some other majority may have the control.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a question of order. I rise to propound a question to the Clerk.

The CLERK. Such a question is not a question of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Clerk will hear me through. It is in relation to making up the roll, which, being necessary to the proper organization of the House, is and must be in order.

The CLERK. The question the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] indicates has no relation to the pending proposition, which is the motion of the member from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to proceed to the election of Speaker, and upon that motion the previous question has been called.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise, then, to a further question. I propose to submit a motion which I maintain takes precedence of the motion of my colleague, [Mr. STEVENS.]

The CLERK. The gentleman will indicate his motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Clerk of the House be directed to place upon the roll the names of the gentlemen holding credentials from the Governor of Tennessee as members-elect of this House.

The CLERK. That motion is not in order, the previous question having been demanded.

The demand for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS to proceed to the election of Speaker; and it was agreed to.

The CLERK. Nominations are now in order for the office of Speaker.

Mr. MORRILL nominated Mr. SCHUYLER COLFAX, of Indiana.

Mr. WINFIELD nominated Mr. JAMES BROOKS, of New York.

The CLERK appointed to act as tellers, Messrs. MORRILL of Vermont, DAWSON of Pennsylvania, SMITH of Kentucky, and FINCK of Ohio.

The House proceeded to vote viva voce for Speaker, with the following result, which was announced by Mr. MORRILL on behalf of the tellers:

Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Tabor, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Winfield, and Wright.

The CLERK announced that SCHUYLER COLFAX, one of the Representatives from the State of Indiana, having received a majority of all the votes given, was duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Thirty-Ninth Congress. [Applause.]

Whereupon, at the suggestion of the Clerk, Mr. MORRILL and Mr. BROOKS conducted Mr. COLFAX to the chair, when he addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: The reassembling of Congress, marking, as it does, the procession of our national history, is always regarded with interest by the people for whom it is to legislate. But it is not unsafe to say that millions more than ever before, North, South, East, and West, are looking to the Congress which opens its session to-day, with an earnestness and solicitude unequalled on similar occasions in the past. The Thirty-Eighth Congress closed its constitutional existence with the storm-cloud of war still lowering over us; and, after a nine months' absence, Congress resumes its legislative authority in these council halls, rejoicing that from shore to shore in our land there is peace.

Its duties are as obvious as the sun's pathway in the heavens. Representing, in its two branches, the States and the people, its first and highest obligation is to guaranty to every State a republican form of government. The rebellion having overthrown constitutional State governments in many States, it is yours to mature and enact legislation which, with the concurrence of the Executive, shall establish them anew on such a basis of enduring justice as will guaranty all necessary safeguards to the people, and afford, what our Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence, proclaims is the chief object of government—protection to all men in their inalienable rights. [Applause.] The world should witness, in this great work, the most inflexible fidelity, the most earnest devotion, to the principles of liberty and humanity, the truest patriotism, and the wisest statesmanship.

Heroic men, by hundreds of thousands, have died that the Republic might live. The emblems of mourning have darkened White House and cabin alike. But the fires of civil war have melted every fetter in the land, and proved the funeral pyre of slavery. [Applause.] It is for you, Representatives, to do your work as faithfully and as well as did the fearless saviors of the Union on their more dangerous arena of duty. Then we may hope to see the vacant and once abandoned seats around us gradually filling up, until this Hall shall contain Representatives from every State and district; their hearts devoted to the Union for which they are to legislate, jealous of its honor, proud of its glory, watchful of its rights, and hostile to its enemies. And the stars on our banner, that paled when the States they represented arrayed themselves in arms against the nation, will shine with a more brilliant light of loyalty than ever before.

Invoking the guidance of Him who holds the destiny of nations in the hollow of His hand, I enter again upon the duties of this trying position, with a heart filled with gratitude to you for the unusually flattering manner in which it has been bestowed, and cheered by the hope that it betokens your cordial support and assistance in all its grave responsibilities.

I am now ready to take the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, having served longest as a member of the House, was designated by the Clerk to administer to the Speaker-elect the oath prescribed by law; which was done in the following form:

I, Schuyler Colfax, do solemnly swear that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter. So help me God.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to administer to the Members and Delegates present the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of saving time in the organization of the House, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the following-named persons are hereby declared to be officers of the House of Representatives for and during the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and until their successors are duly qualified: Edward McPherson, of the State of Pennsylvania, Clerk; N. G. Ordway, of the State of New Hampshire, Sergeant-at-Arms; Ira Goodenow, of the State of New York, Doorkeeper; and Josiah Given, of the State of Ohio, Postmaster.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing my resolution.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. One word.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I decline to yield.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Some of us desire to vote for candidates not named in that resolution, and therefore I hope that the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his resolution. If he does not, I will be compelled to offer an amendment, so that we may go upon the record in some way.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I do not yield for that purpose, but call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 138, nays 35, not voting 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—138.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Gloss-brenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Tabor, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—35.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Harris, Jones, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Francis Thomas, Voorhees, and Wright—9.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the call of the roll,

A message was received from the Senate by JOHN W. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that a quorum of that body was present, and ready to proceed to the public business.

HON. ITHAMAR C. SLOAN, not being present when the members from his State were sworn in, was, by unanimous consent, permitted during roll-call to take the usual oath.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster were qualified by taking the usual oath of office.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I send to the Clerk's table a resolution, which I ask may be adopted.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Eighth Congress shall be the rules of the House of Representatives until otherwise ordered.

Resolved further, That a committee of five, to consist of the Speaker and four members to be named by him, be appointed, to whom shall be referred the rules of the House, who shall be authorized to report at any time such amendments on the revision of the same that they may think proper.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HIGBY. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me a moment?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. HIGBY. To offer an amendment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read the amendment; which was to add to the resolution the following:

Resolved further, That a standing committee of nine members, to be called the Committee on Mines and Mining, be appointed, who shall consider and report on all questions relative to mines and mining that may be referred to them.

Mr. HIGBY. I will say that last session the Senate established a committee of precisely the character I have indicated.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If the gentleman had attended to the reading of the resolution, he would have seen that the same resolution which provides for the adoption of the rules also provides for a committee to report any further rules. I suggest to him that if this resolution shall pass, and that committee be appointed—as it will be—he can present this rule, which he proposes, to its consideration, and there will be no question about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire whether it is in order to discuss the motion which is pending.

The SPEAKER. It is; the previous question not having been moved.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I renew my demand for the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. HIGBY. I will not press the matter now.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate, informing that body that a quorum of the House has assembled, and elected SCHUYLER COLFAX, one of the Representatives from the State of Indiana, Speaker, and is now ready to proceed to business.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider do lie on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed, on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States, to inform him that a quorum of the two Houses of Congress has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may make.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. WASHBURNE of Illinois, Mr. BROOKS, and Mr. KELLEY, as such committee.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GRADE OF GENERAL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to give notice of the introduction of a bill to revive the grade of general in the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. That will have to be done in writing, under the rule.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am requested by the Secretary of State to ask the House to listen to a telegraphic dispatch which he has just received.

No objection being made, the dispatch was read, as follows:

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA, December 2, 1865.

Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD:

The amendment is adopted by an overwhelming vote. I will send you an authenticated copy at an early day. Please see that Alabama is announced as the twenty-seventh State. L. E. PARSONS.

The reading of the resolution was followed by applause in the Hall and galleries.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following resolution, and call the previous question upon it:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and report whether they or any of them are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise; and until such report shall have been made and finally acted upon by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the said so-called confederate States; and all papers relating to the representation of the said States shall be referred to the said committee without debate.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to offer an amendment, to insert the words "and all resolutions touching the question." [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Has unanimous consent been given for the introduction of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to its introduction.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to suspend the rules so as to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 35, not voting 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—129.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, LeBlond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Strouse, Tabor, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Winfield, and Wright—35.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Farquhar, Garfield, Harris, Henderson, Jones, Kerr, Marston, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Smith, Stillwell, Francis Thomas, and Voorhees—18.

So, (two thirds voting in favor thereof,) the resolution was received.

Mr. STEVENS. I now move the previous question.

Mr. DAWSON. I rise to inquire if it would not be in order to move to postpone the resolution until after the receipt of the President's message?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if the previous question were not sustained.

Mr. DAWSON. Then I move to lay the resolution on the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 133, not voting 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks,

Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, George V. Lawrence, LeBlond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Tabor, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Winfield, and Wright—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—133.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Garfield, Harris, Hart, Jones, Kerr, Raymond, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Francis Thomas, and Voorhees—12.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The question then recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. ANCONA called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 133, nays 36, not voting 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Blaine, Farquhar, Harris, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jones, Marshall, Plants, Rousseau, Sloan, Francis Thomas, Voorhees, and William B. Washburn—13.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] to withdraw that motion, in order to give me an opportunity to offer a resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I cannot do it.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayeas fifty-eight, noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That pending the question as to the admission of persons claiming to have been elected Representatives to the present Congress from the States lately in rebellion against the United States Government, such persons shall be entitled to the privileges of the floor of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, objected.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to suspend the rules, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Pending the question upon suspending the rules,

Mr. STEVENS moved that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 85, noes 68.

So (at ten minutes to three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1865.

Prayer by Rev. EDGAR H. GRAY, Chaplain of the Senate.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. EDWARD McPHERSON, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House has assembled, that it has elected SCHUYLER COLFAX, one of the Representatives from Indiana, Speaker, and is now ready to proceed to business.

I am also directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives has passed a resolution for the appointment of a committee on its part, to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make; and it has appointed Mr. ELIOT B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. JAMES BROOKS of New York, and Mr. WILLIAM D. KELLEY of Pennsylvania, the committee on its part.

I am also directed to present to the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House for the appointment of a joint committee of fifteen members for the purpose of considering the condition of the so-called confederate States of America.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate concur in the concurrent resolution just received from the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which will take precedence of the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware give way to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to state that my motion relates to the resolution which provides for the appointment of a committee of fifteen. I move to refer that resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, when that committee shall be appointed, and that until that time it lie upon the table.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask the Senators to withdraw their motions until I can offer an order to be adopted by the Senate in order to perfect the organization of the two bodies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his motion for that purpose?

Mr. WADE. I will withdraw it with that view.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. GRIMES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall this committee be appointed?

Several SENATORS. By the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. GRIMES and Mr. WRIGHT were appointed the committee.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution from the House of Representatives will now be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and report whether they or any of them are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise; and until such report shall have been made and finally acted upon by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the said so-called confederate States; and all papers relating to the representation of the said States shall be referred to the said committee without debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe that under the rule that that resolution, if there be any objection to considering it on the day of its reception, lies over one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such is the rule of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object to the consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will be laid aside.

SENATORS FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I beg leave to present the credentials of William L. Sharkey and James L. Alcorn, who have been elected members of the Senate by the Legislature of Mississippi. I am instructed by those gentlemen to offer these credentials to the Senate without saying further. I therefore ask that they may lie upon the table and await the further action of the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the credentials?

Mr. COWAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

The credentials were ordered to lie on the table.

RECONSTRUCTION OF REBELLIOUS STATES.

Mr. FOOT. I offer certain resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Vermont. I ask that they be read, laid on the table, and printed.

The Secretary read them, as follows:

Joint resolutions in relation to the reconstruction of the States recently in rebellion against the United States.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the General Assembly of this State, that in the reconstruction of the governments of the States lately in rebellion against the Government and authority of the United States, the moral power and legal authority vested in the Federal Government should be executed, to secure equal rights, without respect to color, to all citizens residing in those States, including herein the right of elective franchise.

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Governors of the several States, and also a copy to each one of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, who are hereby requested to present the same to both Houses in Congress.

A. B. GARDNER,

The joint resolutions were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce the following bills; which were read a first time by their titles, and ordered to lie on the table:

A bill (S. No. 15) to repeal certain laws and ordinances in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 16) for the relief of Josiah O. Armes.

Mr. SHERMAN, (at twenty-two minutes past twelve o'clock.) I move that the Senate take a recess until one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

On reassembling at one o'clock,

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As I understand, there has been some delay about the committee of the other House being ready to perform the duty of waiting on the President, I move that the recess be extended until two o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate again resumed its session at two o'clock.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, who were authorized to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses were organized and ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make to them, have discharged that duty, and have been instructed by him to say that he will immediately communicate with each House in writing.

Mr. ROBERT JOHNSON, the President's Secretary, presently appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The document having been handed to the Chair and opened, was announced to be the President's annual message.

The Secretary (Hon. JOHN W. FORNEY) read the message. [The message will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the annual message of the President of the United States, with the accompanying documents, be printed; and that five thousand additional copies of the message be printed for the use of the Senate.

FINANCE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the finances; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 5, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DELEGATE FROM IDAHO.

Mr. BEAMAN announced that Mr. E. D. HOLBROOK, Delegate-elect from the Territory of Idaho, was in attendance and ready to take the oath of office; whereupon Mr. HOLBROOK presented himself and was duly qualified.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

Mr. KASSON introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House forthwith place in a box the name of each Member and Delegate of the House of Representatives written on a separate slip of paper; that he then proceed, in the presence of the House, to draw from said box, one at a time, the said slips of paper, and as each is drawn he shall announce the name of the Member or Delegate upon it, who shall choose his seat for the present session: Provided, That before said drawing shall commence the Speaker shall cause every seat to be vacated, and shall see that every seat continues vacant until it is selected under this order; and that every seat, after having been selected, shall be deemed vacant if left unoccupied before the calling of the roll is finished.

In execution of the order of the House, the Members and Delegates retired outside the Hall, and, as their names were drawn, reappeared and selected their seats.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

Ordered, That Mr. GRIMES and Mr. WRIGHT be the committee on the part of the Senate.

QUALIFICATION OF A MEMBER.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS announced that his colleague, Mr. FRANCIS THOMAS, a Representative-elect from the State of Maryland, was in attendance, and ready to take the oath of office; whereupon Mr. FRANCIS THOMAS presented himself, and was duly qualified.

CONTESTED SEATS.

Mr. RAYMOND. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present the memorial of William E. Dodge, of New York, claiming the seat on this floor for the eighth congressional district of New York, now held by Hon. JAMES BROOKS. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

The SPEAKER. The memorial will be so referred. In this connection, the Chair lays before the House the petition of Augustus C. Baldwin, claiming the seat for the fifth district of Michigan, now occupied by Hon. R. E. TROWBRIDGE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move the reference of that petition to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the petition will be so referred.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

Mr. GRINNELL. I move that the House now proceed to the election of a Chaplain of the House for the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to present, for the position of Chaplain of this House, the name of Rev. C. B. Boynton, a gentleman whose qualifications and claims, were they known to this House, would, I am sure, meet with ready recognition. Mr. Boynton has recently removed to this city from Ohio. He is a Congregational clergyman, and a gentleman of splendid abilities. He is now engaged in writing a history of the American Navy during the war just closed. He is in all respects a man eminently worthy to occupy the position of Chaplain of this House. With pen and voice, in the pulpit and out of the pulpit, he has, during the war, rendered the country signal and unremitting service. He has given three sons to the Army, one of whom served with great distinction as colonel of an Ohio regiment. I desire to assure gentlemen of this House who may not be acquainted with Mr. Boynton that he will, if elected, make a most acceptable Chaplain. I take pleasure in presenting his name as a candidate.

Mr. O'NEILL. I nominate Rev. Thomas H. Stockton, of Philadelphia. It is needless for me to say anything in commendation of this gentleman. He was formerly the Chaplain of this House, and as such distinguished himself by his faithfulness, eloquence, and piety. He is well known throughout the country as one of its most eminent divines. He is one of the leading ministers of the Methodist Protestant church. I need not say that he is a thoroughly loyal gentleman. I hope that the House will elect him as its Chaplain.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to place in nomination Rev. Charles B. Parsons, of Lexington, Kentucky. Following the course of gentlemen who have preceded me, I will say that Mr. Parsons is a true, devoted, loyal man, a gentleman and a Christian, and the most eloquent divine to whom I ever listened. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church, in which he has rendered good service for the last twenty-five or thirty years, and during the last four years has signalized himself by his efforts on behalf of the Government of the United States.

I hope that the House will have the liberality to give us at least one man south of Mason and Dixon's line, because north of that line there cannot be found a better, a truer, an abler, or a more eloquent man than Mr. Parsons. I may here remark, that the most beautiful, most appropriate, most eloquent address delivered upon the death of President Lincoln was delivered by Mr. Parsons. If this House will but hear him preach, listen to his exhortations to do right, and follow them, the legislation of this body will redound to the interest and honor of the Republic.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to inquire whether any one of the gentlemen who have been nominated has the eminent qualification of not preaching politics in the pulpit on the Sabbath. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I propose that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] define what he calls "politics."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to nominate Rev. L. C. Matlock, of Illinois. He is a very worthy clergyman, a gentleman of most excellent character, and an eloquent speaker. He was at one time the president of a university in our State. After the breaking out of the rebellion he was chosen chaplain of a regiment, and served in that capacity for about one year, when, believing that he could serve the country, and serve, too, the soldiers with whom he was associated as well, if not better, in another capacity, he raised a company, which he took into another regiment, of which he was elected major, and commissioned as such by the Governor of Illinois. For the last two years he has been fighting the rebels, giving them hard blows in the field. He is both a praying and a fighting patriot. He has shown his loyalty where it cost a man something to be loyal—in the battle's front; and, as a soldier, he has in no instance been charged with sully the cloth of his ministerial profession. He has not thrown aside his dignity or his manhood, but comes out of the war, at its termination, pure as he went in. This loyal and eloquent minister of the Gospel and soldier of the Republic I nominate for the position of Chaplain of this House.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise, with the indulgence of the House, for the purpose of seconding the nomination of Rev. Thomas H. Stockton, so eloquently presented by my colleague, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. Stockton will be remembered by many of the members of the present House as the Chaplain of the Thirty-Seventh Congress; and all such will remember him as one whose life, in its simplicity and purity, illustrated the religion he preached. He is a man as remarkable for his learning and eloquence as for his piety. It has been my privilege to know him for many years; and I may point, as an illustration of his power, to the prayer delivered by him at the consecration of the field at Gettysburg.

I rose to recall him to the recollection of those who witnessed the manner in which he performed his duties here. This I have done, but before taking my seat I may be permitted to suggest to my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] that I was a little surprised to hear from him an appeal bounded by Mason and Dixon's line. Sir, that line no longer exists in the political phraseology of this country. It has been obliterated by patriotic blood; and I hope we will hear no further reference to it as an appeal by which to influence the administration of the patronage and honors of this Government. We are henceforth one people, undivided by a line marking a land of freedom on one side and a land of slavery on the other. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no manifestation of applause or disapprobation can be tolerated in the galleries; and he now instructs the doorkeepers, who have charge of the several doors, to eject any person they see expressing approval or dissent of what occurs upon the floor of this House. This is a deliberative body, and while all persons are welcome to the galleries, they must respect the proprieties of the place and the occasion.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I rise for the purpose of nominating Rev. James Presley, of the United Presbyterian church, for the office of Chaplain of the Thirty-Ninth Congress. Mr. Presley preached in this Hall last winter, and I have no doubt the old members heard him, for I know members of Congress generally attend church, and as generally attend at the Capitol. I have no doubt, then, that many of the gentlemen present well recollect the eloquent Dr. Presley who delivered an address in this Hall. For loyalty, patriotism, and eloquence he is not exceeded by any man in the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. I nominate Rev. James G. Butler, of the Lutheran church. I learn he has done more good than any other man. And I will say for the Rev. Mr. Stockton, in addition to what others have already said, that he is the most eloquent man in the United States since the fall of Henry Ward Beecher. [Laughter.]

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, let me add to the long list of nominations already before the House, by suggesting the name of Rev. J. H. C. Bonté, of Georgetown, District of Columbia, and in pursuance of the custom in reference to these nominations, I will say that Mr. Bonté entered the service as chaplain of the forty-second Ohio regiment, and faithfully discharged the duties of that position until his health failed. Since then he has been, in pursuance of his profession, in Iowa and at Georgetown, and I will say in one word, that if the House will come to know him as well as I do, they will find him a man of marked ability, of decided piety, and unwavering loyalty.

Mr. PRICE. I nominate as candidate for Chaplain of the House of Representatives, Rev. B. H. Nadal, of this city, and should have done so without saying a word, if the precedent had not been established of saying something as a reason why a nomination should be made and an election should take place.

On the platform, in the pulpit, with his pen, before the commencement of the war and during its continuance, he has not failed or faltered to be the foremost on the right side, and in the right cause.

A VOICE. A good man.

Mr. PRICE. My friend on the left says he is a good man. Yes, he is an honest man, which is the noblest work of God, and the kind of man we ought to have as Chaplain of this House.

Mr. COBB seconded the nomination of Dr. Nadal.

Mr. MILLER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to nominate Rev. John Walker Jackson, of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, for Chaplain of this House. Mr. Jackson is an earnest divine of the Methodist persuasion, a loyal man, and patriot. During the four years of the war he did good service, both in and out of the pulpit, in behalf of his country. He worked incessantly to encourage young men to enlist, in order to replenish our army and crush out the rebellion. He is just such a man as will reflect credit on the Thirty-Ninth Congress by his election as Chaplain of this House.

Mr. DRIGGS. I rise to nominate Rev. B. H. Nadal.

The SPEAKER. He has already been nominated.

Mr. DRIGGS. Very well; the mention of the name is sufficient.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have a nomination to make. If I were going to vote for a fighting man, I would nominate General Grant; but I do not intend to vote for a fighting man, and therefore I nominate Rev. John Chambers, of Philadelphia.

CONTESTED-ELECTION PAPERS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the petition and evidence in the contested-election case of S. H. Boyd vs. John R. Kelso, from the fourth congressional district of Missouri; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the papers in the contested-election case of William E. Dodge vs. James Brooks, from the eighth congressional district of New York; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN—AGAIN.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers on the election of Chaplain, Messrs. PRICE of Iowa, GRISWOLD of New York, DELANO of Ohio, and JOHNSON of Pennsylvania.

The tellers took their places at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to second a nomination?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the tellers have taken their places.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I was about to second the nomination of Rev. Mr. Chambers, and to say in his behalf that he is a Christian gentleman.

The House then proceeded to vote viva voce for Chaplain, with the following result, which was announced by Mr. GRISWOLD on behalf of the tellers.

INDIANA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. ORTH presented the memorial of W. D. Washburne, contesting the seat of Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, as a member of the House from the seventh district of Indiana, together with the evidence in the case; and moved that they be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. SCHENCK, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to apportion Representatives according to the number of voters in the several States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SCHENCK. It had been my purpose to propose that this resolution should be made the special order for some early day; but upon reflection, considering how serious a thing it is to offer an amendment to the Constitution, and how gravely it ought to be considered, how carefully every word should be weighed, I prefer to move, as I now do, that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to offer a resolution. Mr. STEVENS. Had we not better proceed to call the States in their order?

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order, and it will be reached by objecting to the resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I object; I desire that the States shall be called.

The SPEAKER then proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the States and Territories for resolutions, under which call bills and joint resolutions could be introduced for reference, commencing with the State of Maine.

GENERAL BANKRUPT LAWS.

Mr. JENCKES submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That a committee, to consist of nine members, be appointed by the Speaker, to continue during the Thirty-Ninth Congress, to take into consideration the subject of establishing uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States, and to whom shall be referred all memorials and other communications on said subject, with leave to report thereon by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and being put, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That the appointment of the sons of members of the House to any office under the Clerk, Doorkeeper, Sergeant-at-Arms or Postmaster thereof is improper, and the same is therefore prohibited.

On seconding the previous question no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. DAVIS and SPALDING were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 2.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered, and being put, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICE OF PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire whether the office of Provost Marshal General, and offices subordinate thereto, cannot now advantageously be dispensed with, and such business as remains at that bureau be turned over to some necessary and permanent bureau of the War Department.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and being put, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. RAYMOND submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That W. E. Dodge, claimant for the seat now held by Hon. JAMES BROOKS, from the eighth congressional district of New York, be entitled to the privilege of the floor pending the decision of his claims.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to move to amend the resolution so as to include the two contestants from the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ORTH. I hope the contestants from Indiana will be included also.

Mr. RAYMOND. I will accept the amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he so modify his resolution as to include all contestants for seats from the loyal States.

Mr. RAYMOND. I would inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania if all the cases to which he refers have already been brought before the House for its action?

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; there are several that are to come.

Mr. RAYMOND. I prefer then that a vote be taken on my resolution, as I offered it, and subsequently one can be offered to cover all the cases which the gentleman refers to.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to that.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and being put, the resolution was adopted.

NEW JERSEY COAST.

Mr. NEWELL submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire whether any further, and what, means are necessary for the better preservation of life and property from shipwreck along the coast of New Jersey between Sandy Hook and Great Egg Harbor, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, (as the sense of this House.) That the public debt created during the late rebellion was contracted upon the faith and honor of the nation; that it is sacred and inviolate, and must and ought to be paid, principal and interest; and that any attempt to repudiate, or in any manner to impair or scale the said debt, should be universally discontenanced by the people, and promptly rejected by Congress if proposed.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken upon agreeing to the resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 1, not voting 19; as follows:

Mr. STEVENS also introduced the following joint resolution; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when the same shall have been appointed:

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be proposed, and when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the States shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution of the United States:

Mr. STEVENS also introduced the following joint resolution; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when the same shall have been appointed:

Mr. STEVENS moved that the several joint resolutions just introduced by him be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIP EPSTEIN, HERMAN SOMERS, ETC.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House all the papers and testimony relating to the claim of Philip Epstein, Herman Somers, M. David, Julius Louis, and Henry Steen, recently investigated by Colonel Nicodemus, under direction of the War Department.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would like to know the particular object of having these papers copied and sent here.

Mr. JOHNSON. My object is to introduce a bill for the claim. It has been investigated by Colonel Nicodemus, by direction of the Secretary of War. But under the rules of the Department the parties are not permitted to examine that record. I desire to have these papers brought here for the purpose of enabling me to submit a bill to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not know the peculiar facts of the case, but I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] to modify his resolution so that it shall read, "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that, and will modify my resolution accordingly. The resolution as modified was then agreed to.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KELLEY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill extending the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the joint committee of both Houses appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that both Houses were organized and prepared to receive any communication he desired to make, reported that the committee had performed that duty, and that the President had stated that he would communicate by message to both Houses immediately.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Colonel ROBERT JOHNSON, his Private Secretary.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the annual message of the President of the United States, which was read. [The message will be published in the Appendix.]

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the annual message of the President be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the usual number of extra copies of the message and accompanying documents be printed. On that motion I demand the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. What is the usual number?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Twenty thousand.

Mr. SCHENCK. Make it fifty thousand.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The motion necessarily goes to the Committee on Printing, who can fix any number they please.

Mr. SCHENCK. We may as well indicate our preference for a larger number.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Very well; I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] and modify my motion so as to name fifty thousand as the number to be printed. I renew my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DECEASE OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, which is in accordance with the precedents in cases of similar melancholy character:

Resolved, That a committee of one member from each State represented in this House be appointed on the part of this House to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to consider and report by what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express the deep sensibility of the nation to the event of the decease of their late President, Abraham Lincoln, and that so much of the message of the President as refers to that melancholy event be referred to said committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

BASIS OF CONGRESSIONAL REPRESENTATION.

Mr. BROOMALL introduced a joint resolution to alter the Constitution of the United States, so as to base the representation in Congress upon the number of electors, instead of the population, of the several States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the certificates and all other papers relating to the election in the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania be referred to the Committee of Elections, (when appointed,) with instructions to report at as early a day as practicable which of the claimants to the vacant seat from that district has prima facie the right thereto, reserving to the other party the privilege of contesting the case on its merits without prejudice from lapse of time or want of notice.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to suspend the rule, by unanimous consent, which requires the election of the chairmen of the committees to be made by ballot, and that they be made by nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion objected to? No objection being made, that will be considered the sense of the Senate, and the rule will be suspended.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, the bill (S. No. 3) introduced by him, to carry out the principles of a republican form of government in the District of Columbia, was read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. A concurrent resolution has been received from the House of Representatives providing for an adjournment over to Monday. Perhaps we might as well take that up now and dispose of it. I move that that resolution be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That when the House adjourns on Wednesday, the 6th of December, instant, it stand adjourned until Monday the 11th instant.

Mr. FOOT. That only adjourns the House of Representatives. I move that it be amended so as to embrace both Houses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRIMES. I present the petition of Edward R. Hutchins, and a large number of other assistant and acting assistant surgeons of the United States Navy attached to the South Atlantic blockading squadron, asking for an increase of compensation. I desire to state that this petition, in consequence of some derangement of the mails, did not reach me until shortly after the adjournment of the last session of Congress; and this is the reason why it was not presented at an earlier date. I move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. DIXON presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut; which were read:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
General Assembly, May Session, A. D. 1865.

Grateful to Almighty God, who has brought the American people safely through the perils of civil war, and has opened before them a prospect of peace, prosperity, and power, the General Assembly of Connecticut, considering the present condition of public affairs, thinks fit to declare as follows:

1. The American people are a nation, and not a confederacy of nations.
2. The States have certain constitutional rights which ought to be preserved inviolate; but, as between the nation and the States, the nation is sovereign, and the States are not.
3. All men within the limits of the United States ought to be absolutely free; and no permanent discrimination in rights and privileges ought to exist between different classes of free men.

4. Treason against a republican government is the greatest of crimes, and ought to be treated as such. Nevertheless, a humane and generous policy ought to be exercised by the national Government toward the misguided masses of the southern people who were not primarily responsible for the late rebellion.

5. The public opinion of Europe in reference to the domestic affairs of this country must henceforth be of little value to the American people.

6. The Government of the United States, in settling upon its domestic policy, and especially in deciding what course it will pursue toward the leaders of the rebellion, ought not to be influenced by the wishes, the advice, the warnings, the entreaties, or the public opinion of foreign nations, but ought, on the contrary, to look with jealousy and suspicion upon all attempts from such quarters to affect its actions.

7. In its diplomacy, the Government of the United States ought, while courteous, to be frank. It ought not to make pretenses of friendship toward nations which have manifested hatred of this country during its late distresses. But peace, with friendship toward our friends, and peace, without friendship toward those who are not our friends, ought to be maintained at all times, if possible, as the true and permanent policy of the United States.

8. Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, by his great abilities, his undoubted patriotism, and his eminent public services, has entitled himself to the confidence of the nation; and since he is manifestly surrounded by many and great difficulties, and is compelled to adopt experimental policies without assurance of their success, he ought to be sustained in the exercise of great freedom of action; and in all his efforts to tranquilize the country, to maintain its peace and dignity, and to promote its welfare, he ought to receive a frank and generous support from the people.

His Excellency, the Governor, is hereby requested to cause a copy of these declarations to be transmitted to the President of the United States, and a like copy to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 19, 1865.

Passed, JOHN R. BUCK, Clerk.

SENATE, July 20, 1865.

Passed, W. T. ELMER, Clerk.
Approved, July 21, 1865.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, [L. S.] this 30th day of August, A. D. 1865.

J. H. TRUMBULL,
Secretary of State.

The resolutions were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 17) to regulate commerce among the several States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 18) for the relief of Ambrose Morrison, of Nashville, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

OFFICERS PAID ILLEGALLY.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury:

Whereas it is provided by act of Congress that every person in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of his office and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe a certain oath in prescribed form, and it is further provided in another act of Congress (February 9, 1863, chapter 25, section 2) that "no money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to any person acting as an officer, civil, military, or naval, as salary in any office, which office is not authorized by some previously existing law, unless where such office shall be subsequently sanctioned by law; and whereas it is reported that, notwithstanding these acts of Congress, certain persons have been allowed to enter upon the duties of office and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the prescribed oath, and certain other persons have been appointed to offices "not authorized by any previously existing law;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, so far as the records of his Department allow, to furnish to the Senate the names of any persons who have been permitted to enter upon the duties of office, and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the oath prescribed by Congress; also, the titles of such offices, with an account of the salary and emoluments thereof, and out of what fund the same have been paid; also, the names of any persons who have been appointed to any office "not authorized by some previously existing law," and if the same have received any salary, what it was, and out of what fund it has been paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SUMNER. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses to consider and report on a proper token of respect and affection to be adopted by Congress on the occasion of the death of the late President, Abraham Lincoln.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to the subject of the restoration or reconstruction of the States, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I hesitate to adopt that order at this moment. The Senator is quite aware that there is already on the table a resolution from the House of Representatives to which, perhaps, that part of the message would more properly be referred, should we concur with the House. I think, therefore, that the proposition of the Senator had better lie on the table for the present until the Senate acts on the House resolution; and if the Senate should concur with the House resolution, then it will be a question whether, upon the whole, that portion of the message should not go to the joint committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In relation to the joint resolution from the other House, I am of opinion that that also had better go to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration. There are some important questions involved in the resolutions—legal questions and constitutional questions—which may lead to a discussion at this early stage of the session, without its being adequately considered by any committee. In answer to what my friend from Massachusetts says, I think it would be wise, perhaps, to let that resolution go to that committee for consideration. They will be prepared, probably, with their report when the Senate returns after its adjournment. The Senator can hardly expect, I think, to take up the House resolution, if it leads to discussion, and dispose of it to-day, when we are about to adjourn till Monday, tomorrow being Thanksgiving day. It had better be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that the honorable member will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I objected to the consideration of the resolution of inquiry proposed by the honorable member from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] only because it did not provide that the Secretary should give the reasons for the course which he is supposed to have pursued. If the Senate have no objection, I have none to considering the resolution now, meaning to offer an amendment which will obviate the objection I had.

Mr. SUMNER. I have had an opportunity of conferring with the Senator from Maryland, and I am ready to accept his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That resolution is not now before the Senate; the question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, but this resolution may be now interposed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Very well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it had better lie over until we meet again.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if we ought not to have a report from the House of Representatives whether our amendment to their resolution about adjourning over is concurred in. ["Certainly."] We ought not to adjourn until we know whether the other House concurs in the amendment of the Senate to that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts press the motion to adjourn?

Mr. WILSON. I have no doubt the House of Representatives will concur in that amendment of ours, and I desire to get an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that if the motion to adjourn now prevails, it will be the duty of the Chair to pronounce the Senate adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the motion.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire to resign my place as a member of the Committee on Commerce, with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that he be excused as one of the members of the Committee on Commerce. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL. If agreeable to the Senate, I propose to resign my position upon the Committee on Public Lands. I move that I be excused from service upon that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the vacancy in the Committee on Commerce occasioned by the resignation of Mr. LANE, of Kansas, be filled by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the vacancy in the Committee on Public Lands occasioned by the resignation of Mr. CRESWELL be also filled by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

INDIAN MASSACRES.

Mr. POMEROY submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

Resolutions concerning Indian massacres upon the frontier.

Whereas ineffectual efforts have been made during the past season to treat with and conciliate the hostile Indians upon our western border and upon traveled routes to the mountains and the Pacific; and whereas recent demonstrations of hostility upon the lines of our communication between the States and mountain Territories, embracing both the valley of the Platte and the Smoky Hill, and producing interruption, if not suspension, of communication and commerce across the continent, resulting in the massacre and murder of many of our active, pioneering, and adventurous fellow-citizens; and also the mutilation and death of whole coach loads of unarmed travelers, embracing men, women, and children: Therefore,

Resolved, That the mild, conciliatory, and even magnanimous conduct of our Government toward these savages, not being understood or appreciated by them, but only construed to be weakness and cowardice, should now be followed by the most vigorous and decisive measures until these hostile tribes are effectually punished for their crimes, and whipped into a wholesome restraint and submission to the authority of the United States.

2. Resolved, That the greatly increasing demand for communication and peaceful travel and commerce to our western mountains and the Pacific, resulting from the discovery of gold and precious metals, as well as the surveying and constructing of a Pacific railroad, renders it peculiarly urgent and of national importance that these routes of communication be and remain entirely uninterrupted.

MEMORIAL OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call up the resolution from the House of Representatives relative to proceedings of fitting and appropriate respect to the memory of the late President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that resolution will be taken up and read.

The Secretary read the House resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of one member from each State represented in this House, be appointed on the part of this House, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to consider and report by what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express the deep sensibility of the nation to the event of the decease of their late President, Abraham Lincoln; and that so much of the message of the President as refers to that melancholy event be referred to said committee.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate concur in that resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I now move that a committee of six be appointed by the Chair, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, in relation to the proceedings of respect to the memory of the late President of the United States.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. The committee of the House is one from each State, I understand. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont whether six is a sufficient representation for the Senate as compared with the House. I should like to have that committee on the part of the Senate larger.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have referred to the only precedent in our history of the decease of a President of the United States during the recess of Congress, and the proceedings which have taken place in the House of Representatives now are in precise accordance with what then took place in the House on the motion of John Quincy Adams, the oldest member of the House. A committee was appointed from that body to join such committee as should be appointed on the part of the Senate, and the Senate thereupon concurred in the resolution and appointed a committee of six to unite with the committee of the House. Of course that is not binding now, but the motion of the Senator from Vermont is in accordance with what was done in the only melancholy event of that kind which has transpired in our history before. There is no objection to a larger committee that I am aware of. I merely state that this is what was done on a former occasion.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I should like to see the committee large enough to allow all sections of the country to be represented, and I will move that the committee on the part of the Senate consist of thirteen instead of six. I hope, under the circumstances connected with the death of this President, that the Senate will concur in this amendment and permit every portion of the country to be represented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Kansas moves that the number of the committee be increased, and that instead of six the committee consist of thirteen members on the part of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 16.

The motion, as amended, was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced the concurrence of the House in the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution relative to an adjournment from the 6th instant to Monday, the 11th instant.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Rev. C. B. BOXTON, Chaplain-closet of the House, opened with prayer, as follows:

Almighty God! God of our fathers and of us, we give Thee thanks that the Congress of the United States is permitted to gather here and once more represent and legislate for a united country: not only united, but purified and strengthened by her trials and her sorrows, and to remain, as we trust, through Thy grace henceforth one and inseparable forever. We thank Thee that not one star is missing from the flag that floats over us; and that that banner, more loved and honored everywhere than before, is recognized over the whole land as the symbol of proper authority, and is the sufficient guardian now of every foot of our territory.

We thank Thee that the deadly strife is over; that time is already softening away many of the asperities of the war, healing the wounds in many hearts, and lifting somewhat the shadow from the households where the pall of death has been.

We thank Thee, O God, that the Congress of the United States represents now virtually one great, free Union; that by organic law virtually now freedom is universal throughout the whole land; that there is no longer a chain, nor a slave, nor a master, legally, in the whole country; and we pray Thee, O God, to give unto this Congress the wisdom and the courage of our fathers to carry out all such measures as are needed to make this gift of freedom not one of empty formality, but carrying with it all the rights and privileges of manhood.

We thank Thee, O God, that free institutions have been put on trial before the world; and now that the issue has been so triumphant a vindication of them, we bless Thee, O God, that the trial was so severe that none can doubt hereafter the power or the stability of the Republic.

And now we invoke Thy blessing upon these legislators. Fill them, we pray Thee, with wisdom from on high, and grant to them individually every blessing that they need. Grant unto the President of the United States especially grace, wisdom, and strength, rightly to discharge the heavy responsibilities which are laid upon him; and bless also all those who are associated with him in the executive departments of the Government.

Remember, O Lord, our wounded and crippled soldiers everywhere, and let not the country forget their sufferings or their merits. Remember all who mourn, and give them consolation. And may this whole land be so pervaded by the spirit of the Gospel that our institutions shall be based now upon those holy principles of truth and of righteousness proclaimed by our Lord and Saviour, and this be a Republic filling with its power and its influence a continent, and sending over the world the blessed power, the recovering power, of a free and Christian nation.

And unto Thee, O God of our fathers, we will give all the praise and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The Chaplain-closet, Rev. C. B. BOXTON, then took the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. ELIOT asked unanimous consent to submit a resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, objected.

CURRENCY REPORT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, which was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, when appointed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the papers in the contest for the seat of Hon. C. DELANO, a Representative from the thirtieth congressional district of Ohio, by Charles Follett; which were ordered to be referred to the Committee of Elections, when appointed.

THE WIDOW OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. STEVENS asked unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States.

The bill, which was read for information, directs that the Secretary of the Treasury pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, or, in the event of her death before payment, then to the legal representatives of the said Abraham Lincoln, the sum of $25,000; provided, that any sum of money which shall have been paid to the personal representatives of the said Abraham Lincoln since his death, on account of his salary as President of the United States, shall be deducted from the said sum of $25,000.

Mr. STEVENS. If there is no objection to its introduction, I will ask that the bill be put upon its passage. If there is objection, I will wait for another occasion.

No objection being made, the bill was introduced and read a first and second time by its title.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hardly know in what way I shall address the House, being somewhat embarrassed by the manner in which the bill is introduced. Mrs. Lincoln is a constituent of mine, and I have been in consultation with the Illinois delegation, and with the administrator of the estate, in reference to the subject-matter the gentleman from Pennsylvania has presented in his bill; and I hold in my hand—

Mr. STEVENS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it was thought to be in accordance with established usage that the old chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means should introduce the bill. I beg leave to withdraw the bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I see no necessity for that.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the gentleman will allow me to conclude my remarks.

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows me too well to suppose I have any feeling of delicacy as to where this bill originates. It was only in reference to Mrs. Lincoln's present position and her necessities, that I deemed it my duty to consult the administrator of the estate before I made any motion upon the subject. I consulted the Illinois delegation yesterday, and nothing would have pleased me and the administrator better than to have made my venerable friend the organ of introducing this bill to the House. But the bill of the gentleman is not in the shape in which, I am sure, the members of this House, if they knew all the circumstances, would wish to have it pass.

Now, if my friend from Pennsylvania will be so kind as to substitute for his bill the one I hold in my hand, I will be much obliged to him.

Mr. STEVENS. I am very sorry I introduced the bill, and I hope my friend will move to refer it to a select committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask that the substitute may be read.

The substitute, which was read for information, appropriates, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of ——— dollars for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, the widow of the late President of the United States, in full for his salary, and in consideration of the circumstances under which he came to his death.

Mr. STEVENS. Now, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will move that both bills be referred to a select committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will withdraw his bill and accept my substitute, and let it go to a select committee of one from each State. That was the motion I was going to make. I want the gentleman to father my bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I will withdraw my bill, with the consent of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If the gentleman withdraws his bill, will it be in order to offer mine before the State of Illinois is called for resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It will be by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENS withdrew his bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask unanimous consent now to introduce my bill, that it may be read a first and second time, and referred to a select committee of one from each State.

Mr. SPALDING. As there seems to be no harmony among the gentlemen over the way, I object.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. THAYER, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to amend the act declaring the officer who shall act as President of the United States in case of vacancies in the offices both of President and Vice President, approved March 1, 1792; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. STEVENS introduced a joint resolution permitting wounded soldiers to accept office or employment under the Government and receive their pensions at the same time; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask that the joint resolution be put upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the acceptance of office or employment under the Government by wounded soldiers shall not deprive them of their pensions, any law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask whether that resolution covers the cases of persons in the military service. There is the Veteran Reserve corps, and if a man is holding a commission, or is in the military service, I do not think he ought to receive a pension at the same time. The language of the resolution seems to me too general. It says that any wounded soldier in the service of the Government shall not be prevented by that service from drawing a pension. It seems to me that the language ought to be corrected, and I suggest that the resolution had better be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. STEVENS. I will move to amend the resolution so as to except those in the military service of the United States.

Mr. KELLEY. It seems to me that the resolution should embrace another class, if I remember its phraseology aright. There are many widows of soldiers, and some mothers, who have pensions, who live by their needles, and have found work in the arsenals, making clothing for our soldiers; and I learn that their pensions have been stopped by reason of such employment. I would like the resolution to be made broad enough to cover all such persons.

Mr. STEVENS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. KELLEY. I am quite sure my colleague will amend it in that respect.

Mr. STEVENS. I am quite willing that the resolution shall be so amended. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I offer the following resolution, which is a copy of a resolution adopted at the commencement of the last Congress:

Resolved, That all public documents of which extra copies have been ordered to be printed for distribution, and which have not been delivered to the persons entitled thereto under the resolution of the last House of Representatives, shall now be delivered, by the officer having possession of the same, to the Representatives in this House of those districts whose former Representatives have not drawn the documents to which such districts were respectively entitled according to the rate of distribution established.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to say to the House that I think that resolution would operate unjustly in certain particular cases. I know some members of the last Congress who have endeavored, by all the means in their power, to get their books for distribution, and have been unable to do so. The printing being done by the Printing Bureau, it has been delayed, and necessarily delayed, by the vast amount of printing required to be done by the Departments; and gentlemen, although they have done everything in their power to get the books they were entitled to to distribute in their districts, have been unable to do so; and now, when they are about to be delivered to them, I think it is unfair to have them taken out of their hands and put into the hands of others.

I know that there are gentlemen of this class in town now who are anxious to have their books. I have done everything in my power to get my own. Of course this resolution would not affect me, but I have not got more than half my books. I know that some members have not got more than one hundred copies of the Agricultural Report, when they are entitled to seven hundred copies. This resolution would do injustice to those parties. If they had neglected to ask for them it would be different, and they ought to forfeit them, but when they have repeatedly asked for them, but have not been furnished with them, they ought not to be compelled to forfeit them.

The SPEAKER. The resolution giving rise to debate, it goes over under the rule.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I was not in my seat when the State of Vermont was called, and I now ask leave to present a resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I shall have to withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] or else to make the same objection now.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Well, I withdraw the objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed by the Speaker, to which so much of the President's message as relates to freedmen shall be referred, and all reports and papers concerning freedmen shall be referred to them, with liberty to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS OF VERMONT.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions from the State of Vermont, in relation to the reconstruction of the States recently in rebellion against the United States; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives, providing for an adjournment, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I hope the resolution will be taken up by unanimous consent, and the amendment be concurred in. It simply gives the Senate the same privilege that we ask for ourselves.

There being no objection, the resolution was taken up, and the amendment of the Senate was concurred in as follows:

Before the word "House," insert "Senate and;" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That when the Senate and House adjourn on Wednesday, the 6th of December instant, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 11th instant.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAR EXPENDITURES OF STATES.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of one from each State be appointed to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, if any and what action should be taken to repay to the several States the amounts of money advanced and paid by them for expenditures connected with the late war.

Mr. BROOKS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that subject ought to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not wish to press any objection, however, if he has maturely considered the subject; but it is intimately connected with the Ways and Means, and a resolution of this character, it seems to me, ought to have that direction.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the constitution of the Committee of Ways and Means, as it existed last session, has been changed, and it seems to me that this subject would more appropriately go to a special committee.

Mr. BROOKS. As the gentleman appears to have considered the subject, I will not press my objection.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It strikes me that a committee of one from each State would be the most suitable one for such a subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that resolution will not pass. It seems to me that we have appropriate committees to which all such subjects should be referred.

The SPEAKER. As the resolution gives rise to debate it will go over under the rule.

EXPORT DUTIES.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a joint resolution providing for an amendment of the Constitution of the United States by repealing the clause forbidding the laying of taxes or duties on articles exported from any State; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

REBEL DEBT.

Mr. BINGHAM also introduced a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the payment or assumption by the United States or by any State of any debt which has been or may hereafter be contracted in aid of any rebellion against the United States; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed, and to be printed.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW.

Mr. BINGHAM also introduced a joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to empower Congress to pass all necessary and proper laws to secure to all persons in every State of the Union equal protection in their rights, life, liberty, and property; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed, and to be printed.

USE OF THE HALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARFIELD submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the use of the Hall of the House of Representatives be granted to the American Freedmen's Aid Commission for a public meeting on Wednesday evening, December 13, 1865.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 41.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. BRANDEGEE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 99, nays 58, not voting 25; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

QUALIFICATION OF A MEMBER.

Mr. ORTH. I desire to state that Hon. Lovell H. Rousseau, Representative-elect from the fifth district of the State of Kentucky, is now present and ready to take the oath of office.

Mr. ROUSSEAU then presented himself and was duly qualified.

NAVAL STATION ON LAKE ERIE.

Mr. SPALDING submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, when appointed, be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a naval depot at some suitable point on the southern shore of Lake Erie.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICO.

Mr. GARFIELD submitted the following resolution of inquiry, and asked unanimous consent for its consideration at the present time:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to this House any information in possession of any of the Executive Departments of the Government in reference to a so-called decree by the French agent in Mexico, under date of September 5, A. D. 1865, establishing slavery or peonage in that republic; and also what action, if any, has been taken by the Government of the United States in reference thereto.

Mr. DEMING rising to debate the resolution, it goes over under the rule.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. ORTH submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question upon its passage:

Resolved, That Henry D. Washburn, of Indiana, contesting the seat of Hon. DANIEL W. VOORHEES, be admitted to the privileges of the floor pending such contest.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. NIBLACK submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question upon its passage:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, when appointed, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the payment of bounties, in proportion to the time served, to those who volunteered in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and were honorably discharged before the expiration of two years without bounty. Also, to inquire into the expediency of equalizing bounties, so far as practicable, as between those who volunteered as aforesaid, and report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

PILOTS IN THE NAVY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KERR submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its passage:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, when appointed, be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of providing by law that all pilots engaged in the gunboat or other naval service of the Government during the late war, shall be deemed to have been officers within the terms of the rules and regulations of the service on that subject, and entitled to the same extra pay and rations as other officers in the same service whose monthly compensation was the same; and that the said committee report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

GENERAL IN UNITED STATES ARMY.

DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MOULTON introduced the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That all books and public documents of which extra copies have been ordered to be printed for distribution, and which have not been delivered to the persons entitled thereto, under the resolution of the last House of Representatives, shall now be delivered, by the officer having possession of the same, to the Representatives in this House of those districts whose former Representatives have not drawn the documents to which such districts were respectively entitled according to the rate of distribution established.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. JOHNSON was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I think there ought to be several exceptions to this resolution—

The SPEAKER. The subject is not debatable, the previous question having been seconded. The question now is on ordering the main question.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the matter will be allowed to go over.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the resolution of the House relative to the appointment of a joint committee to consider and report on the subject of a suitable token of respect and affection to the memory of the late President Lincoln.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. FARNSWORTH introduced a joint resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW.

Mr. FARNSWORTH introduced the following resolutions, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That, as all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, that cannot be regarded as a just Government which denies to a large portion of its citizens, who share both its pecuniary and military burdens, the right to express either their consent or dissent to the laws which subject them to taxation and to military duty, and which refuses them full protection in the enjoyment of their inalienable rights.

Resolved, That in imposing taxes upon the people of the United States, none are excepted therefrom on account of color; so, too, in the laws enacted by Congress for enrolling and drafting into the military service of the Government those liable to military duty, no exemption because of color has been allowed; and while we have rewarded the foreigner, who is ignorant of our language and institutions, and who has but just landed upon our shores, with the right of citizenship for a brief service in the armies of the United States, good faith, as well as impartial justice, demands of this Government that it secure to the colored soldiers of the Union their equal rights and privileges as citizens of the United States.

Resolved, That we agree with the President of the United States that "mercy without justice is a crime;" and the admitting of rebels and traitors, upon whose hands the blood of slain patriots has scarcely dried, and upon whose hearts is the damning crime of starving to death loyal men taken as prisoners in battle, to the rights of citizenship and of suffrage, while we deny those rights to the loyal black man, who fought for the Union, and who fed and protected our starving soldiers, is a fit illustration of that truism.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe that those resolutions are divisible, and I ask that they be divided.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon sustaining the previous question. Should it be sustained, the resolutions can afterward be divided, and each one voted upon separately, if any gentleman desires it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Are the resolutions in order now, if debate is to be had upon them?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question should not be sustained, and debate should arise, the resolutions will go over under the rules.

On seconding the demand for the previous question there were, on a division—ayes 41, noes 51.

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded tellers. Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. FARNSWORTH and DAWSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 68.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Messrs. CONKLING and BRANDEGEE proposed to debate the resolution, and it accordingly went over under the rules.

MILITARY ACADEMY IN THE WEST.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, when appointed, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national military school in some of the States of the great Northwest.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

HONOR TO THE LATE PRESIDENT.

Mr. INGERSOLL submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the committee to be appointed under the resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee of one from each State to take into consideration what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express concerning the event of the decease of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, be directed to take into consideration the expediency of providing for the completion of the Washington monument, with a view to the dedication of said monument to the commemoration of the virtues and patriotism of those great and good men, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

The House divided on seconding the demand for the previous question, and there were—ayes 26, noes 35; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. FARNSWORTH and INGERSOLL.

Mr. INGERSOLL withdrew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH proposed to debate the resolution, and it accordingly went over under the rules.

MRS. MARY LINCOLN.

Mr. INGERSOLL introduced a bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to refer that bill to a select committee of one from each State; and I will say that if the members knew the motives I have for doing so, I am sure they would not object. I can say no more.

Mr. HOGAN. There is already a committee of one from each State, to which matters pertaining to the late President have been referred, and I move that this be referred to the same committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do hope that my old friend, a former citizen of Illinois, will not press his motion. I ask him to withdraw it; and I know he would if he knew my motives in asking the reference that I do.

Mr. HOGAN. I concur fully in the object of the bill, and desire to see its accomplishment. I wish to see something done, and speedily, in reference to that matter. But I do not desire to see such large committees multiplied unnecessarily; and if this be referred to the other committee, it having authority over the matter, it could report on it at once. However, I do not insist upon it if the gentleman desires me to withdraw it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. HOGAN. I do.

Mr. WENTWORTH's motion was then agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and then, (at twenty minutes past one o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned until Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 11, 1865.

Prayer by Rev. EDGAR H. GRAY, Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of Wednesday last was read and approved.

Hon. GARRETT DAVIS, of Kentucky, appeared in his seat to-day.

MEMORIAL OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee on the resolution of the two Houses to adopt some token of respect for the memory of the late President of the United States, will consist, on the part of the Senate, of Mr. FOOT, Mr. YATES, Mr. WADE, Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. WILSON, Mr. DOOLITTLE, Mr. LANE of Kansas, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. NESMITH, Mr. LANE of Indiana, Mr. WILLEY, Mr. BUCKALEW, and Mr. HENDERSON.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial from the Union State Central Committee of Pennsylvania, praying that the Constitution of the United States may be amended so as to forever prohibit Congress or any convention or other authority from assuming, paying, or agreeing to pay, or taxing the people to pay, any part of the debt or liability incurred in opposition to the General Government; so that Congress shall never repudiate any part of the debt contracted by the General Government; so that Congress shall have power to levy and collect duties on exports; so that representation in Congress shall be allowed to the lawfully-qualified voters in each of said States; and so that no State of the Union shall ever be permitted to withdraw therefrom without the consent of all the rest; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial from the Sisters of Mercy of the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, praying for an appropriation of $20,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the Mercy Hospital in the city of Chicago; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a resolution of the convention of the State of North Carolina in favor of a repeal of the act of July 2, 1862, requiring the test oath therein mentioned as a qualification for a seat in Congress or to hold office under the Government of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented a petition of citizens of New England, praying for the repeal of the law taxing State banks ten per cent. on their issues; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Charles E. José, praying that he may be allowed to withdraw certain goods in bond for consumption; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the memorial of the Freedmen's Aid Association of the United States, united as they now are in what is called the American Freedmen's Aid Commission, in which, after setting forth the merits and the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau, they ask Congress that it would be pleased to continue and sustain it in such a way that it may exert a powerful and beneficent influence over the affairs of those wards of the nation until such time as the desired end may be attained by State enactment. As the whole subject of the freedmen is now in the hands of the War Department, I presume that this memorial should go to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia. I therefore ask its reference to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of marine insurance companies of New York city, praying Congress to make an appropriation to restore the lights at Cape Florida, Fort Jupiter, and Cape Carnaveral, on the coast of Florida, which were destroyed during the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of John Francis Cooke and twenty-five hundred others, colored citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that Congress may confer upon them the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRIMES presented a petition of J. W. Brooks, president of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company; W. W. Walker, vice president of the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad Company; John A. Dix, president of the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company; and Platt Smith, vice president of the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company, praying for a modification of the law of Congress which requires the completion of these roads within a specific time in order to secure the lands granted; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a petition of officers of the United States steamers Key West, Tawab, and Elfin, destroyed by fire in the action at Johnsville, Tennessee, November 4, 1864, and of the officers of the steamer Undine, captured off Paris Landing, Tennessee river, praying for remuneration for losses of personal property sustained by them in the destruction of those vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NYE presented the memorial of J. B. Rittenhouse, late paymaster of the Pacific squadron stationed at Panama, with the proceedings of a court of inquiry or investigation, praying for relief from responsibility for money of which he was robbed; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RAMSEY presented the petition of Dyer J. Pettijohn, late a second lieutenant in the first regiment Minnesota volunteers, praying that an act may be passed authorizing him to receive the pay and emoluments of that office; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a petition from soldiers of Montgomery county, Indiana, who, under the act of July 22, 1861, received a bounty of $100, praying that they may be placed on the same footing with those who volunteered at a later period of the war, and may receive an additional bounty of $200; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present the petition of Charles M. Carter and a large number of citizens of the State of Oregon, representing that numerous disasters have occurred at sea along the Pacific coast in consequence of the criminal negligence and disregard of law by the owners and managers of steamships, suggesting various amendments to the existing laws, and praying for additional legislation to protect passengers on such steamships. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was Ordered, That so much of the President's message as relates to the subject of finances and the currency, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore submitted a communication from the Governor of the State of Virginia, transmitting an act of the General Assembly of that State entitled "An act to repeal the second section of an act passed on the 18th day of May, 1862, entitled 'An act giving the consent of the Legislature of Virginia to the formation and erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State;' also repealing the act of January 31, 1863, entitled 'An act giving the consent of the State of Virginia to the county of Berkeley being admitted into and becoming part of the State of West Virginia;' also repealing the act of February 4, 1863, entitled 'An act giving consent to the admission of certain counties into the new State of West Virginia, upon certain conditions,' and withdrawing consent to the transfer of jurisdiction over the several counties in each of said acts mentioned;" which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to grant to James A. Scrymser, Alfred Pell, jr., and others, composing the International Ocean Telegraphic Company, the right to establish telegraphic communication between the city of New York and the West India islands; and also a bill to amend the several acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York.

Mr. NYE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to change the eastern and southern boundary of the State of Nevada so as to include additional territory to be taken from Utah and Arizona; and also a bill to facilitate the speedy completion of the Pacific railroad.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 19) to warrant and confirm the land titles of grantees under the field orders of Major General Sherman, at Savannah, January 16, 1865.

The bill was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that an order to print it be made.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This question of conferring or confirming land titles, it seems to me, is very much a legal question, and ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, and not to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, while I am upon the Committee on Military Affairs; but I am satisfied that this is a question which should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. Let me remind my friend that this bill concerns, in the first place, the freedmen in South Carolina. On that account it ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs. In the second place, it concerns a military order made by Major General Sherman, in January last, at Savannah, under the spur of a military necessity, for the national good. It is a military question, and, as I humbly submit, the good faith of this country is now pledged to all these grantees under that military order. I think, therefore, sir, that the Military Committee of this body, that has in charge, first, the freedmen, and, secondly, military questions, ought to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The bill now presented, if I correctly understand it from its title, is a bill which provides for conferring legal title by act of Congress. Now, the question of legal title to land, as it seems to me, is always of necessity a very grave legal or constitutional question, and the Committee on the Judiciary is organized with a view to the consideration of such questions, but the Military Committee is not. If it was a bill in reference to the government of the freedmen upon these lands, if it was in reference to the organization of the freedmen in companies, or putting them under officers, it would be a very different thing; it would be a military affair altogether. Having made this suggestion, I move to amend the motion of reference by substituting the Committee of the Judiciary for the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast by the southern route; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 21) to establish a Mining Bureau; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 22) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 23) giving the consent of Congress to the annexation of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, formerly of the State of Virginia, to the State of West Virginia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 24) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 4, 1864;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 25) to provide for the adjustment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, of the United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 3) in relation to the present condition of Mexico, and the policy of the Government of the United States in reference thereto; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 4) to prevent the sale of notes, bonds, scrip, and other evidences of debt issued by the so-called confederate States, or any one of them, in aid of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EMPEROR OF MEXICO.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interest, any correspondence or other information in possession of the Government, in regard to a barbarous decree, issued by the so-called Emperor of Mexico, under date of October 3, 1865, ordering all Mexicans, who bravely defend the sacred cause of their independence, either in the battle-field or otherwise, to be shot without any form of trial, and what representations, if any, have been made by the Government on that subject.

CONDITION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. COWAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate information of the state of that portion of the Union lately in rebellion; whether the rebellion has been suppressed and the United States put again in possession of the States in which it existed; whether the United States courts are restored, post offices reestablished, and the revenues collected; and also whether the people of those States have reorganized their State governments, and whether they are yielding obedience to the laws and Government of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that had better lie over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is its consideration objected to?

Mr. SUMNER. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It lies over under the rule.

FURNISHING OF PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

Mr. RIDDLE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be requested to report a bill at the earliest possible moment, making an appropriation of ——— dollars for the proper and decent fitting up and furnishing of the President's House.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would suggest to my friend that that is a matter which will properly come in an appropriation bill from the House of Representatives. We are not in the habit of originating appropriation bills in the Senate. We have the power, I think, but the other House has always objected to it. In a short time, no doubt, the subject will properly be before us.

Mr. RIDDLE. I anticipated the objection, and I am well aware that the distinguished Senator from Maine is right in the suggestion he makes, but if he will tell me how I can introduce this subject to the notice of the other House at an early day, I shall be obliged to him. I visited the White House, or Executive Mansion, as it is called, last week, and it is a disgrace to the country. My only object is to have the matter brought to the notice of the House of Representatives in order that they may make an appropriation for this purpose at an early day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think, then, this may be considered as notice, without our passing the resolution.

Mr. RIDDLE. I want to bring it to the notice of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the first section of "An act supplementary to the several acts in relation to pensions," approved March 3, 1865, and report by bill or otherwise.

FRENCH OCCUPATION OF MEXICO.

Mr. HOWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interests, all correspondence, not yet officially published, between our Government and that of France touching the occupation by French troops of the republic of Mexico, and the establishment of a monarchy there.

OFFICERS PAID ILLEGALLY.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to take up for consideration the resolution which I offered on Wednesday last; and which was objected to by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who wished to make a slight amendment to it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If that resolution will not give rise to debate I have no objection to its coming up now; but when the Senate adjourned on Wednesday last, it adjourned while a motion was pending, made by myself, to refer a portion of the President's message to the Committee on the Judiciary. I had the floor at that time and gave way to a motion to adjourn. I prefer to go on with the regular order of business, but if this resolution is not to lead to debate, I shall not object to its now being taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not think it will lead to debate. I do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have no objection to its being taken up.

Mr. SUMNER's motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by him on the 6th instant:

Whereas it is provided by act of Congress that every person, in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe a certain oath in prescribed form, and it is further provided in another act of Congress (February 9, 1863, chapter twenty-five, section two) that "no money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to any person acting as an officer, civil, military, or naval, as salary in any office, which office is not authorized by some previously existing law, unless where such office shall be subsequently sanctioned by law; and whereas it is reported that, notwithstanding these acts of Congress, certain persons have been allowed to enter upon the duties of office and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the prescribed oath, and certain other persons have been appointed to offices "not authorized by any previously existing law;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, so far as the records of his Department allow, to furnish to the Senate the names of any persons who have been permitted to enter upon the duties of office, and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the oath prescribed by Congress; also, the titles of such offices, with an account of the salary and emoluments thereof, and out of what fund the same have been paid; also, the names of any persons who have been appointed to any office "not authorized by some previously existing law," and if the same have received any salary, what it was, and out of what fund it has been paid.

Mr. JOHNSON. The objection that I thought the resolution, when offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, obnoxious to, was that it rather assumed the fact that the acts mentioned in it had been done by the Secretary under the authority of the President, and did not request the Secretary to give his reasons for such things, if they had occurred. I proposed, therefore, after hearing it on Wednesday, merely to amend it so as to get rid of those particular objections; but upon reading the resolution carefully afterward, it appeared to me that it would be better to strike out the whole preamble. It seems to me rather in the nature of an indictment against the Secretary and against the President. I offer, therefore, as a substitute for the resolution, the paper that I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The following amendment of the resolution is moved by the Senator from Maryland: to strike out the preamble and all of the resolution after the word "resolved" and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate whether there are any persons in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, except the President of the United States, who are discharging the respective duties of such offices, and who are receiving the pay and emoluments thereof, without having complied with the provisions of acts of Congress, (February 9, 1863, chapter twenty-five, section two;) and if there be, that he state his reasons for the same.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have that amendment read again.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. JOHNSON, (to Mr. SUMNER.) You have no objection to that.

Mr. SUMNER. But it does not meet one part of the case, does it?

Mr. JOHNSON. I intended it to meet it all; I do not know whether it does or not.

Mr. SUMNER. For instance, it does not meet the statute introduced by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] providing that no person shall receive any salary for an office which has not been established by law.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I will add. I thought it did.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will follow the words in my resolution, I have no objection; I merely wish to get the facts.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let the resolution be laid on the table for a moment until I can perfect my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside by common consent.

PRINTING OF FINANCE REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. While the Senator from Maryland is preparing his amendment, I move that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, which lies upon the table, be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move that five thousand extra copies of that report be printed for the use of the Senate, which motion will go to the Committee on Printing under the rules.

It was so referred.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I now call up the motion which was pending at the time of the adjournment on Wednesday last, to refer so much of the President's message as relates to the subject of reconstruction to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I think we had better finish the resolution that is under consideration; and upon the whole, I think that the Senator from Maryland had better withdraw his proposition and let the vote be taken on the resolution as offered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I cannot do that.

Mr. SUMNER. Or let him introduce the words which he proposed the other day, and which I was perfectly ready to accept.

Mr. ANTHONY. Senators evidently wish some time to perfect that resolution. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the honorable Senator will allow me to call up the motion to refer.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it is to lead to debate, I think we had better adjourn; if not, I shall not object.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I propose to make some remarks on that motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator had better allow the Senate to adjourn. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 16, noes 16.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair votes in the affirmative, and the Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 11, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of Wednesday last was read and approved.

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. NIBLACK. I rise to a question of privilege. My colleague, DANIEL W. VOORHEES, is now present, and I move that he be sworn in.

Hon. DANIEL W. VOORHEES was then duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER stated that the committees would be announced at the expiration of the morning hour.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER also stated that the first business in order would be the call on States for bills on leave, commencing with the State of Maine, to be referred to the appropriate committees, without debate, and not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

REIMBURSEMENT OF LOYAL STATES.

Mr. BLAINE. I introduce a bill to reimburse the loyal States for advances made and debts contracted in support of the war for the preservation of the Union, and move that it be referred to a select committee of seven.

I desire to state, with the unanimous consent of the House, that the same subject was embraced in the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] offered on Wednesday last; and it is by arrangement with him that I offer this bill, and make the motion I do. I desire to make my acknowledgments to the gentleman from Massachusetts for the magnanimity and courtesy he has shown in waiving his parliamentary rights in order that I may retain my connection with a measure originally introduced by me in the Thirty-Eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Select committee of seven or nine? Committees are generally of five or nine.

Mr. KASSON. At the proper time I propose to move the reference of the bill to a select committee of one from each State, and will state the reasons why it should be done.

Mr. BLAINE. I move a select committee of seven, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that, whereas during the war for the preservation of the Union, the loyal States, and the counties, cities, towns, and townships within those States, made large pecuniary advances, and contracted in many instances oppressive debts, all in support of a common cause and all an equitable charge on the Treasury of the United States, therefore there shall be reimbursed to each of the loyal States a sum equal to $ ——— for each man duly enlisted and mustered from said States into the military or naval service of the United States during the late war; that the amount to be thus reimbursed shall be in bonds of the United States, bearing six per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after ten years from the date of issue and payable in thirty years; that each State on the receipt of said bonds shall apply them or their proceeds in good faith, first, to the liquidation of whatever State debt may have been contracted in support of the war; second, in an equitable manner to the reimbursement of counties, cities, towns, townships, and other municipal corporations for advances made or debts incurred in the support of the war; and third, the residue, if there be any, in such manner as the State Legislatures may determine; that the Secretary of the Treasury shall prepare and deliver said bonds to each State before the 1st day of ———, A. D. 1866, and that the receipt of such bonds shall be in full liquidation and payment of all claims from said State growing out of the late war.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Maine to withdraw the previous question for a moment to allow me to say a few words.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is debated, it will go over under the rule.

Mr. KASSON. I do not wish to debate the bill, but to say a word upon the question of reference. I desire the bill referred to a committee of one from each State in order that the condition of the expenditures of the several States, which is widely different, and which expenditures require an appropriation by Congress, may be represented on the committee.

Mr. BLAINE. I insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the bill was referred to a select committee of seven.

Mr. BLAINE moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SCHENCK, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution in relation to the course pursued by the Emperor of the French and the Emperor Maximilian in the affairs of Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when appointed, and ordered to be printed.

The following is the joint resolution:

Whereas in a letter of instructions, dated July 3, 1862, directed to General Forcy, commanding the French forces in Mexico, the Emperor of the French indicated his policy concerning the affairs of the continent, by declaring that it was his intention to establish a monarchy in Mexico "which would restore to the Latin race on this side of the Atlantic all its strength and prestige, guaranty security to the French West India colonies, and those of Spain; secure the interest and establish the influence of France in the center of America, and prevent the United States from taking possession of the Gulf of Mexico, from which they would command the Antilles and South America, and so become the only dispenser of the products of the New World;" and whereas, in pursuance of said policy, an attempt has been made to establish a monarchy in Mexico contrary to the wishes of its people, and to support Maximilian in his usurpation by European soldiery; and whereas, among other acts contrary to the spirit of the age and of humanity, the so-called Emperor of Mexico, by a decree and regulations dated September 5, 1865, practically established slavery in his dominions, and by a decree dated October 3, 1865, has violated the usages of civilized warfare by denying to the Mexican republican troops the rights of belligerents, and ordering their execution wherever found in twenty-four hours after capture: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, 1. That we contemplate the present condition of affairs in the republic of Mexico with the most profound solicitude. 2. That the attempt to subvert one of the republican Governments of this continent by a foreign Power, and to establish on its ruins a monarchy sustained solely by European bayonets, is opposed to the declared policy of the United States Government, offensive to our people, and contrary to the spirit of our institutions.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to take such steps concerning this grave matter as will vindicate the recognized policy and protect the honor and interests of our Government.

CONFISCATION ACT.

Mr. JULIAN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to repeal a portion of the "joint resolution explanatory of an act to suppress insurrection; to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1862; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, when appointed.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JULIAN also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to extend the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, when appointed.

CATTLE DISEASE.

Mr. WENTWORTH, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If the House will indulge me, I will say that if it is of any importance to pass this bill at all, the last news from Europe shows that it ought to be passed this very hour.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, the bill must be referred to a committee without debate. It cannot be passed at this time, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask that the bill be read. I have been to the Treasury Department on this subject, and the bill was drawn up under the eye of that Department.

The bill was read. The first section prohibits the importation of cattle into the United States, and makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to establish such regulations as will give the law full and immediate effect, and to send copies of them to the proper officers in this country, and to all officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries. The second section provides that whenever the President shall have given thirty days' notice by proclamation that no further danger is to be apprehended from the spread of foreign infectious or contagious diseases among cattle, this law shall be of no force, and cattle may be imported in the same way as before its passage.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will ask to have the bill referred to the Committee on Commerce, with power to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of a suspension of the rules, and the rule is imperative, that, during the morning hour on this day, the rules cannot be suspended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I suggest to my colleague that he postpone the matter for the present; when the proper time comes he will have no difficulty in getting the House to take the bill up.

The SPEAKER. The rule is imperative that bills introduced during the morning hour of Monday must be referred to their appropriate committees, and cannot be recalled by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Can I withdraw it?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I will withdraw it, and refer it to a committee of one for the present.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. BROMWELL introduced a bill to equalize bounties to non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates in the volunteer service of the United States, and for the relief of certain officers therein mentioned; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. ANDERSON introduced a joint resolution in reference to the Federal courts; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. BENJAMIN introduced a joint resolution for amending section nine of article one of the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the joint resolution introduced by me a few minutes since, being a joint resolution declaring the condition of States recently in rebellion, and the powers of Congress in relation thereto, be referred to the joint committee on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON. I raise the point of order that there is no such joint committee yet authorized. Where a committee is authorized by law, I take it such bills or joint resolutions must be referred to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The rule has been followed heretofore that when a joint committee is authorized by either House, and is awaiting the action of the other House, subjects can be referred to that committee even before the concurrence of the other House. If the committee should not be raised, then the whole committee will fall.

The motion was agreed to, and the joint resolution referred accordingly.

LAND TITLES IN ST. LOUIS.

Mr. BLOW introduced a bill authorizing documentary evidence of titles to be furnished to owners of certain lands in the city of St. Louis; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

UNITED STATES JUDICIARY.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill to amend the judicial system of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BURLINGTON AND MISSOURI RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. WILSON also introduced a bill to extend the time for the completion of the Burlington and Missouri River railroad; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

THIRTY-SEVENTH IOWA REGIMENT.

Mr. WILSON also introduced a bill for the relief of the members of the thirty-seventh regiment of Iowa volunteer infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, introduced a bill extending the time for the completion of certain railroads in the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill to construct a canal to improve the Upper rapids and Lower or Des Moines rapids of the Mississippi river; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. HENDERSON introduced a bill granting lands to the State of Oregon to build a military road; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MAIL ROUTE IN OREGON.

Mr. HENDERSON also introduced a bill to establish a mail route from Auburn to Clarks-ville, in Oregon; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. LATHAM introduced a joint resolution giving the consent of Congress to the transfer of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson from the State of Virginia to the State of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions having been concluded—

The SPEAKER announced that the next business in order would be the resumption of the call of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Illinois.

TRANSPORTATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. COOK submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is necessary to increase the facilities for the transportation of the agricultural products of the western States to the sea-board, and to cheapen the cost of such transportation, either by aiding and encouraging the opening of new channels of communication, or of increasing those already existing; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

CATTLE DISEASE—AGAIN.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to proceed to the consideration of the bill I introduced a little while ago, to prevent the importation of cattle into the United States.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, under the operation of which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, the bill was read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Upon that question I call the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] if this bill prevents the importation of cattle from Canada?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I think the greatest danger to be apprehended is from Canada.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. And this bill is intended to cover that?

Mr. WENTWORTH. Yes, sir; it covers the whole ground.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it proper to state that whatever law we might pass upon this subject can have no effect upon the importation of cattle from Canada, until March 16, 1866, when the reciprocity treaty will be terminated.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Very well; if the law does not have that effect, it will do no harm. The last news from the old country is very alarming, and if we want to do anything, it must be done at once.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand that treaties, while they subsist rank, in their binding obligation, the laws of Congress. There is a treaty which covers this subject, and in addition to the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] I want to inquire of my friend from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] whether it is worth while to pass a sweeping bill in the very teeth of the reciprocity treaty, when a simple proviso would save the impropriety in appearance and in fact?

Mr. WENTWORTH. In reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] I will say that this bill, if enacted, will be enforced under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is doubtless familiar with all our treaty obligations, and will respect them in carrying out the law. What I desire is, that we shall do all we can to stop the spread of the cattle disease into this country.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois whether he had not better allow the bill to be referred, so that it may be so amended as to provide for keeping out of the country the cholera as well as the cattle disease.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I insist upon my call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ETC.

Mr. HOGAN submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, when appointed, be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the improvement of those great interior arteries of trade, the Mississippi river and its upper tributaries, by the removal of obstructions to their successful navigation, so as to facilitate the transit of the valuable productions of its valley to the markets of the world, and report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, submitted the following preamble and resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas the rights of foreign Powers to territorial possessions on this continent ceased with those of discovery; that the successful establishment of this Republic over so large a portion of the continent determined the form of government best adapted to the people inhabiting it; that it is the duty of neighboring States to assist each other in guarding rights and interests common to all; that conquest and subjugation cannot be recognized as a security for mere pecuniary grievances by American States; and that the forcible seizure of Mexico by foreign troops, the seating of a foreign emperor on a throne erected on the ruins of that republic, and his retention by foreign bayonets, is in violation of all these, and cannot be permitted by the United States without failing in the highest duties of a powerful State; Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into and report what measures and means may be necessary, on the part of the United States, to restore to the Mexican people the free and unrestricted right to choose their own form of government, and of giving effect to the unanimous voice of the people of this nation, that no foreign Power shall impose despotic government upon any State or people of this continent.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] demands the previous question on the resolution. If it gives rise to debate it must go over under the rules.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw his call for one moment till I can make a suggestion.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. STEVENS. It seems to me that if we adopt this resolution in its present form, we affirm all the principles embodied in the preamble. If it were merely a resolution of inquiry, it would be a very different thing. I beg to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he had better let the resolution go over for the present, so that we may have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The resolution having given rise to discussion, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it has gone over already.

The SPEAKER. It has not gone over, the gentleman from Missouri not having surrendered the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. By his permission, I took the floor from him.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman objects, the Chair will arrest discussion, and the resolution will go over.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not want to object, but I think the gentleman had better let the resolution go over.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will not the vote on the preamble be taken separately?

The SPEAKER. It will. The previous question will exhaust itself upon the resolution. The preamble will then come up on a separate vote.

The previous question was not seconded; there being, on a division—ayes 34, noes 83.

Mr. CONKLING rose to debate the resolution, and it went over under the rules.

NEGRO SUFFRAGE.

Mr. NOELL submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives will not exclude the members of Congress elected in any of the States recently in rebellion because of the fact that the negroes, as a class, were excluded from voting at the election of said members.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that the call for the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. JENCKES. I hope that the resolution will be laid upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 127.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, proposing to debate the resolution, it accordingly went over under the rules.

Mr. DUMONT. I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the resolution is not in order as it conflicts with the resolution passed by the House for the appointment of a joint committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order for two reasons: in the first place it was not made in time; and in the second place the Senate have not yet concurred in the resolution, and therefore the committee has not been raised. By its terms the resolution requires the concurrence of both Houses.

MICHIGAN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. BEAMAN submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That Augustus C. Baldwin, claimant for the seat held by Hon. R. E. TROWBRIDGE, from the fifth congressional district of Michigan, be entitled to the privilege of the floor pending the decision of his claim.

Mr. JOHNSON. I believe it is customary to add that he be permitted to speak to the question when it comes before the House.

Mr. BEAMAN. I suppose that will follow, but I have no objection to modify my resolution as suggested.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. BEAMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JURORS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON. I merely wish to say, for the information of the House, that no court can be held in this District until this bill becomes a law. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME OF IOWA.

Mr. PRICE introduced a joint resolution that the buildings, sheds, furniture, and other property now at Camp Kinsman, near Davenport, Scott county, Iowa, be donated to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PRICE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NON-RESIDENT WESTERN LANDHOLDERS.

Mr. KASSON submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire and report upon the expediency of releasing on the part of the United States so much of the articles of the fundamental compact with the new States, respectively, as restricts their right of discriminating in respect to the taxation of lands of non-resident proprietors, and so enable the States to conform their policy in respect to unimproved lands held for speculation to the principle adopted by Congress in the measure known as the "homestead act."

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, that is a most important resolution, affecting seriously, as it does, private interests all over the country, and demands the most careful consideration that justice be not done. We ought to frown upon any hurried legislation on the subject.

Mr. KASSON. It is only a resolution of inquiry.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINING ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. KASSON introduced a resolution instructing certain committees to report to the House a bill regulating mining on the public lands of the United States.

Pending the reading—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, inquired whether the morning hour had expired.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I call for the regular order of business.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER announced, as the first business in order, the motion of Mr. NIBLACK, laid over from last Monday, to suspend the rules in order to allow him to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That pending the question as to the admission of persons claiming to have been elected Representatives to the present Congress from the States lately in rebellion against the United States Government, such persons shall be entitled to the privileges of the floor of the House.

Upon the motion to suspend the rules, the yeas and nays had been ordered.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Pending this question, the Speaker will announce the standing and select committees ordered by the House. The Speaker desires to state that last Monday the senior member of the House, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], offered a resolution to be referred to a committee of one from each State in regard to tokens of respect and affection growing out of the death of the late President. Subsequently, another gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] offered a bill for the relief of the widow of the late President, which was also ordered to be referred to a committee of one from each State. The Chair is informed by the latter gentleman [Mr. WENTWORTH] that he desires that his colleague, the senior member from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], shall be appointed a member of that committee; which will obviate the necessity of making two committees of one from each State.

Mr. WENTWORTH. That is in accordance with my request and wish.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then announce that committee, and then the other committees ordered by the House.

Subsequent to the calling of the roll—
Mr. SCHENCK stated that he should have voted in the negative had he been in during the call of the roll.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am requested by several of the chairmen of committees to offer the usual resolution authorizing the appointment of clerks. I therefore offer the following resolution, and upon it demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the committees of the House who were entitled to clerks last Congress, shall be entitled to clerks this Congress, at the usual compensation; and that the Committees on Banking and Currency and on Appropriations shall also be entitled to clerks at the same rate of compensation.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his demand for the previous question, in order that I may offer an amendment. There is another committee that needs a clerk.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not withdraw the previous question for that purpose. After the gentleman's special committee shall have organized and ascertained that they need a clerk, they can come to the House at any time and get one.

Mr. ELIOT. It is obvious that the committee on freedmen's affairs must have a clerk.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I prefer the resolution in the usual shape, but I shall not oppose the assignment of a clerk to that committee when they ask for one.

Mr. ELIOT. I hope the House will not second the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORTING.

Mr. BANKS. I offer the following resolution, which involves a matter of the privileges of the House, and upon it I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the select committee upon rules, of which the Speaker of the House is chairman, be instructed to consider and report what relation the reporters of the official proceedings published in the Globe bear to the House, and whether any further regulation is necessary to secure a full and just report of its proceedings.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Treasurer of the United States transmitting copies of his accounts for the third and fourth quarters of 1863, and the first and second quarters of 1864; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution, which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That twenty-five thousand copies of the report of the Lieutenant General be printed for the use of the House.

HEALTH OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making such improvements in the drainage of this city, and especially the Washington canal, as may conduce to the health of the city; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ELDRIDGE asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there is no warrant or authority in the Constitution of the United States for any State or States to secede, and that all resolves or ordinances to that end or for that purpose are absolutely null and void; and that the war having defeated the attempt to thus divide and break up the Union, it is of vital importance to the Republic and to all the States thereof that the States recently in revolt, and each and every one of them, should resume their appropriate and constitutional position and functions in the Union without delay; and to this end, laying aside all party feeling and all personal or other animosity, waiving all minor differences and seeking earnestly to maintain and preserve the Union of our fathers, we will cordially sustain and support the President in every and all constitutional efforts and policy of restoration, believing that thereby the political, commercial, financial, and general prosperity of the whole country will be most substantially and permanently subserved.

Mr. THAYER. I object.

ARMORY AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Mr. LATHAM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of rebuilding and reestablishing the United States armory at Harper's Ferry, West Virginia; and whether the public interests would be better subserved by reestablishing said armory or by selling the property there belonging to the United States; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

CLAIMS FOR ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. KERR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the law of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," as to require the officers therein named to examine and certify for payment, if just, the claims of loyal citizens in States not heretofore in rebellion, for quartermasters' stores or subsistence supplies actually furnished to said Army, whether the same were receipted for or taken without receipt by the officer whose particular duty and business it was, under the rules of said Army, to take the same, or was taken by some other officer or person in such Army, and actually used by said Army, and to report by bill or otherwise.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. SHELLABARGER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into and report to this House, by bill or otherwise, upon the propriety of providing by law for securing to soldiers and sailors who have served the Government in the late war against the rebellion, and who have received no bounties, or relatively small bounties, such additional bounty as will render as nearly as practicable the bounties paid to all such soldiers and sailors equal in proportion to the time of service.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House any correspondence or other information in the possession of the Government relative to the present condition of affairs in the sister republic of Mexico, and especially any letters of the minister from said republic, or the French minister at Washington, thereto.

SLAVERY IN MEXICO.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to this House any information in the possession of any of the Executive Departments of the Government in reference to a so-called decree, by Maximilian, the French agent in Mexico, under date of September 5, 1865, reestablishing slavery or peonage in that republic, and also what action, if any, has been taken by the Government of the United States with reference thereto.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MILLER from Wednesday next until the following Friday.

SAFETY OF RAILROAD TRAVEL.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire what legislation is necessary for the safety and protection of persons traveling upon railroads in the United States, and report by bill or otherwise.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

EXCUSED FROM SERVING ON A COMMITTEE.

Mr. DAVIS asked to be excused from serving on the Committee for the District of Columbia. Leave was granted accordingly.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the House (at two o'clock and ten minutes) then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1865.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in obedience to law, copies of his accounts with the United States for the third and fourth quarters of the year 1863, and the first and second quarters of the year 1864, as adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to law, copies of the accounts for the first quarter of 1865 of the superintendent and agents having in charge the refugee Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COWAN presented the petition of fifteen petty officers and twenty-six seamen of the Western flotilla, praying for prize money or compensation for captures made at Island No. 10, Memphis, and other places on the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of soldiers in the recent war, praying for the necessary legislation to equalize the bounties of those who first responded to their country's call with the bounties of those who enlisted near the close of the war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that internal taxation and duties on foreign imports may be so adjusted as to secure the amplest protection to the labor and industry of the country in all their branches; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask leave to present the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Captain F. A. Patterson, late of the third Virginia cavalry. Having been taken prisoner before he was mustered into the service, he prays that he may be allowed his compensation until the date of his discharge. I move the reference of the papers to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH presented a petition of citizens of Oregon, praying that a pension may be granted to Henry Noland; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, urging the negotiation of a treaty between the United States and the Sandwich Islands, by which the leading exports from the Pacific coast, with some exceptions, and the staple productions of those islands, may be admitted into the ports of each country free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Archibald C. Cray, praying for an appropriation for the pay alleged to be due his father as an officer in the revolutionary war; which, with his papers on file, was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 26) granting to the International Ocean Telegraph Company the right and privilege to establish telegraphic communication between the city of New York and the West India islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 27) to provide for the election of a register of deeds for the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 28) to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes and to establish civil government in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 29) to amend the act of March 3, 1863, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State; and also supplementary to the act of July 4, 1864, of the same import; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 30) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

J. A. RHOMBERG AND COMPANY.

Mr. GRIMES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate all the facts in regard to the seizure of property, for a violation of the revenue laws of the United States, belonging to J. A. Rhomberg & Co., of Dubuque, Iowa; upon what terms a settlement was effected with said Rhomberg & Co.; and under what authority of law the corn seized by the United States as the property of said Rhomberg & Co. was converted into whisky and afterward delivered to them without requiring the duty imposed thereon by law to be paid by them.

WRIT OF HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask leave to present a resolution with a view to its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas the Constitution of the United States declares, "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it;" and whereas Congress, by an act passed 3d March, 1863, provided "that during the present rebellion, the President of the United States, whenever, in his judgment, the public safety may require it, is authorized to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in any case throughout the United States, or any part thereof;" and in pursuance of said act the President did, the 15th day of September, 1863, make proclamation "that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus is suspended throughout the United States, in the several cases before mentioned, and that this suspension will continue throughout the duration of the said rebellion, or until this proclamation shall, by a subsequent one, to be issued by the President of the United States, be modified or revoked;" and whereas there are now no cases of invasion or rebellion in the State of Kentucky, or anywhere in the United States, by reason of which the public safety requires the continued suspension of the writ of habeas corpus: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, by the operation and effect of the Constitution of the United States, now stands rightfully restored in the State of Kentucky, and throughout the whole of the United States, and every citizen may claim, as his birthright, the benefit of this writ of American liberty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to its consideration.

Mr. CLARK. I think it had better lie over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present consideration of the resolution being objected to, it lies over under the rules.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to appeal to his courtesy? I do not ask for the present consideration of the resolution. I merely ask to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no objection to that. I take it, there is no objection to its reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the objection to the present consideration of the resolution withdrawn?

Mr. SUMNER. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection to the present consideration of the resolution being withdrawn, it is moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I will at this time say a short word on the resolution which I have submitted.

It is no attack upon the President, and it covers no hostile feeling to his administration. I am fully sensible of the stupendous difficulties that beset him in his efforts to restore tranquility, fraternity, and security to the whole people of the United States, and all his proper efforts in this great work have my fullest sympathy, and will receive my earnest support. My constituency generally, nine tenths of them at least, and most certainly I myself, am most desirous to sustain his administration; and if I cannot do it in the whole, as much of his policy and measures as my sense of duty will allow. I and the people I represent are desirous to judge of his administration, not only justly, but indulgently. So far as I deem his policy and measures to be constitutional and wise, I will support them earnestly. When I doubt, he shall have the benefit of my doubts; and though dissenting from him concerning essentials, I will refrain from open opposition to him as to them. But where my judgment is satisfied that he is wrong on important principles and concerns, I will openly and decidedly, but courteously, oppose his measures. I will know no more difference in the frankness and decision of my opposition to his measures of that character, than I manifested to similar measures of his predecessor.

Mr. President, to my mental vision the present condition and near prospect for our country are exceedingly unpromising. I do not know that there is any near deliverance, or well-grounded hope for it. Certainly if there is, that hope and deliverance hang upon Andrew Johnson. No man had ever a more important part to play. If he prove able and strong, and just and patriotic, the mass of the people of Kentucky and of the whole United States will rally to his support; and with their assistance he can rescue the country from the terrible fate that threatens it. But if he should be too weak, or treacherous to the mighty responsibility that has been devolved upon him by Providence, there seems now to be no deliverance. Let the true men of the country everywhere hope that he will have the wisdom, virtue, and courage to meet responsibilities that are so fearful in their magnitude, and if he shows the proper disposition and fortitude they will stand by him to save us from anarchy and despotism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to suspend his remarks for a moment to enable the Chair to receive a message from the House of Representatives?

Mr. DAVIS. I am through, sir. I merely wanted to make this disclaimer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not mean to interrupt the Senator but temporarily. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky as having concluded his remarks. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 23) to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 18) granting certain public property to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of Iowa.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one thousand copies of the report of the Quartermaster General be printed for the use of the quartermaster's department.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate take up the resolution from the House of Representatives, appointing a committee to inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and report whether they, or any of them, are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress; with leave to report at any time, by bill or otherwise; and until such report shall have been made, and finally acted on by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the said so-called confederate States; and all papers relating to the representation of said States shall be referred to the said committee without debate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend the enacting clause of the resolution, which now reads as a joint resolution, so as to make it a concurrent resolution, inasmuch as a joint resolution goes to the President for his signature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the enacting or resolving clause of the resolution be amended so as to change it from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. The resolution now reads, "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled." It is proposed to amend the clause so as to read, "Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.)"

Mr. FOOT. It should be the other way, "Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,)" the resolution having originated in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the form.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the resolution go to a committee? If not, I move to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the resolving clause of the resolution. It is competent for the Senator to move its reference. A motion to refer is in order if made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Delaware will allow this amendment to be made, if he does not object to it, and one other amendment which I shall propose, and then his motion will be in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the form of the resolution, changing it from a joint to a concurrent resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move further to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "otherwise."

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

"And until such report shall have been made, and finally acted on by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the said so-called confederate States; and all papers relating to the representation of said States shall be referred to the said committee without debate."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I cannot vote for that amendment. I prefer the resolution as it came from the House of Representatives, because, whether the concurrent resolution has or has not the effect of law, it certainly contains within itself a pledge on the part of the two Houses, given the one to the other, that until the report of this important committee shall have been presented, we will not readmit any of the rebel States either by the recognition of their Senators or of their Representatives. I think, sir, the country expects nothing less than this at our hands. I think that portion of the loyal people of the United States who have sacrificed so much of blood and treasure in the prosecution of the war, and who secured to us the signal victory which we have achieved over the rebellion, have a right to at least this assurance at our hands, that neither House of Congress will recognize as States any one of the rebel States until the event to which I have alluded.

Sir, what is the present position and status of the rebel States? In my judgment they are simply conquered communities, subjugated by the arms of the United States—communities in which the right of self-government does not now exist. Why? Because they have been for the last four years hostile, to the most surprising unanimity hostile, to the authority of the United States, and have during that period been waging a bloody war against that authority. They are simply conquered communities; and we hold them, as we know well, as the world knows to-day, not by their own free will and consent as members of the Union, but solely by virtue of our superior military power, which is exerted to that effect throughout the length and breadth of the rebel States. There is in those States no rightful authority, according to my view, at this time but that of the United States, and every political act, every governmental act exercised within their limits, must necessarily be exercised and performed under the sanction and by the will of the conqueror.

In short, sir, they are not to-day loyal States; their population are not willing to-day, if we are rightly informed, to perform peaceably, quietly, and efficiently the duties which pertain to the population of a State in the Union and of the Union; and for one, I cannot consent to recognize them, even indirectly, as entitled to be represented in either House of Congress at this time. The time has not yet come, in my judgment, to do this, and I object to the amendment for the reason that it leaves the implication—and the implication will be drawn and clearly understood by the public—that one or the other House of Congress may, whenever it sees fit, readmit Senators or Representatives from a rebel State as it sees fit, without the concurrence of the other House, and I hold it to be utterly incompetent for the Senate, under the present condition of things, and for the House of Representatives, under the same condition, to admit Senators or Representatives into Congress without the consent of both Houses and the formal recognition of the fact that hostilities have ceased and that loyalty is restored in the rebel States.

I think, sir, that under present circumstances it is due to the country that we should give them the assurance, such as the House of Representatives has given in the resolution they have sent to us, that we will not thus hastily readmit to seats in the legislative bodies here the representatives of constituencies who are still hostile to the authority of the United States, and unwilling to cooperate with us in our legislation. I think, sir, that such constituencies are not entitled to be represented here. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment which is now pending.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. Supposing that this amendment might not provoke any debate, I forbore to state the purpose with which I offered it. The Senator from Michigan in his remarks has not touched the reasons why I proposed the amendment. It is from no opposition to what I understand to be the purpose of the words stricken out. That purpose I understand to be that both Houses shall act in concert in any measures which they may take for the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion. I think that that object is eminently desirable; and not only that the two Houses shall act in concert, but that Congress shall act in concert with the Executive; that all branches of the Government shall approach this great question in a spirit of comprehensive patriotism, with confidence in each other, with a conciliatory temper toward each other, and that each branch of the Government and all persons in each branch of the Government will be ready, if necessary, to concede something of their own views in order to meet the views of those who are equally charged with the responsibility of public affairs.

Mr. President, the words proposed to be stricken out refer to the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress matters which the Constitution confides to each House separately. Each House is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. Under this resolution, I apprehend, it would be necessary to refer to this joint committee the credentials of persons claiming seats in this body, referring them not only to a committee composed in part of others than members of this body, but composed of a majority of others than members of this body. I know it may be argued that this contemplates the reference only of the question whether a State has a right to be represented, not the question whether a person claiming to represent it has a right to represent it; and perhaps that construction might obtain; but at least the resolution, as it reads, is open to a doubtful construction, and that the Senate should avoid.

There is one other reason why I move this amendment, and that is that the resolution provides that papers shall be referred to this committee without debate. This is contrary to the practice of the Senate. The House of Representatives has found it necessary, for the orderly transaction of its business, to put limitations upon debate, hence the previous question and the hour rule; but the Senate has always resisted every proposition of this kind, and has submitted to any inconvenience rather than check free discussion. Senators around me, who were here in the minority, felt that the right of debate was a very precious one to them at that time; and as it was not taken from them, they are not disposed to take it from the minority now. I myself should have no objection to limiting debate if I thought the Senate would agree with me.

In the watches of this Chamber I have often wished that some divine power would temper the strength of lungs in the speaker to the endurance of the ears of the hearers; but the opinion of the Senate on that point has been too often and too decidedly expressed to leave any doubt of its policy; therefore, I thought it was best that that portion of the resolution should be stricken out. The purpose of all that is stricken out can be effected by the separate action of the two Houses, if they shall so elect. The House of Representatives having passed this resolution by a great vote, will undoubtedly adopt in a separate resolution what is here stricken out; and except so far as relates to the credentials of Senators, and so far as relates to the restriction upon debate, I shall, if this amendment be adopted and the resolution passed, offer a resolution substantially declaring it to be the opinion of the Senate that, until this committee reports, presuming it will report in a reasonable time, no action should be taken upon the representation of the States lately in rebellion.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, under other circumstances perhaps I should say nothing upon this motion of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island to amend the resolution of the House of Representatives; but as the honorable Senator from Michigan makes earnest objection to the adoption of the amendment and has demanded the yeas and nays of the Senate upon it, I certainly am not only at liberty to express my views, but I feel that to do so is a duty to myself, to the Senate, and to the country; and I shall discharge that duty in as brief terms as I can.

In my own judgment, sir, all of these great questions concerning reconstruction, pacification, and restoration of civil government in the southern States, representation in this body, or anything which concerns our Federal relations with the several States, ought to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Such has been the practice of this Government from the beginning. Great questions of constitutional law, questions concerning the relations of the Union to the States and the States to the Union, and above all, and without any exception, all questions relating to representation in this body, to its membership, have always been referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Judiciary Committee is constituted for the very purpose of considering such questions, and for no other purpose. From its very organization, the Senate designs to make that committee its constitutional adviser—not that its opinions are to be conclusive or controlling on the vote of any member of this body, like the opinion of the bench of judges in the House of Lords; but its members are chosen in consideration of their high professional ability, their long experience, and well-known standing as jurists, in order that their report upon constitutional questions may be entitled to the highest consideration. And, sir, if you look into the organization of the Judiciary Committee appointed by the Senate at the present session, what is it? There is the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] for years a judge of the supreme court of that State before he entered this body, who for ten years and more has been a faithful, laborious, distinguished member of that committee, and for the last four years its chairman. And there sits my honorable friend from New York, [Mr. HARRIS,] for twenty years before he came here, known and distinguished among the able jurists and judges of that great State.

There is upon that committee also the honorable Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] whom I do not now see in his seat, who, for a quarter of a century and more, has borne a high national reputation as among the ablest jurists of this or any country, twice a Senator, once the Attorney General of the United States. And there is the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. POLAND,] He has, it is true, just entered this body, but his reputation as a jurist preceded his coming, and he comes here to fill the place in this Chamber, and is put upon this Judiciary Committee to fill the place of him, of whom I will say without disparagement to any that he was the ablest jurist of us all—the late distinguished Senator from Vermont, [Mr. COLLAMER,] And there is the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK,] from the far East, and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] from the Pacific coast, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] from the central region, each of whom stands eminent in the profession in the State which he represents, and all of whom are recognized here among the ablest jurists of this body.

Mr. President, there is nothing in the history of the Senate, there is nothing in the constitution of this committee, which would send these great constitutional questions for advisement and consideration to any other committee than the Committee on the Judiciary. To place their consideration in the hands of a committee which is beyond the control of the Senate, is to distrust ourselves; and to vote to send their consideration to any other committee is equivalent to a vote of want of confidence in the Judiciary Committee.

But, sir, some gentlemen have said and urged with great pertinacity, if not with force, that from courtesy, a sense of propriety toward the other House in this peculiar case, we ought to consent to send the consideration of this question to a joint committee of the two Houses. When my friends with whom I have associated in political action have urged this consideration upon me, in order to secure harmonious action, I confess that I have so far yielded my judgment as to give way to the appointment of a joint committee, provided that in that joint committee, as it should be established by the two Houses, the Senate should maintain its equality, and there should be no substantial objection to the powers conferred upon the committee itself.

This brings me to the consideration of the joint resolution as it came from the House of Representatives; and I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as it was passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, the resolution as it came from the House of Representatives to the Senate was a joint resolution, and, if passed by this body in that form, would have required the signature of the President, and in that event it would have become the law of the land, binding upon both Houses of Congress and upon the whole Government, until repealed by the joint action of the two Houses with the concurrence of the Executive. That, however, by the amendment first offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, has been obviated, and by the language of the resolution as it now stands amended it is a resolution of concurrence only, not requiring, according to the practice of the Government, the signature of the President.

But, sir, I object to this resolution in the first place, because upon these great questions which are to go to the joint committee the Senate does not stand upon an equality with the House. This resolution provides that, of the joint committee of fifteen, nine shall be appointed by the House of Representatives, six only by the Senate, giving to the House portion of the committee a majority of three. We all know that in joint committees the members vote, not as the representatives of the two Houses, but per capita. The vote of a member of the committee from the House weighs precisely the same as the vote of a member of the committee from the Senate; so that to all intents and purposes, if we pass this concurrent resolution, which we cannot repeal but by the concurrence of the other House, we place the consideration of these grave questions in the hands of a committee which we cannot control and in which we have no equal voice.

Mr. President, another objection to the resolution as it came from the House, and a strong reason why I favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, is that the resolution in its terms reaches even beyond the present Congress. Sir, have you carefully studied this language, which would seem almost to have been employed for the purpose rather of disguising its hidden meaning than of giving full utterance to the truth? The resolution provides that, in case this committee shall for any reason make no report, or if for any reason Congress, which includes both Houses, shall not take final action thereon, the restrictive clause goes into effect as a law, and what is its provision? It provides by law that, in the happening of that contingency, that failure to act, no one of the eleven States of the United States shall send a Representative to either House of Congress. It would be binding on the Senate until repealed, beyond the present Congress; it would bind us in the next Congress and bind us in the Congress after that. It would be of perpetual binding obligation forever until repealed by act of Congress.

Sir, what would have been thought of the joint resolution raising the committee on the conduct of the war if there had been contained in it a provision similar to this, which the Senator from Rhode Island moves to strike out, and which the Senator from Michigan insists shall be retained, and upon which he calls the yeas and nays of the Senate? Suppose that in that joint resolution there had been a provision declaring that until the joint committee on the conduct of the war should make their final report, and Congress should take final action thereon, neither House of Congress should take any action on the subject of carrying on the war, and that every paper relating to that subject should be referred to that committee without debate? Monstrous as such a proposition would have been, it might perhaps have been within the purview of the Constitution for us to adopt it; but on the subject of representation in this body, it is not within our constitutional power to delegate our power to any other body, or to any committee which we ourselves do not control.

Mr. President, I believe that under the Constitution, upon all subjects of legislation but one, the two Houses are equal and coordinate branches of Congress. That one relates to their representation in the bodies, to their membership, that which constitutes their existence, which is essential to their life and their independence. That is confided to each House, and to each House alone, to act for itself. It judges for itself upon the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. It judges, it admits, it punishes, it expels. It cannot share that responsibility with any other department of the Government. It can no more share it with the other House than it can share it with the Supreme Court or with the President. It is a matter over which its jurisdiction is exclusive of every other jurisdiction. It is a matter in which its decisions, right or wrong, are absolute and without appeal. Sir, in my opinion the Senate of the United States cannot give to a committee beyond its control this question of the representation in this body, without a loss of its self-respect, its dignity, its independence; without an abandonment of its constitutional duty and a surrender of its constitutional powers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] an amendment being moved to it by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to lay that aside until the Senator from Wisconsin finishes his remarks.

Mr. SUMNER. I observe that the Senator from Maryland is not in his seat, and therefore I should not think of proceeding with that resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us go on and close this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed with his remarks if there be no objection. The unfinished business of yesterday will be laid aside.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, there is another provision in this resolution as it stands. It not only takes from the Senate all power to act over this subject until this committee shall report and Congress shall take final action, but it declares that we shall refer every paper to the committee without debate. Yes, sir, the Senate of the United States is to be led like a lamb to the slaughter, bound hand and foot, shorn of its constitutional power, and gagged, dumb, like the sheep brought to the block! Is this the condition to which the Senator from Michigan proposes to reduce the Senate of the United States by insisting upon such a provision as that contained in the resolution as it comes from the House of Representatives?

Mr. President, there is a still graver objection to this resolution as it stands. The provision that, "until such report shall have been made and finally acted on by Congress, no member shall be received into either House from any of the so-called confederate States," is a provision which, by law, excludes those eleven States from their representation in the Union. Sir, pass that resolution as it stands, and let it receive the signature of the President, and you have accomplished what the rebellion could not accomplish, what the sacrifice of half a million men could not accomplish in warring against this Government—you have dissolved the Union by act of Congress. Sir, are we prepared to sanction that? I trust never.

The Senator from Michigan talks about the status of these States. He may very properly raise the question whether they have any Legislatures that are capable of electing Senators to this body. That is a question of fact to be considered; but as to whether they are States, and States still within the Union, notwithstanding their civil form of government has been overturned by the rebellion and their Legislatures have been disorganized—that they are still States in this Union is the most sacred truth and the dearest truth to every American heart, and it will be maintained by the American people against all opposition, come from what quarter it may. Sir, the flag that now floats on the top of this Capitol bears thirty-six stars. Every star represents a State in this Union. I ask the Senator from Michigan, does that flag, as it floats there, speak the nation's truth to our people and to the world, or is it a hypocritical, flaunting lie? That flag has been borne at the head of our conquering legions through the whole South, planted at Vicksburg, planted at Columbia, Savannah, Charleston, Sumter; the same old flag which came down before the rebellion at Sumter was raised up again, and it still bore the same glorious stars; "not a star obscured," not one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Were not some of those stars obscured?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. No, sir. These people have been disorganized in their civil governments in consequence of the war; the rebels overturned civil government in the first place, and we entered with our armies and captured the rebellion; but did that destroy the States? Not at all. We entered the States to save them, not to destroy them. Our constitutional duty is to save them, and save every one of them, and not to destroy them. The guarantee in the Constitution is a guarantee to the States, and to every one of the States, and the obligation that rests upon us is to guaranty to South Carolina a republican form of government as a State in this Union, and not as a Territory. The doctrine of the territorial condition of these States, that they are mere conquered, subjugated territories, as if we had conquered Canada or Mexico, will not stand argument for a moment. It is utterly at war with the ground on which we stand and have stood from the beginning. The ground we occupied was this: that no State nor the people of any State had any power to withdraw from the Union. They could not do it peacefully; they undertook to do it by arms; we crushed the attempt; we trampled their armies under our feet; we captured the rebellion; the States are ours; and we entered them to save, and not to destroy.

Mr. President, I do not wish to be drawn now into the discussion of these questions at length. I may have an opportunity on some other occasion to do so. I simply now am stating the objections which I had to this resolution as it came from the House of Representatives. It degrades the Senate; it robs it of its constitutional power; it puts the control of a question which is exclusively ours into the hands of the other House; it dissolves the Union by law of Congress.

Mr. President, I have no idea the House of Representatives had any such intention. I am bound always to speak with respect of the House of Representatives and of the intentions of that body. I simply say—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that it is not within the rules of order for the proceedings of the House of Representatives to be discussed here.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Would it be in order to make a statement that the resolution was passed without debate in the other House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is all I designed to say, that it passed that House without debate. I do not mean any disrespect to the House.

But, Mr. President, there was another assemblage in Washington which took place not long since, and whose proceedings are published to the world and known of all men, of which I suppose I can speak with entire freedom: I refer to a certain assemblage whose proceedings are published as the proceedings of a caucus of gentlemen in the city of Washington. I suppose no rule of the Senate requires me to speak in any other terms of those published proceedings than to speak the truth. To that I am willing to be bound. By the published proceedings of that assemblage, it would seem that on a Saturday night, without any discussion whatever, a certain resolution, which reads word for word just like this resolution which is sent here from the House of Representatives, was adopted in that caucus under the leadership of a certain gentleman—I will not speak of him as a member of the House, but as a man known to history—who resides in the State of Pennsylvania.

I refer to Hon. Thaddeus Stevens. His history is known to all men; and one thing we know of him certainly, that he is most bitterly, uncompromisingly hostile to the policy of the present Administration on the subject of reconstruction. He goes with him who goes the farthest, holding that even the State of Tennessee is an alien State at war with the United States; and if I am not misinformed, in the convention at Baltimore, which nominated Messrs. Lincoln and Johnson for President and Vice President, he objected to the nomination of Andrew Johnson because he was an alien enemy! Sir, I have seen nothing in the history of that gentleman to lead me to suppose that he has in any respect changed his opinions, for it is not long since we read a speech of his delivered in the State of Pennsylvania, marked with his usual ability, with his great boldness, with that cool assurance which sometimes almost rises to the sublime, in which he proposed, if I do not mistake, almost the entire and universal confiscation of the whole of the southern States.

Now, Mr. President, of the doings of that assemblage in connection with the resolution I feel at perfect liberty to speak without violating the rules of this House. I will not speak with disrespect even of that assemblage; I have not done so; I do not intend to do so. I simply say that within three minutes, by the clock, after the hour when that assemblage was called, Thaddeus Stevens had moved his committee on resolutions and was withdrawing with his committee from the body to make his report, and within ten minutes, without any discussion, without any consideration whatever, it was by that cool tact and talent of his pressed through the body and declared to be unanimously adopted. Why this hot haste, sir? What necessity of this hot haste? Who does not know that the leader of that assemblage did not desire to wait, nor did he dare to wait, until the President had spoken to the country in his annual message.

The Constitution of the United States requires the President from time to time to give to Congress information of the state of the Union. Who has any right to presume that the President will not furnish the information which his constitutional duty requires? He has at his control all the agencies which are necessary. There is the able Cabinet who surround him, with all the officers appointed under them: the postmasters under the Post Office Department, the Treasury agents under the Treasury Department, and almost two hundred thousand men under the control of the War Department in every part of this "disaffected" region, who can bring to the President information from every quarter of all the transactions that exist there. Why, I ask, had this assemblage the right to presume that the President would not furnish the information which the Constitution required? Sir, we are here claiming to be the friends of the late lamented President, and the friends of him upon whom by his death the responsibilities of power have fallen. We aided in their election. They were nominated at Baltimore after the great experiment of reconstruction had already begun. Mr. Lincoln had already for months, for almost a year, been pursuing substantially the same policy of reconstruction which has since been followed by his successor. Andrew Johnson was himself one of the agencies which had been employed by Mr. Lincoln in the State of Tennessee in the hope of restoring civil government there; and it was under these circumstances, not with the approval of all men at Washington, but with the approval of the great masses of the people of this country, that Abraham Lincoln was renominated as President, and that Andrew Johnson was nominated to be Vice President of the United States, and they were triumphantly indorsed and sustained by the people; and I tell Senators now, in my opinion—I speak with all respect to other gentlemen—that the President of the United States will be sustained, in the views which he takes in his message, by the people of this country as certain as the revolutions of the earth; and it is our duty to act harmoniously with him, to sustain him, to hold up his hands, to strengthen his heart, to speak to him words of faith, friendship, and courage.

Mr. President, I know that in all these southern States there are a thousand things to give us pain, sometimes alarm, but notwithstanding the bad appearance which from time to time presents itself in the midst of that boiling caldron of passion and excitement which the war has left still raging there, the real progress which we have made has been most wonderful. I say to you, Senators, it is my deliberate opinion that if, when we adjourned last spring, an angel from the skies could have come down here and told us that at our meeting now, our country would be in so hopeful a condition as it is, we would not have believed it; it would have been beyond our credence, beyond our belief. I am one of those who look forward with hope, for I believe God reigns and rules in the affairs of mankind. I look beyond the excitement of the hour and all the outbreathing passion which sometimes shows itself in the South, which leads them to make enactments in their Legislatures which are disgraceful to themselves, and can never be sanctioned by the people of this country, and also in spite of all the excitement of the North, I behold the future full of confidence and hope. We have only to come up like men, and stand as the real friends of the country and the Administration, and give to the policy of the President a fair and substantial trial, and all will be well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that this debate has sprung up. I think it exceedingly out of place, with regard to the manner in which it has been conducted, and some of the topics which have been spoken of. I do not, in saying this, wish to be considered as finding fault with any gentleman, because every Senator must judge for himself as to what it is advisable for him to say, and it is not for any other Senator to arraign him on that point. But it sometimes happens that things which are foreign to the question are said which ought not to be suffered to pass without a little comment.

Now, sir, allow me to say that when this resolution was first promulgated in the newspapers as having been agreed upon, I approved it because I sympathized with its object and purpose. I did not examine it particularly; but, looking simply at what it was designed for, it met my approbation simply for this reason: that this question of the readmission, if you please to call it so, (it is not worth while to stand about words,) of these confederate States, so called, and all the questions connected with that subject, I conceived to be of infinite importance, requiring calm and serious consideration, and I believed that the appointment of a committee, carefully selected by the two Houses, to take that subject into consideration, was not only wise in itself, but an imperative duty resting upon the representatives of the people in the two branches of Congress. For myself, I was not prepared to act upon that question at once. I am not one of those who pin their faith upon anybody, however eminent in position, or conceive themselves obliged on a question of great national importance to follow out anybody's opinions simply because he is in a position to make those opinions, perhaps, somewhat more imperative than any other citizen of the Republic. Talk about the Administration! Sir, we are a part of the Administration, and a very important part of it. I have no idea of abandoning the prerogatives, the rights, and the duties of my position in favor of anybody, however that person or any number of persons may desire it. In saying this, I am not about to express an opinion upon the subject any further than I have expressed it, and that is, that in questions of such infinite importance as this, involving the integrity and welfare of the Republic in all future time, we are solemnly bound, and our constituents will demand of us, that we examine them with care and fidelity, and act on our own convictions, and not upon the convictions of others.

I have said I was in favor of this resolution when I first read it, for the reason that it looked to a purpose which I approve—calm and deliberate consideration before action; but when I came to read it over more carefully and hear the opinions of others, I came to the conclusion, for the reasons that have been given by my honorable friend from Rhode Island, that the resolution perhaps went a little too far. It was important to have a committee by which this subject should be investigated, composed of members of the two Houses, for the reason, among others, that it is very important that the two Houses should act in harmony, that one House should not take action that would be at variance with the action of the other, and that, after investigation of the subject, it would result, as I believe, from the constitution of Congress, that the two Houses would act in harmony, on the same principles, and with the same views, and neither would act hastily. Therefore, the committee was important, and a committee that should be carefully chosen, as I said before, and deliberate well and advise well; and I did not conceive that a little delay, that a few weeks' time, or even a few months' time, if necessary, given to that subject, would be misspent. We had better spend a little time now than take a step to be repented of in all our after lives and in all the future life of the Republic.

The points to which attention has been called by the honorable mover of the amendment are precisely those to which I objected. While I approved the committee, I did not think, in the first place, that we should change the order of proceeding and the long-tried rules of the Senate, especially the one with regard to debate. It has always been open here on every subject. Every Senator was at liberty to speak as much and as long as he pleased within the rules of order upon every subject open to debate in the Senate. I was very unwilling that that should be changed. If the House of Representatives, for its own convenience and in order to accomplish business, finds it necessary to adopt another rule, that rule can be adopted by the House as applicable to its own proceedings, but not here; and hence I was opposed to that particular provision, and thought it unwise so far as we were concerned.

My judgment was that everything that was necessary could be accomplished by the mere appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses; that it was not necessary to provide that all the credentials of members should be referred to that committee. There was an apparent constitutional objection to it; and there is much force in the argument that if that should be done, and the provision retained that no action should be had until there was a report from that committee, constituted as the committee is to be, each House is putting into the hands of the other a power to control its action in a matter which, by the Constitution, is left to itself. I might have been willing even to strain a little upon that point had I conceived that there was any danger; but, sir, when we come to look at it, a committee is appointed by the ordinary rules of proceeding; everything relating to the proper subject-matter, referred to that committee goes there; no harm would happen from a discussion in this body on that subject; it would very soon be settled, and we should avoid the apparent difficulty that arose with reference to what was our constitutional duty. I was not frightened by any idea that it was necessary now to tie up this body or that body by a joint rule which could not be altered without the assent of the other, because, on such a subject, a majority at any time will rule. If this body chooses at any time to become false to its duty, it will find a way to accomplish the wrong; and so will it be with the House of Representatives.

If the members of that body are, as I believe they will be, firm in their convictions of right and what the good of the country requires, there is no need of putting them under the control of the Senate in order to keep them so. Hence I agree with the honorable Senator who moved this amendment that it is best to strike out that clause, and simply appoint a committee, and then if the Senate chooses to pass a rule of its own to refer all the papers on this subject, even credentials, to that committee, so be it; it will have the control of that subject; and if the House of Representatives, on the other hand, chooses to do the same thing, so be it; it will have the control of its own action, and we have accomplished the great purpose, which is, to put the consideration of the question which lies at the foundation of this subject of the admission of members into the hands of a joint committee to be thoroughly consulted upon and considered. That is the only ground upon which my judgment coincides with that of the honorable Senator from Rhode Island.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] will allow me to say to him that I do not think the question of whether the men who may present themselves as members are fit to come in now, or whether the States of which they profess to be the representatives are fit to come in now and act with us and ought to be admitted to do so, is involved in this question at all. He has argued it as if by striking out this portion of the resolution we had settled that. By no manner of means. If it would do so, I would vote with him. We are only settling, on the contrary, that that question shall be deferred until a committee of both branches have thoroughly considered it and reported to this body; and certainly I shall go with him as long as I believe that committee is doing its duty in opposing action upon the subject committed to it until it is ready to enlighten us with the information it may have received and the conclusions to which it may have arrived. I say this simply to bar the inference that by this action in amending it any one who may vote for it means to say or intimate that he is ready to act upon that question now and admit anybody from any of these so-called confederate States. Certainly I am not one of them, and yet I shall vote with the honorable Senator from Rhode Island.

On the other hand, I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that by passing a simple resolution raising a committee of our own body, and referring to it certain papers, if we conclude to do so, we are infringing upon the rights of anybody or making an intimation with regard to any policy that the President may have seen fit to adopt and recommend to the country. Sir, I trust there are no such things as exclusive friends of the President among us, or gentlemen who desire to be so considered. I have as much respect for the President of the United States probably as any man. I acted with him long, and I might express the favorable opinions which I entertain of him here if they would not be out of place and in bad taste in this body. That I am disposed and ready to support him to the best of my ability, as every gentleman around me is, in good faith and with kind feeling in all that he may desire that is consistent with my views of duty to the country, giving him credit for intentions as good as mine, and with ability far greater, I am ready to asseverate.

But, sir, I do not agree with the doctrine, and I desire to enter my dissent to it now and here, that, because a certain line of policy has been adopted by one branch of the Government, or certain views are entertained by one branch of the Government, therefore, for that reason alone and none other, that is to be tried, even if it is against my judgment; and I do not say that it is or is not. That is a question to be considered. I have a great respect, not for myself, perhaps, but for the position which I hold as a Senator of the United States; and no measure of Government, no policy of the President, or of the head of a Department, shall pass me, while I am a Senator, if I know it, until I have examined it and given my assent to it; not on account of the source from which it emanates, but on account of its own intrinsic merits, and because I believe it will result in the good of my country. That is my duty as a Senator, and I fear no misconstruction at home on this subject or any other. I have represented the State from which I come too long to fear anything of that kind. If I act against the prejudices or preconceived opinions of that people, they are always ready to hear me, and hear my reasons, and if they are satisfactory to them, to give me credit for them, and, if not satisfactory, at least to give me credit for good intentions; and that is all I ask of anybody.

Now, therefore, sir, I hope that, laying aside all these matters which are entirely foreign, we shall act upon this resolution simply as a matter of business. No one has a right to complain of it that we raise a committee for certain purposes of our own when we judge it to be necessary. It is an imputation upon nobody; it is an insult to nobody; it is not anything which any sensible man could ever find fault with, or be disposed to do so. It is our judgment, our deliberate judgment, our friendly judgment—a course of action adopted from regard to the good of the community, and that good of the community comprehends the good of every individual in it.

Allow me to say, sir, in closing, one thing which I may as well say now in the beginning of the session, because it is the principle which I intend shall guide my action, and I hope will guide the action of all of us. We have just gone through a state of war. While we were in it it became necessary all around to do certain things for which perhaps no strict warrant will be found; contrary, at any rate, to previous experience. That I admit most distinctly. Sir, I defended them from the beginning. I laid down the principle that the man who, placed in a position such as the President and other officers occupied, would not, in a time of war, and when his country was in peril, put his own reputation at hazard as readily as he would anything else in order to do his duty, was not fit for his place. I upheld many things then that perhaps I would not uphold now because they are not necessary. The time must come when the Senate and House of Representatives, the Congress, must revert to its own original position. I do not think there will be the slightest danger; I have no apprehension of any; but if I act upon different principles now and hereafter in a state of peace, from those which I adopted and defended before, I wish everybody to understand the reason for it. In all countries, in all nations in a time of extreme peril, extreme and somewhat questionable measures are inevitable.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not understand me as holding a different doctrine, because I maintained that on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I trust not. But in time of peace, when we live under a written Constitution, it is our duty to come back as fast, as possible; to forget, if necessary, any precedent which might, if made in times like these, have occasioned very serious difficulty and trouble.

Now, sir, I have said this; it is as much out of place as anything I complained of in other gentlemen; but I took the occasion simply because it presented itself, and it would seem somewhat connected with what has taken place. I trust we shall adopt the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, and I believe that if the resolution be passed in that form it will accomplish all it is desirable to accomplish and be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HOWARD. At the suggestion of some of my friends I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered by the Senate, the call can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN. I propose to amend the resolution by striking out the word "nine" in the second line and inserting the word "six." I know of no reason, if this committee be appointed at all, why the House of Representatives should have any advantage over the Senate in the number of the persons who are to compose the committee. They are not superior in any respect that I know of except in numbers, and that ought not to be available here to give them an advantage. I propose, therefore, that that word "nine" be stricken out and "six" inserted, so that the two bodies will have an equal representation in the committee, if it is to be formed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I believe the uniform rule in the appointment of joint committees has been to place upon them a larger number of members of the House of Representatives than of the Senate. Gentlemen who are better parliamentarians than I am, and better acquainted with the precedents of Congress, will be able to correct me if I am wrong. I believe in the committee on the conduct of the war there were more members from the House than from the Senate.

Mr. WADE. Four to three.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the joint committee which has been raised to report in what manner the nation shall testify its reverence and affection for the memory of our late President, the Representatives outnumber the Senators. This resolution, therefore, follows the usual precedents, and I do not see why there should be any exception to the usual precedents in this case.

Mr. COWAN. As I understand, this is a novel proceeding, and no precedent can be of any avail in governing our action upon it; we are free to determine it upon principles of reason. I have heard no reason in the world given why the House of Representatives should have nine persons to inquire into the condition of the so-called confederate States while we should only have six. I think, myself, that three members from each House would be better than fifteen or twelve; they would be more readily got together. But I do not object to six members from the Senate, and I think the same number should be from the House. I think we are entitled to an equal representation upon the committee. I know no reason to the contrary; and as the proceeding is a novel one, no precedent can be of any avail to govern our action upon it. The function of the committee is simply to inquire, and there is no reason why we should not have the same weight in making that inquiry as the House of Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. The resolution, as it is amended, is not a novel one; it is an ordinary resolution of inquiry, to raise a joint committee such as has been frequently raised by the two Houses. The resolution as it came from the House of Representatives was undoubtedly a novel one, and if it had not been amended by striking out the very important provision which has just been stricken out, then I should think it very proper that the Senate should be equally represented with the House; but as it is now a mere resolution of inquiry, I do not see any reason why it should not follow the precedents of other resolutions of inquiry.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether, where joint committees are raised in this way, he has examined to see whether the committee of each House does not vote separately as a unit, and not the members per capita; whether any report can be made from this joint committee unless it is sanctioned by a majority of the members of the committee from the Senate as well as a majority of those from the House. I understand that in committees of conference, which usually consist of three persons on the part of the Senate and three on the part of the House, it requires a majority of each to make a report; that is to say, the three members from the Senate uniting with one member from the House cannot make a report from such a committee, but you must have two members of the House and two members of the Senate to make a report from a joint committee of conference. If that rule obtains—and I ask the question for information—the number of the committee is perhaps not so material as it would be if the members from this body voted per capita. If they do so vote, of course the control of the committee, the House of Representatives having nine members upon it and the Senate but six, would be entirely in the power of the House, should they, in their investigations, conclude so to act.

Mr. COWAN. I have no doubt the rule, as stated by the honorable Senator from Illinois, prevails in committees of conference; but this is not a committee of conference; this is a joint committee, and there, I understand, the votes are taken per capita. I suppose the members of this committee will not be distinguished in the committee as representing one or the other of the two bodies, but they will be representatives of the bodies jointly, as the word itself would imply; and that is one of the reasons why I desire that the bodies should be upon equal footing. This committee, if I understand it, is simply to report facts to the bodies; it is to determine nothing. It is to inquire into the condition of affairs in the lately rebellious States, and report the facts to these bodies in order that their action upon the same may be intelligible. It is very much the same as the appointment of a master in chancery to report facts, or a commissioner to report evidence; and acting jointly, the members of this committee will be not only ancillary in their action to one House, but they will be ancillary in their action to both, and will report to both and for the benefit of both; and therefore I desire that they shall be upon an equal footing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to strike out "nine" and insert "six."

Mr. COWAN and Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stockton, and Wright—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Groswell, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Henderson, Howard, McDougall, and Trumbull—5.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not want to discuss the merits of this resolution. Many of its objectionable features have been got rid of by the adoption of amendments; but still, as it exists now, it is very objectionable to my mind. It is for the appointment of a committee of the two Houses to determine and to report upon, what? The right of representation of eleven States in this body. What determines the rights of those States to representation here? Is it the views of the members of the House of Representatives? Do we stand in need of any light, however bright it may be, that may come from that distinguished quarter? Are we going to ask them to illuminate us by wisdom, and to report the fact to us whether those States are entitled to representation on this floor?

Mr. President, on the first day of your assemblage after the battle of Manassas you and they declared, by joint resolution, that the object for which the war was waged was for no purpose of conquest or subjugation, but it was to preserve the Union of the States and to maintain the rights, dignity, and equality of the several States unimpaired. While that war was being waged there was no action, either of this House or of the House of Representatives, declaring that when it was over the existence of those States should be ignored or their right to representation in Congress denied. Throughout the whole contest the battle-cry was "the preservation of the Union" and "the Union of the States." If there was a voice then raised that those States had ceased to have an existence in this body, it was so feeble as to be passed by and totally disregarded.

Sir, suppose this committee should report that those States are not entitled to representation in this body, are you bound by their action? Is there not a higher law, the supreme law of the land, which says, if they be States that they shall each be entitled to two Senators on this floor? And shall a report of a joint committee of the two Houses override and overrule the fundamental law of the land? Sir, it is dangerous as a precedent, and I protest against it as an humble member of this body. If they be not States, then the object avowed for which the war was waged was false.

But, sir, I do not intend to discuss the question now. I shall take occasion before the session is over perhaps to discuss it somewhat elaborately. But regarding it as a dangerous precedent, I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I feel called upon to say in relation to this matter, that inasmuch as the Senate and House of Representatives are not put upon a footing of equality in the committee, I am constrained to vote against the resolution. As my friends around me all know, I have uniformly stated to them that I could not vote for the resolution if they were not put upon a footing of equality.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On this subject I desire to say but one word. I shall vote against this resolution because it refers to a joint committee a subject which, according to my judgment, belongs exclusively to the Senate. I know that the resolution no longer provides in express terms that the Senate, pending the continuance of the investigation of this committee, will not consider the question of credentials from these States, but in effect it amounts to that. The question is to be referred to the committee, and according to usage, and it would seem to be the very purpose of reference that the body shall not consider the subject while the question is before them. I could not vote for a resolution that refers to a joint committee a subject that this body alone can decide. If there are credentials presented here, this body must decide the question whether the person presenting the credentials is entitled to a seat; and how can this body be influenced by any committee other than a committee that it shall raise itself?

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I understood the resolution as the Senator from Indiana does, I should certainly vote with him; but I do not so understand it as it has been amended. That was the very objection to the resolution in the form in which it came from the House of Representatives, but as it has been amended it is simply a resolution that a joint committee be raised to inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and to report whether they or any of them are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise. It is true, as the Senator says, that after having raised this committee, the Senate will not be likely to take action in regard to the admission of the Senators from any of these States until the committee shall have had a reasonable time at least to act and report; but it is very desirable that we should have joint action upon this subject. It would produce a very awkward and undesirable state of things in the mind, I doubt not, of the Senator from Indiana himself, if the House of Representatives were to admit members from one of the lately rebellious States and the Senate were to refuse to receive Senators from the same State.

We all know that the State organizations in certain States of the Union have been usurped and overthrown. This is a fact of which we must officially take notice. There was a time when the Senator from Indiana, as well as myself, would not have thought of receiving a Senator from the Legislature or what purported to be the Legislature of South Carolina. When the people of that State, by their representatives, undertook to withdraw from the Union and set up an independent government in that State in hostility to the Union, when the body acting as a Legislature there was avowedly acting against this Government, neither he nor I would have received representatives from it. That was a usurpation which by force of arms we have put down. Now the question arises, has a State government since been inaugurated there entitled to representation? Is not that a fair subject of inquiry? Ought we not to be satisfied upon that point? We do not make such an inquiry in reference to members that come from States which have never undertaken to deny their allegiance to the Government of the United States. Having once been admitted as States, they continue so until by some positive act they throw off their allegiance, and assume an attitude of hostility to the Government, and make war upon it; and while in that condition I know we should all object that they, of course, could not be represented in the Congress of the United States. Now, is it not a proper subject for inquiry to ascertain whether they have assumed a position in harmony with the Government; and is it not proper that that inquiry should be made the subject of joint action?

I think we could get at it in another way as well perhaps as by this joint committee. We could, by instituting a committee of our own, or by referring this subject to a committee of our own, have it investigated and have a resolution reported, as was done by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate last session when a report was made, not in favor of admitting to seats the persons claiming seats and who presented credentials, but in favor of recognizing as legitimate and lawful, and entitled to representation, an organization which was set up after the rebellion had been put down in one of the rebel States. If that resolution had been passed by the Senate, it would have gone to the House of Representatives, and in that way we should have had concurrent action. I think we might have it without this joint committee, and perhaps quite as well; but the House of Representatives have desired a joint committee on this subject; we all desire joint action, coöperation. All the friends of the Union, all men who desire to see harmony and good feeling restored between all parts of the Union, must desire harmonious action between the different branches of Congress and all departments of the Government.

The House of Representatives thought, in sending us this resolution, that the best way to accomplish that was through a joint committee. If I supposed it divested the Senate of its constitutional prerogative to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, I could not support it. I never would have supported this resolution as it came from the House of Representatives, because it would not bear investigation. It is not susceptible, in my judgment, of the construction which my friend from Rhode Island in his liberality was disposed to put upon it, when he suggested that it might be questionable whether credentials went to this committee. As the resolution was framed, and as it came from the House of Representatives, it provided that until a report should have been made by this committee and finally acted on by Congress, "no member shall be received into either House from any of the so-called confederate States," expressly providing that no member should be received in either House; "and all papers relating to the representation of said States shall be referred to said committee without debate," sending the credentials to a joint committee; that is, raising a committee of the two Houses to determine whether persons would be entitled to seats in either House, which would certainly be a very extraordinary proceeding, and one not warranted by the Constitution. But as the resolution is altered I do not think it susceptible of the construction which the Senator from Indiana puts upon it. I should have said nothing but for his remarks, and I have only said this much to preclude the idea that I would vote for a resolution which took from either House the constitutional prerogative which the Constitution in express terms has conferred.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to offer a proviso by way of amendment, and I will only say that without such proviso I cannot vote for the resolution. My amendment is, after the words "bill or otherwise" to insert:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as to limit, restrict, or impair the right of each House at all times to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I certainly think this amendment unnecessary, but I have no sort of objection to it. It does not alter the resolution. For one, I am entirely willing that this proviso shall go upon the resolution; but certainly there is no necessity for it.

Mr. SUMNER. It is simply introducing the words of the Constitution. Nothing in this resolution, I take it, can set aside the Constitution. The Senator from Connecticut does not suppose that a concurrent resolution of this body can overturn the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. DIXON. Of course not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw that amendment. I do not see any need of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will do no harm.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will do no harm, and it would do no harm to provide that this resolution shall not reduce the salary of the President of the United States. This amendment is quite as unnecessary as that would be.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I wish to ask the friends of this resolution if it is contemplated that this committee shall take evidence and report that evidence to the two Houses. If they are only to take what is open to every member of the Senate, the fact that the rebellion has been suppressed; the fact that the President of the United States has appointed officers to collect the taxes, and in some instances judges and other officers; that he has sent the post office into all the States: that there have been found enough individuals loyal to the country to accept the offices; the fact that the President has issued his proclamation to all these States appointing provisional governors; that they have all elected conventions; that the conventions have rescinded the ordinances of secession; that most of them have amended their constitutions and abolished slavery; and the Legislatures of some of them have passed the amendment to the Constitution on the subject of slavery—if they are only to take these facts which are open and clear to us all, I can see no necessity for such a committee. My principal objection to the resolution is, that this committee can give us no information which we do not now possess, coupled with the fact that the loyal conservative men of the United States, North, South, East, and West do most earnestly desire that we shall so act that there shall be no longer a doubt that we are the United States of America in full accord and harmony with each other.

I know it has been said that the President had no authority to do these things. I read the Constitution and the laws of this country differently. He is to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed;" he is to suppress insurrection and rebellion. The power is put in his hands, and I do not see why, when he marches into a rebel State, he has not authority to put down a rebel government and put up a government that is friendly to the United States, and in accordance with it; I do not see why he cannot do that while the war goes on, and I do not see why he may not do it after the war is over. The people in those States lie at the mercy of the nation. I see no usurpation in what he has done, and if the work is well done, I, for one, am ready to accept it. Are we to send out a commission to see what the men whom he has appointed have done? It is said that they are not to be relied on; that they have been guilty of treason, and we will not trust them. I hope that no such ideas will prevail here. I think this will be a cold shock to the warm feelings of the nation for restoration, for equal privileges and equal rights. They were in insurrection. We have suppressed that insurrection. They are now States of the Union; and if they come here according to the laws of the States, they are entitled, in my judgment, to representation, and we have no right to refuse it. They are in a minority, and they would be in a minority even if they meant now what they felt when they raised their arms against the Government; but they do not, and of those whom they will send here to represent them, nineteen out of twenty will be just as loyal as any of us—even some of those who took up arms against us.

I really hope to see some one move a modification of the test oath, so that those who have repented of their disloyalty may not be excluded, for I really believe that a great many of those who took up arms honestly and wished to carry out the doctrine of secession, and who have succumbed under the force of our arms and the great force of public opinion, can be trusted a great deal more than those who did not fight at all.

To conclude, gentlemen, I see no great harm in this resolution except the procrastination that will result from it, and that will give us nothing but what we have before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. Dixon,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Nesmith, Riddle, Salisbury, Stockton, and Wright—12.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Creswell, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Spurgeon, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—31.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Henderson, McDougall, NYC, and Stewart—6.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The amendments which have been made to the resolution remove many of the most serious objections which existed in my mind to it as it came from the House of Representatives; but there is still one objection to it, and that is the inequality of the Senate with the other House upon the committee to consider these great questions, which is insuperable in my mind, and constrains me to vote against it, and to separate on this occasion from many of those with whom I usually act on such questions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know from those more conversant with the practice of these committees, how a vote is to be taken in committee, whether it is to be taken per capita, or whether the members of each branch vote separately. If the vote is to be taken per capita, we put ourselves entirely in the power of the House of Representatives, they having nine members of the committee and we only six. As the resolution stands, with that disparity, I shall be obliged to vote against it.

Mr. GRIMES. I think we can select six who will take care of the interests of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. But they are to make a report; the object is to make a report, and that report will enable us to act understandingly on a subject over which we have exclusive jurisdiction; but it may be a report against the opinion of all the members of the Senate on the committee. I think, therefore, it would be better for the Senate to reconsider the question as to the number of members of the committee, so that whatever may come from the committee will be the judgment of a majority of an equal number, six or nine, of each House.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the committee consisted of an equal number from each House we should be in the same predicament, without a report. Neither House would have a majority, and a report could not be made without the assent of some members from the other House.

Mr. JOHNSON. But this is no report, and I want a report.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is competent for the Senate to receive the views of a minority of a committee at any time.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not binding in any way. The object is to get a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the resolution as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 33, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Creswell, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wado, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Dixon, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stockton, and Wright—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Henderson, McDougall, and Nesmith—5.

So the resolution, as amended, was concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and report whether they, or any of them, are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. COWAN. I beg leave to call up for consideration a resolution of inquiry that I offered yesterday, requesting the President to furnish information as to the condition of the southern States of the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator waive that motion to allow me to withdraw some papers?

Mr. CHANDLER. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the memorial of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin, praying for indemnity for the illegal seizure of property in the Navigators' Islands. No adverse action has ever taken place. The parties desire leave to withdraw the papers, I believe, with a view of presenting them elsewhere.

Leave was granted.

CONDITION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President—

Mr. COWAN. I think my motion has precedence. I have not yielded the floor to other motions.

Mr. WILSON. A motion to adjourn was made.

Mr. COWAN. That motion has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is certainly before the body.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a motion which can be disposed of in a moment.

Mr. COWAN. My resolution ought not to take more than a moment. It is the first resolution of inquiry that I have seen attempted to be throttled in this way, in my experience in this body. If the Senate do not require the information that this resolution seeks to give to them, it is proper that it should be met squarely and voted down. In fact I have never before seen a resolution of inquiry here invite even to debate. I desire that the body should consider it; I offered it respectfully, and I desire for it a respectful consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. CONNESS. What is the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. COWAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate information of the state of that portion of the Union lately in rebellion; whether the rebellion has been suppressed and the United States put again in possession of the States in which it existed; whether the United States courts are restored, post offices reestablished, and the revenues collected; and also whether the people of those States have reorganized their State governments, and whether they are yielding obedience to the laws and Government of the United States.

The motion to take up the resolution was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend the resolution by inserting at the end of it these words:

And at the same time to furnish to the Senate copies of such reports as he may have received from officers or agents appointed to visit this portion of the Union, including especially any reports of Hon. John Covode and Major General Carl Schurz.

Mr. COWAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the power of the Senator to accept the amendment, the Senate not having acted on the resolution; the amendment is therefore a part of the resolution.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 23) to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The bill (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia" was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

IOWA SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 18) granting certain public property to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of Iowa, was read twice by its title.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that joint resolution at this time; and on that motion I desire simply to say that the resolution merely grants the right of the United States to certain barracks at Camp Kinsman, near Davenport, in the State of Iowa, to an orphans' asylum, an asylum established for the benefit of the orphans of soldiers, and they are now in possession. The barracks were erected by the State, but were taken possession of by the United States and occupied by the military authorities of the United States until recently. By the reading of the resolution it will be discovered that it only grants what little territory there may be there and the lumber of which the barracks are constructed. The orphans are already in possession, and I am told by one of my colleagues in the House of Representatives that there are two or three hundred of them, a number in excess even of the accommodations the barracks afford.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The object of this joint resolution certainly meets my approbation, but I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that if it is passed without consideration it will set a precedent for numerous just such cases. Charitable institutions all over the United States are applying for barracks and other public property.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that if the Senator proposes to object to the consideration of the joint resolution, debate is not in order. If the Senator debates the resolution, he will be considered as waiving objection, and it will be open to discussion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that on a motion to proceed to the consideration of a resolution, it is proper to state reasons why we should not proceed to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is not yet properly before the Senate. The question now is simply whether there is an objection to its present consideration. It came from the House of Representatives, has had two readings without objection, and the Senator from Iowa asks for its present consideration. To that any Senator may object, and if objection be made debate is not in order; but if objection be waived, of course debate is in order upon the question of its reference or its passage.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Do I understand the President that the resolution is before the Senate on its passage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not at all. It is before the Senate for consideration, unless its consideration be objected to. That is, it is before the Senate to be considered, either to be referred, or passed, or otherwise disposed of.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to refer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no need to refer it; it will be laid aside on objection.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But I suppose it is competent to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I make that motion, and now I will say what I desired to say, which was simply that this will be opening the door for a very large class of cases, and I submit to the Senator from Iowa whether we had not better at once have a general bill donating to the several States where they are situated, or to charitable institutions that desire to take possession of this property, the different barracks that are no longer needed by the Government. I have no objection to the object of this joint resolution; I do not know but that the best disposition which can be made of this species of public property of the United States in the loyal States will be to turn it over in this way; but I assure the Senator from Iowa that there will be a great many such applications as this. If the Senate is prepared to pass the measure without consideration, if Senators think proper to let it go through and establish the precedent, I shall not object, having called the attention of the Senate to it. I now withdraw my motion to refer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 12, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Superintendent of Public Printing, asking additional appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN SEAMEN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting an abstract of the returns of collectors of customs, pursuant to the act of May 28, 1796, for the relief and protection of American seamen, during the year ending September 30, 1865; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN REFUGEE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting accounts of superintendents and agents in charge of southern refugee Indians, for the first quarter of 1865; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER also presented a memorial of the Union State Central Committee of Pennsylvania, asking certain amendments to the Constitution of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Governor of the State of Virginia, transmitting an act of the General Assembly of that State entitled "An act to repeal the second section of an act passed on the 13th day of May, 1862, entitled 'An act giving the consent of the Legislature of Virginia to the formation and erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State;' also repealing the act of January 31, 1863, entitled 'An act giving the consent of the State of Virginia to the county of Berkeley being admitted into and becoming part of the State of West Virginia;' also repealing the act of February 4, 1863, entitled 'An act giving consent to the admission of certain counties into the new State of West Virginia, upon certain conditions,' and withdrawing consent to the transfer of jurisdiction over the several counties in each of said acts mentioned;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES presented certain papers in reference to an election in the sixteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution in reference to a committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call upon committees for reports, beginning with the select committee on the death of the late President, Abraham Lincoln.

The committees were called, but no reports were made.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to call up the resolution I submitted yesterday in relation to mineral lands, and which was not then acted on. I have modified it so that it is now a resolution of inquiry.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or such other committee as shall have charge of the subject, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting for the action of the House a bill to regulate mining on the public lands of the United States, embracing the following provisions in substance:

1. That the fee of all lands of the United States, containing gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, or coal, shall remain perpetually in the United States, unless divested by virtue of words of an act of Congress, expressly applicable to mineral lands.

2. That the privilege of discovering, developing, and extracting the natural wealth of the mines shall be open and free to all citizens of the United States, and to all aliens who shall have declared their intentions to become citizens; and the rights they shall acquire by virtue hereof may be disposed of at will; but in both cases, of acquisition and of disposition, always subject to the regulations by this or by any subsequent act of Congress provided.

3. The actual discoverer of any such mine, or mineral deposit, to designate by suitable mark a point on the lode, or deposit, as the center, and to be entitled to claim, occupy, and develop, or dispose of, one mineral section (or claim) each way from the center, without other cost to him than the fee of the recorder for recording his description of the lode or mine, and certifying his claim thereto, and the sections and claims to be consecutively numbered each way from the center.

4. Each mineral section (or claim) to consist of five hundred lineal feet, in the direction of the lode, and of—feet on each side of the lode: Provided, In no case to exceed one half the distance to the nearest lode on either side thereof, whether discovered or not at the time the claim is made or is transferred. In case of intersecting lodes, the claimant first working the intersection to work both lodes where conjoined, but no further.

5. Claimants subsequent to the discoverer to be entitled to claim in the order of filing their claims with the recorder, and on payment to the recorder, for the use of the United States, and in addition to the recorder's fee, of the sum of—dollars for each claim, on any one lode, to be allowed to be entered by the same person.

6. Transfers of claims to be by deed signed, acknowledged, and delivered, and stamped with the proper revenue stamp, in the same manner as deeds of real estate, and subject to the same revenue laws, and to be valid against innocent purchasers only from date of filing for record.

7. Record books, and surveyors and recorders of mineral claims to be provided for, and offices for the record thereof established in proper districts, compensation to be limited to fees, and the fees regulated.

8. All claims to mineral sections to be considered abandoned, and to revert to the United States, and to become liable anew to claim, if not opened and development commenced in good faith within—years from the filing of the claim, and if not thereafter worked continuously for at least—months in every year, whether by the original claimant or by any assignee; the new claimant, in such cases of abandonment, to be allowed at his own request, and upon proper payment as before, to file his claim, alleging abandonment and by what claimant abandoned. Cases of contest to be decided by the courts, by the usual course of law, and at the suit of either party to determine the right of possession. No abandonment to be presumed in case of succession to a claim by a person under age, after the death of the claimant of record, until the lapse of time of abandonment after attaining his majority.

9. The claimant in possession to make returns, after development commenced, to the United States assessor, of the amount of gold and silver obtained, and of the quantity and value of other valuable products of his mineral sections, respectively, and of the actual cost of production of the same, and to pay on the net balance of value to the collector of the district a tax equal to the income tax, for the time being, fixed by law; and the amount of tax due the United States to be a lien on such mineral section until paid by the same, or a subsequent claimant or assignee.

10. These regulations to apply to all discoveries, and to all claims filed for record on and after January 1, 1866; and saving the rights of assignees for value to all claims on lodes, of which the development in good faith shall not then have been commenced. But discoverers and claimants, and their assignees, who shall then have begun the development in good faith of mineral sections to which their claim is recognized as valid by the actual mining regulations in force in any mining district, or having such claims on lodes actually developed, to be confirmed in the extent of their claims thus obtained; but otherwise subject to the same limitations of title, payments, duties, and liabilities as if their several sections so obtained were now first obtained under these regulations, and directly from the United States; original certificates of claims, as also upon abandoned claims, to be issued by the United States.

11. The Commissioner of Public Lands, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to be charged with the administration of the laws regulating mining, and to be authorized to establish proper regulations to carry them into effect; except that so much as applies to the returns and assessments and collection for revenue purposes, shall be administered and regulations established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and any fraud or deception in making returns for revenue purposes shall cause the forfeiture and reversion to the United States of all the rights of the claimant guilty thereof, and the claim affected thereby may thereafter be treated as abandoned.

12. The payments for claims, and the internal revenue collected on the mineral products aforesaid, shall be separately accounted for at the Treasury, and until the Union Pacific railroad shall be completed, shall constitute a fund to be appropriated pro tanto to the payment of interest accruing on the bonds of the United States issued or to be issued in aid of that work.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for securing to the soldiers who enlisted in 1861 and 1862, and served the Government in the late war against the rebellion, such additional bounties as will make, as nearly as can be, their bounties equal to those paid to soldiers who enlisted in 1864, according to the time of service.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. GRINNELL submitted the following:

Resolved, That to afford equitable compensation to postmasters in the new States, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be requested to inquire into the expediency of amending the postal laws by a substitution of commission in lieu of salary.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. RAYMOND. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to present to the House, certificates signed by the Governor, and bearing the seal of the State of Tennessee, certifying that certain persons therein named are elected in due conformity with the laws of that State and of the United States, and are therefore entitled to their seats as members of this House. I present these papers simply that they may come before the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a question of order. I do not mean to oppose the main object of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND.] But I hold that this is not a question of privilege. The State of Tennessee is not known to this House nor to Congress. If the gentleman will put his proposition in another shape, and not present it as a question of privilege, I will not object to it. But if he presents it as a question of privilege, I make the point of order that it is not such a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] The Chair has examined the precedents of previous Congresses, especially since the rebellion commenced, and finds that the usage of the House has been uniform that claimants of seats have their credentials presented as a question of privilege. It is then for the House to determine what shall be done with them. The presentation of the credentials does not involve the question of their reference. It is for the House to determine whether they shall be laid on the table or referred. But a claimant to a seat, with papers prima facie indicating his election, is entitled, as a question of privilege, to have them presented.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As I understand, the object of the gentleman from New York is to get the papers before the House, with the view of having them referred to the special joint committee of fifteen, when appointed.

Mr. RAYMOND. I will explain my object. As I have already stated, I propose simply to bring these papers before the House, and get them in a position to be acted upon. There are, in my judgment, many considerations connected with the position of the State of Tennessee, with her past conduct during the rebellion, and her present attitude toward the national Government, which commend the case of her Representatives to early consideration on the part of this House. I do not wish to make any remarks upon the subject to explain what those considerations are. I am quite willing to move such a disposition of these papers as may meet the general wishes of my friends around me, whether it be to lay them upon the table, send them to the Committee of Elections, or refer them to the joint committee of fifteen, when that committee shall be appointed. The disposition which may be made of them is a matter of indifference to me. I will move, to see whether it meets the views of the House, that these papers, together with other credentials from the same State now on the files of the Clerk, be referred to the joint committee of fifteen, when the same shall be appointed. On that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the reading of the credentials.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire that all the certificates shall be read, or only one?

Mr. JOHNSON. One will be sufficient, if they are alike.

Mr. RAYMOND. I understand that the certificates are precisely similar in form.

The Clerk read, as follows:

STATE OF TENNESSEE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
NASHVILLE, November 13, 1865.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

I, William G. Brownlow, Governor of the State of Tennessee, do hereby certify that, at a general election, opened and held in said State, on the first Thursday, August, A. D. 1865, for the purpose of electing Representatives of the State of Tennessee in the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the United States, Horace Maynard, of the county of Knox, was regularly elected, in accordance with the laws of the State of Tennessee and of the United States, Representative in said Congress from the second congressional district, composed of the counties of Claiborne, Union, Knox, Campbell, Scott, Morgan, Anderson, Blount, Monroe, Polk, McMinn, Bradley, and Roane.

And I do therefore commission the said Horace Maynard Representative in Congress as aforesaid, during the term, and with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments appertaining.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the great seal of the State [L.S.] of Tennessee to be affixed, at the department in the city of Nashville, this 13th day of November, 1865. W. G. BROWNLOW.

By the Governor:
A. J. FLETCHER, Secretary of State.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg leave to make an appeal to my honorable friend from New York to withdraw his demand for the previous question that I may make a suggestion which I hope may meet his acceptance, and thereby avoid any controversy at present with regard to this subject, while it will perhaps accomplish the object which he has in view.

Mr. RAYMOND. I waive, for the present, my demand for the previous question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely wish to make an appeal to the gentleman. I do not desire to defeat his purpose to demand the previous question. I ask him to consider the propriety of substituting for the motion which he has offered something like this:

Resolved, That the joint committee of fifteen, when appointed, be instructed to inquire and report to this House whether the State of Tennessee, hitherto declared in insurrection against the Government of the United States, has organized a constitutional government, republican in form, and conformable to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and is entitled to representation in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman [Mr. FINCK] please, I am addressing myself to the gentleman from New York at present, and I ask him to consider the propriety of presenting his proposition in the way suggested, for the reason that it must be obvious to the gentleman's mind, on a moment's reflection, that to receive and refer credentials of these gentlemen, as Representatives from the State of Tennessee, will be to declare by implication that Tennessee is entitled to representation in Congress, without inquiry into the fact whether in Tennessee there is a constitutional State government. We want the joint committee first to report on that question as a question of fact. That is a question for the Congress of the United States, and it can only be decided by Congress, as the gentleman knows. If Congress decide there is such State government, then I am, for one, ready to admit her Representatives, if duly elected and qualified.

Mr. FINCK. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do, for a suggestion.

Mr. FINCK. I wish, as my colleague has done already, to make a suggestion. I suggest that the gentleman from New York withdraw his motion, and; instead, move that the gentlemen, whose credentials have just been presented and read, shall be at once sworn in as members of this House.

Mr. RAYMOND. That I must decline to do. In reply to the point, or rather the request, made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM,] it is due to frankness to say, that for my own part I have no such doubts as those he professes for himself. I do not personally, therefore, see the necessity for making the inquiry which he specifies.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will excuse me. I do not express myself as having doubts. I have no opinion to express on that subject at present; but I ask the gentleman to consider that the Congress of the United States, in the progress of the rebellion, has set one remarkable precedent for our consideration touching this matter. Virginia was declared in insurrection, as was Tennessee. The Congress of the United States, when the question was raised whether the State of Virginia had reorganized, decided that question as a Congress; and afterward it resulted that a new State, formed within the State of Virginia by the consent of such reorganized State government, was admitted to representation in the Senate and House as a State of the Union.

Mr. DRIGGS. I rise to a question of order: that the resolution appointing a committee of fifteen expressly declares, by the consent of this House, all papers relating to the seats of members from the southern States shall be referred to that committee without debate.

Several MEMBERS. That resolution has not passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that the resolution, by its terms, requires the concurrence of both Houses before it can go into force. This House has intimated what is its desire, but the resolution is not binding on either House until agreed to by both. What will be its language when it shall be agreed to by both Houses the Chair cannot now determine. Matters may be referred to them, but the resolution is not binding on either House as yet.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that his resolution is precisely the resolution appointing that committee. I do not see any particular objection to refer it.

Mr. GRIDER. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel myself otherwise than as inclined to organize the House according to the ordinary way, and without delay. The party who presents his claim to a seat upon this floor has had his credentials read. There can be no objection to them. They are in form. It is a plain question whether Mr. Maynard, who has been a member of this House for years, I think during the whole rebellion, shall be again entitled to his seat upon this floor, with his colleagues, under a regular certificate of election from the Governor of Tennessee, and having been regularly elected by the people of that State. And there is nobody contesting his right to a seat. I hope, therefore, that we will go at once to the proposition whether Mr. Maynard and his colleagues shall be permitted to take their seats or not.

Mr. RAYMOND. I renew my demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania: I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York which I think will meet his views entirely.

Mr. RAYMOND. I withdraw the demand for the previous question to hear the suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. His proposition proposes to refer the matter to a joint committee. Now, the Constitution provides that we shall be the judges of the qualification of our own members. I suggest, therefore, that he shall modify his motion so as to refer to a committee of this House of nine members.

Mr. JOHNSON. I inquire of the Chair whether a motion to refer to the Committee of Elections will take precedence of a motion to refer to a committee which has not yet a legal existence?

The SPEAKER. If the resolution of the gentleman from New York be voted down it will be in order, but not till then.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York. As the joint committee has not yet been appointed, and as the condition upon which that committee is to act, if appointed, is not yet known, would it not be well to postpone the consideration of this subject for one week until that committee is formed? If that motion would be in order, I will move to postpone the whole subject one week.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. It is that the gentleman from New York cannot yield the floor any further without he yields it unconditionally.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may yield it for the purpose of personal explanation, or explanation of the pending measure. The Chair will have the rule read.

The Clerk read the rule, as follows:

"While a member is occupying the floor he may yield it to another for an explanation of the pending measure, as well as for personal explanation."

Mr. RAYMOND. Personally, I have no choice as to which committee these credentials should go. If I could follow the bent of my own inclinations I would move their reference to the Election Committee, which I regard as the proper committee to take charge of them. Nor do I suppose our action is at all bound by the concurrent resolution which passed this House, and remains without the action of the Senate. But I feel it is due, out of deference to the opinions members of this House have expressed upon the subject, and also to the action the Senate may take, to move a reference to the joint committee. This subject will be duly considered by that committee, and then it will be open to our action.

As to the matter being postponed one week, I will say that my object is to secure the earliest possible action upon the papers and the questions they involve.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield to me to make an inquiry?

Mr. RAYMOND. I will.

Mr. SMITH. I understood the gentleman, when he presented the credentials, to say that the gentlemen claiming seats from Tennessee occupied a different position from others. No other credentials from any of the States lately in rebellion have been presented. These come regularly, and the gentleman suggested that his own preference would be to have them referred to the Committee of Elections. Now, would it not be best, and will not the House consent, under the peculiar circumstances, to refer these papers to the Committee of Elections? That strikes me as the proper committee, because this is a very peculiar case.

The State of Tennessee has done everything that the Government of the United States would demand. She has repudiated the rebel debt; she has passed the constitutional amendment; she has rendered null and void all the ordinances of secession; and she has sent here to represent her men who have been in the war on the side of the Government from 1862 to its close, and who have shown their devotion to the Union to be equal to that of any man in either House of Congress. Every one of those who have been elected can come before the bar of the House and take the oath prescribed by the laws of the country.

I ask the gentleman from New York to move the reference of the credentials to the Committee of Elections, that they may be acted on at once, and those gentlemen received into this body.

Mr. RAYMOND. I renew my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is a division of the question in order?

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. On the question of reception and reference.

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is entirely too late to raise the question of reception.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 126, nays 42, not voting 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, DeFrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—126.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Chanler, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Tabor, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Voorhees, and Winfield—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Culver, Farnsworth, Grinnell, Harris, Jones, Kasson, Pomeroy, Sitzgreaves, Stillwell, Strouse, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—14.

So the credentials were referred to the joint committee, when appointed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That, until otherwise ordered, N. G. Taylor, Horace Maynard, William B. Stokes, Edmund Cooper, William B. Campbell, Samuel M. Arnell, Isaac R. Hawkins, and John W. Leftwich be invited to occupy seats in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYMOND. I rise to a point of order. I would inquire whether a resolution of this sort is in order?

The SPEAKER. Not, excepting by unanimous consent. It is not a question of privilege, but the Chair would not overrule it unless some gentleman objected to it.

Mr. BROOKS. I will not object to that resolution if the gentleman will modify it so as to include all the southern delegations. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to the resolution.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ELDRIDGE submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That there is no warrant or authority in the Constitution of the United States for any State or States to secede, and that all resolves or ordinances to that end or for that purpose are absolutely null and void; and that the war having defeated the attempt to thus divide and break up the Union, it is of vital importance to the Republic and to all the States thereof that the States recently in revolt, and each and every one of them, should resume their appropriate and constitutional position and functions in the Union without delay; and to this end, laying aside all party feeling and all personal or other animosity, waiving all minor differences and seeking earnestly to maintain and preserve the Union of our fathers, we will cordially sustain and support the President in every and all constitutional efforts and policy of restoration, believing that thereby the political, commercial, financial, and general prosperity of the whole country will be most substantially and permanently subserved.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw the previous question for the purpose of debate?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Not quite.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then I hope the House will not second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I call for tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. ELDRIDGE, and WASHBURN, of Illinois, were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 108.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, rising to debate the resolution it went over under the rule.

PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SLOAN submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas N. G. Taylor, Horace Maynard, William B. Stokes, Edmund Cooper, William B. Campbell, Samuel M. Arnell, Isaac R. Hawkins, and John W. Leftwich, have maintained their allegiance to the United States throughout the late rebellion, some of them bearing arms in the United States service, appear to have been elected by the people of Tennessee to represent certain congressional districts thereof, and are now present with their credentials, claiming seats as members of this House: Therefore,

Resolved, That said claimants be allowed the privileges of the floor of the House pending their claim to seats.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 63, not voting 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Cook, DeFrees, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Grinnell, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Blow, Brooks, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Kasson, Kerr, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, McCluer, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitzgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Stillwell, Tabor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Voorhees, Whaley, Winfield, and Woodbridge—63.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Bergen, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Conkling, Cullom, Culver, Delano, Donnelly, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Harris, Hart, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, James Humphrey, Jones, Lynch, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Strouse, Taylor, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—29.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. JOHNSON said: My colleague, Mr. BOYER, has been called away from his desk by the intelligence of the death of a member of his family. If he had been here, he would undoubtedly have voted "no."

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid upon the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, Messrs. Nathaniel G. Taylor, Horace Maynard, William B. Stokes, Edmund Cooper, William B. Campbell, Samuel M. Arnell, Isaac R. Hawkins, and John W. Leftwich be invited to occupy seats in the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The question was upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. FINCK. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. I would appeal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to withdraw his motion to lay on the table, and let us take a vote directly on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. There are now two undebatable motions pending: the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and the call for the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object to any withdrawal of the motion to lay on the table.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. WILSON to lay the resolution of Mr. COBB upon the table.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 125, not voting 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baker, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Sidney Clark, Cobb, Deming, Dixon, Farnsworth, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Kelso, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, McClurg, Mercur, Moulton, Price, Schenck, Spalding, Starr, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Banks, Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blow, Brooks, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, DeFrees, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitzgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Stevens, Stillwell, Tabor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—125.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Blaine, Boyer, Reader W. Clarke, Culver, Eliot, Harris, Jones, Marston, Patterson, Pomeroy, Strouse, Taylor, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—16.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Upon this question Mr. SPALDING called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 132, nays 35, not voting 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baker, Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blow, Brooks, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, DeFrees, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Miller, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitzgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Stevens, Stillwell, Tabor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Voorhees, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Whaley, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—132.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Baker, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clark, Deming, Dixon, Farnsworth, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Kelley, Kelso, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, McCullough, Mercur, Moulton, Price, Schenck, Spalding, Starr, Warner, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Williams, and James F. Wilson—35.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Boyer, Culver, Harris, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jones, Marston, McClurg, Pomeroy, Strouse, Taylor, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—15.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Resolutions from the State of Wisconsin being still in order,

Mr. PAINE rose.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I ask my colleague to give way to me one moment, that I may offer a resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I yield to my colleague for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] can be entertained by unanimous consent. If objection be made, the Chair will be obliged to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] as resolutions from that State are the regular order.

TAXATION OF DOMESTIC WINES.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire whether it was not the intention of Congress, in excepting wines made from currants, berries, and rhubarb, from the specific tax, to exclude them from the payment of any tax; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] that the House adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] to allow him to offer a resolution.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations shall be the same as was paid to the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. SLOAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I renew my motion to adjourn.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman to yield one moment to allow me to introduce a joint resolution.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will do so.

WILLIAM REYNOLDS AND M. B. WOOLSEY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list.

Mr. SLOAN. Is this in order under the regular call of the States?

The SPEAKER. It is not, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SLOAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the joint resolution cannot be received. The question recurs on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] to yield to me for one moment, that I may introduce a simple resolution of reference.

Mr. SLOAN. I object, and demand the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was not agreed to.

NAVIGATION OF THE LAKES, ETC.

Mr. PAINE submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of revising the laws regulating the commerce and navigation of the lakes and rivers on the northern frontier of the United States, so as to remove all unnecessary restraint upon such commerce and navigation, and at the same time provide additional safeguards against frauds upon the revenue; and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to move an amendment to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done at present, the previous question being demanded.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

FURNISHING THE PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

Mr. WILSON was, on his motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of F. Afton, of St. Josephs, Missouri, praying for the passage of a law prohibiting the circulation of gold and silver as a currency, making legal-tender Treasury notes the permanent internal currency of the country, and that gold and silver be purchased and reserved for Government purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. POLAND presented the petition of John Nabb and Sarah Nabb, of the city of Burlington, Vermont, praying for compensation for property belonging to them in Charleston, South Carolina, which property was wasted and destroyed during the bombardment and occupation of that city by the forces of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CLARK presented the petition of William Cook, praying for compensation for the use by the Government of a lot of land owned by him in the city of Washington, being lot No. 42 in square No. 184; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATORS FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am requested by the delegation from Louisiana to present a remonstrance against the admission of certain persons as Senators from that State. I ask that it be read and laid on the table. I presume it will be followed up by a more regular remonstrance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, December 9, 1865.

Received Washington, December 10, 1865.

To JACOB BARKER and others,

Members of Congress from Louisiana:

Joint resolution—

Mr. GRIMES. I object to the reading of that paper. It is not addressed to the Senate. It seems it is addressed to Jacob Barker, and presented here to influence the action of the Senate.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I take it for granted there is no just objection to it although it is addressed to Jacob Barker. The delegation from Louisiana request that I shall file it here. Agreeably to that request, I do so. I ask for no action upon it, supposing really that they will follow it by a more formal remonstrance. It can do no harm to allow it to be received and laid on the table.

Mr. GRIMES. It will be time enough to read the remonstrance whenever they shall present a more formal one. In the first place, it is a violation of the rules of this body that any petition shall be read except a petition that emanates from a State. Then, in the next place, it is not addressed to this body at all, but is addressed to Jacob Barker and other persons who claim to be the representatives of the State of Louisiana, and is signed by a man who has already certified under his own signature that certain other persons have been legally elected as Senators of the United States from this same State of Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that, under the rule of the Senate, when a paper is presented and its reading asked for, if the reading be objected to, it is to be decided by the Senate without debate. The Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky to present a paper and ask for its reading, to which the Senator from Iowa objects. The question is, Shall the paper be read?

The question being put, the Senate refused to allow the paper to be read.

The communication was ordered to lie on the table.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Francis A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelly, praying to be reimbursed for money advanced and materials furnished in the construction of light-houses in California and Oregon, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of John Agnall be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. MORGAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to establish a coinage department in the United States assay office in the city of New York.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 31) to reimburse the State of Missouri for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and provisioning militia forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BROWN. As that is a very important bill, I ask that it may be ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) submitting to the Legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 32) to prevent the absence of territorial officers from their official duties; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence and clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COMPENSATION DUE SENATOR COLLAMER.

Mr. FOOT. I offer the following resolution, which, under the rules of the Senate, goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Mary N. Collamer, widow of Hon. Jacob Collamer, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, the amount of compensation due the deceased at the time of his death.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules this resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

TELEGRAPHIC CONGRESSIONAL REPORTS.

Mr. GRIMES. I offer the following resolution of inquiry, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library on the part of the Senate be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate what action, if any, may be necessary to secure more accurate reports of the proceedings of this body for publication by the Associated Press.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. It has been suggested to me that I ought to insert the word "telegraphic" before the word "reports." I do not know but that that amendment ought to be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is in the hands of the Senator for purposes of modification. If he requests that modification to be made, the resolution will be so modified.

Mr. GRIMES. This resolution is simply a resolution of inquiry, directing the Committee on the Library on the part of the Senate to ascertain whether some steps may not be taken to secure accurate reports of the proceedings of the Senate. I suppose it is known to everybody that the first impressions that are created on the public mind as to our transactions here are created by the short telegraphic dispatches that are sent to the press of New York and also published in our city papers here; for, as I understand, the reports that are published in the morning papers of Washington are the same that are sent forward the preceding evening to be published in the papers in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and elsewhere. I need not remind Senators that those reports are exceedingly inaccurate, that they give no proper idea whatever to the public as to what business is transacted here, or as to what may have been the arguments that were submitted by gentlemen who were for or against any given proposition. I think I need do no more to convince anybody of that fact than to refer to the telegraphic dispatches that were sent from this city last night as to the proceedings of Congress yesterday. I confess that I voted yesterday with the majority of the Senate on the question then before us; but the arguments submitted by Senators who advocated the side with which I voted—for I was a silent member then as I am usually—seem to have been withheld, while arguments that were submitted by other gentlemen are very copiously given. I do not say that this was in consequence of any improper conduct on the part of the telegraphic reporter; I do not believe that it was, for I do not believe that any man can sit here in our gallery and undertake to give an abstract of a speech that a Senator is delivering here, because he cannot tell what is the drift and scope of the speech, what it is likely to be, whether it is to be one minute long or thirty minutes long, and he may put down upon his paper that part of the remarks that may be most immaterial, and that is sent forward to New York and elsewhere as being the drift and scope and extent of the speech; whereas if we could make an arrangement with a competent reporter to take up the speeches after they have been delivered during the day and make out an abstract from them, taking a whole speech together, having heard the whole of it, then we might convey to the public mind some proper idea of what was said and what was done here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I happen to be a member of the Committee on the Library; and I wish to say in advance that though I am perfectly willing to inquire into the matter, I do not see that there is anything we can possibly do with reference to it. The Associated Press and the telegraphic reports are entirely independent of us; we cannot control them in any way. They report what they please, as much as they please, and as little as they please, and we have no remedy that I am aware of, although I hope that my friend, the chairman of the committee, will be able to discover one, because in my judgment a remedy is very much needed. With regard to myself, individually, I do not know that I have ever had the honor of having anything that I have said correctly reported. Very little that I have said here has ever been reported at all by the Associated Press. Of that I do not complain; that probably is owing to the worthlessness of the matter; but the trouble with regard to myself and many other members has been that there was no idea conveyed of what we did say. Now, take for instance the debate which took place yesterday: my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] who took one side of the question pretty much alone, was reported at length; while with regard to myself, I believe the first remark was that Mr. FESSENDEN was opposed to doing anything in support of the Administration—that is about the amount of it, though it is not exactly so expressed—and for the singular reason that the Senate was part of the Administration! I think Senators will bear me witness that I did not say any such thing, or convey any such idea.

I must say that, so far as I have observed them, the reports of the Associated Press have been utterly worthless, and worse than worthless, for they either convey no idea to the country of what takes place here, or if they do it is generally an incorrect idea. I do not know to what this is owing. I presume there is no design in it. I have been told that certain members take care to write out an abstract of their own remarks and to furnish it to the telegraphic reporter, and that such abstracts are sent when furnished. If that is the case, the result is that where a speech is thus prepared for publication, the reply to it does not stand an equal chance with the speech itself of being disseminated.

The effect upon Senators, however, is of no consequence comparatively; the effect upon the country is of great consequence. The debate yesterday was very full for the subject-matter, but as it has gone out to the country and all over the country, the inevitable inference would be that we were charged here with unfriendliness to the Administration and not supporting the President's policy, and that the only reply we made was substantially that we did not want to support it, for that is about the amount of it—an utterly false and untrue statement, as all gentlemen present must know.

While I say that I am not aware that we can do anything to help ourselves in this matter, it is well that the country should understand, in the first place, that the Senate is not in any degree responsible for the reports that are made of its proceedings by the Associated Press, and in the next place that the Senate disclaims the correctness of the reports as made. If they go out from this body in the way they have gone out heretofore, to the extent of my observation, it should be understood that the Senate does not consider itself as represented in any way by the reports that are thus made. I certainly do not wish to be so considered, because really while I pay very little attention and care very little about being reported at all, I do not want to be put entirely in a false position before the country, but I do not see that I can help myself.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I agree entirely in the object of my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] in the introduction of this resolution. I introduced a similar resolution in the last Congress with only this difference, that my resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing, and this is directed to the Committee on the Library. But I do not agree with my honorable friend from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] in saying that we have no power in our hands to correct this great evil, for I admit that it has been in the proceedings of the Senate a great evil that the first telegraphic impressions of what is done here have carried only half what has been done. Sometimes one speech is reported in full and another speech is left out altogether; and we all know that the truth half told is a falsehood always. I believe it is in our power to correct it. Inasmuch as we are at great expense to have the proceedings of this body published in the Globe, now under the operation of the telegraphic system, when we know that the great mass of the people read only telegraphic reports, we can take hold of the matter of the telegraphic reporting of the proceedings of this body and have it right and according to the truth, and if it be necessary we can have the agents of this Associated Press submit their report for correction to the reporter of the Senate, or we can ourselves employ some person who can condense the proceedings every day in behalf of the Senate and make a faithful, true account of everything that is said and done, and have that furnished for the telegraphic dispatch.

Mr. WILSON. Suppose they do not choose to print it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then we will not let them have the privilege of reporting at all. We will shut them from the gallery, and not allow any telegraphic dispatches to be made of the proceedings in the Senate. Sir, we are not powerless; we have the power, if we choose, to appoint a reporter who shall make telegraphic reports of the proceedings of this body. However, I will not go into the discussion of that matter. I am glad the question is brought up and is to go to the Committee on the Library, and I hope they will take hold of it and have it made right. As to the telegraphic report of what proceeded here yesterday, I have not seen it at all, and certainly I hope my honorable friend from Maine did not mean to intimate, in anything that he has said, that I had furnished anything of my speech to the telegraphic reporters.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not mean it for anybody in particular. I merely said that I had heard that some gentlemen had been in the habit of doing it. I did not find any fault with it, because, if they feel as we have felt, that the ordinary reports convey no sort of correct idea of what is said here, they are right in wishing, if anything is said about their remarks, that it be correctly said.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have never done anything of that kind in my life.

Mr. BROWN. I do not rise to insist on the importance of a report of this character, because I believe that every Senator has felt the necessity of it very fully. I simply wish to make one suggestion in regard to it, and that is, that if the Senate will authorize a report to be made by its own reporter, there is no doubt that the demand for it throughout the country will be such as to compel the Associated Press to adopt it. It will be known everywhere that there is an authentic report of the proceedings of the Senate of the United States, and telegraphic companies and newspapers will be governed by the demand which will be for the authentic document. I think, therefore, that it will be perfectly possible for us to obviate this difficulty in the manner that has been suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON. I doubt very much whether we can correct the evil complained of. We are at the mercy of the press of the country that employ their own letter-writers here and employ their own reporters. This matter has been suggested before, and some of the leading journals of the country came out and stated that the country took but little interest in the debates of Congress, that they had to report the proceedings, the business done, and that they had of necessity to make the reports of the debates very brief. Now, sir, I undertake to say that if Senators' speeches are to be reported very briefly, they will always be so reported as not to be correctly understood by the country. I think every person who has addressed public meetings and had mere abstracts of his speeches made has always felt that he was not well understood by those who read the report of his speech. I never addressed a public meeting in my life and was so reported, that something was not reported contrary to what I should have liked to have it reported. But, sir, I think, with all the difficulty, that our reports have been singularly unfortunate; at any rate during the last two or three years, and never more so than in the case of the report of yesterday's proceedings, and it does seem to me to be almost inexcusable. I am glad, however, that the matter is called up; if anything can be done, if we can have abstracts of our debates properly reported and sent over the country, it will be some advantage, for the people of the country rely upon telegraphic reports and not upon the debates as published in the Globe. Very few persons see that, or care anything about it. In fact the telegraph, while it carries news all over the country, carries far less information of the doings of Congress than existed before we had any telegraphs at all. I have not a doubt that the people of the country understand less the daily doings of Congress than they did when they waited for the regular reports that came along a few days after and were published in the public press. They do not so well understand our proceedings as they did before; but we have got to accept this state of things, and it does not do much good to find fault. I am glad, however, that this motion is made; possibly something may come of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Wisconsin has referred to the fact that at the last Congress this subject was entertained by the Senate and referred to the Committee on Printing. I will state to the Senate what disposition that committee made of it. We addressed letters to the representatives of the Associated Press and to some of the leading newspapers to ascertain if they would take an official report of the proceedings of the Senate if furnished to them by our own reporters; but they declined to do it. The ground which they stated was that it would place the press in the power of the Senate, that they wished to have their own reports. I suppose one reason was an apprehension that the expense would be much heavier than their present arrangement. I suppose there is another reason. Some of the very large and exceedingly rich newspaper establishments in New York are not particularly desirous that the report of the Associated Press shall be very long, so that it may be necessary for the public to find a more extended report in the special dispatches which they can afford to pay for, and which the weaker papers cannot afford to pay for. But I think it is only justice to those who report the proceedings of the Senate to state that after this inquiry which we made the reports were very much improved.

It is the object of the press of course, it is the object of any newspaper that undertakes to print the proceedings of Congress, to print them as accurately as possible; and the inaccuracies of which Senators very justly complain, I have no doubt, are inadvertent, and are inseparable from the system of making an abstract of a debate as it goes on. No man can do that. As the Senator from Iowa has observed, when a Senator gets up to speak the reporter does not know whether he is to speak five minutes or two hours; and if he makes an abstract and sends off a little at a time as the speaker goes on, he may find at the conclusion that he has sent off the least important part of the speech, and then there is no time for the more important. Then, again, a speech that is made in the early part of the day has a much better chance to be reported than one that is made late; and for the benefit of those Senators who are in the habit of detaining us pretty late here I beg to suggest that their speeches are not near as apt to be reported, and cannot be as accurately reported, as they would be if they spoke in the early part of the day and allowed us to adjourn about dinner time. [Laughter.] The only way to make an accurate report of the proceedings of a legislative body is to commence after the body has adjourned and then make the abstract. If the Senate will appoint reporters to do that duty, and will also pay the expenses of telegraphing that report, the newspapers would all be very glad to take it; but otherwise I do not see how we can get much improvement upon the present system.

While I am up, I will say a word upon the practice to which my friend from Maine alluded—I believe he disavowed any intention to stigmatize it as improper—on the part of some Senators to give abstracts of their speeches to the reporters. As I never make speeches, of course I need make no disavowal of such a practice on my part; but I think it is a good practice. If a gentleman makes a speech here, he of course desires that if reported at all it shall be reported correctly. He may be indifferent to its being reported at all; but he does not want to be reported (as the Senator from Maine says he has been) as having said the reverse of what he did say. I think it is a very excellent plan for a Senator to write eight or ten lines giving the substance of what he said, or at least the side upon which he spoke or the points he made, and hand that to the telegraphic reporter, in which case I have no doubt it would always be forwarded.

Mr. POMEROY. I only desire to say that I sympathize very much with what has been said. In my own State there is scarcely anything published of the proceedings of Congress except the telegraphic dispatches of the Associated Press. I would not complain particularly in regard to those dispatches if they simply stated the facts; but I find myself reported as voting on a side that I never voted on; I find myself reported as being on committees that I never was on; I find myself reported as being left off committees that I am on. My complaint is that facts are not reported correctly; not simply that what we say is not properly represented, for I never expect to say very much, and it is of very little consequence to me whether they report my remarks correctly or not; but what I do and the way I vote I do want to be reported correctly about, for what a man does I consider vastly more important than what he says, and when I vote or act I certainly want to be reported correctly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library on the part of the Senate be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate what action, if any, may be necessary to secure more accurate telegraphic reports of the proceedings of this body for publication by the Associated Press.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no possible objection to the passage of the resolution, but I do not see exactly how what is proposed to be done under it can be accomplished.

Mr. GRIMES. That is what we are going to inquire.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand. I merely rise for the purpose of expressing my own opinion on what I understand to be the object of the Senator from Iowa. Every man has a right to be in the gallery; every man has a right to send anything to the press that he thinks proper, responsible only for the abuse of that right to the party whom he may injure. We can exclude from the gallery, of course, a particular reporter, but others will take his place; or the same man may come in, not in the capacity of a reporter, and send to the press what he thinks right. I think, perhaps, we shall involve ourselves in very serious difficulty by adopting a course of that kind, if that should be the course adopted, because it would bring, I apprehend, upon the Senate the general animadversion of the press; it would be considered as an interference with the freedom of the press.

In common with everybody, I have noticed the very incorrect reports that frequently get into the papers by means of the telegraph; but so far as the reports of the Senate are presented to the public by the reporters who are on the floor of the Senate, I suppose we will all admit that reports never were more accurate and more just. There has been no partiality, as far as I am aware, shown in those reports to any member of the Senate, and no exhibition of any prejudice against any member of the Senate. Everything has been put down exactly as it occurred. So far as I am concerned, perhaps if I had been consulted, I should rather have had omitted some things that did occur.

But I merely suggest, as matter to be considered by the committee, the difficulties which seem to me to exist in adopting any rule which will effectually cure the mischief which the country is now sustaining, and the injury which perhaps the Senate to a certain extent is suffering. I do not think, however, the mischief is very great. I do not think any member of the Senate suffers very materially by these telegraphic reports. His course is known to his own people finally. What his conduct has been, they in some way or other become familiar with, and they are sure to approve it if they think it is right. They will not listen long to any misrepresentation that may be made by any of the reporters in the gallery, or anybody else.

Mr. GRIMES. The idea never entered into my head to expel anybody from the gallery. I believe the Senator from Wisconsin suggested that under certain circumstances that might be done.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what I heard.

Mr. GRIMES. But I never contemplated any such proposition, and did not entertain any such idea when I submitted the resolution. I have no doubt that it is possible to make short telegraphic reports as accurate as the Senator has very truly said are the reports that are prepared by Mr. Sutton, and under his direction, and I do not know but that it is just as important to the country, to our constituents, and to ourselves, that the reports that go out from here and are published all through the country weeks and months in advance of the more accurate and more voluminous reports that are to follow should not be also as accurate as they are. It is for the Committee on the Library to ascertain whether or not it will not be possible to make more accurate brief reports. I believe the Senator from Missouri is right in the opinion which he expressed here that if we cause accurate reports to be made after the transactions of the day have ceased, by the stenographers who have an opportunity to see and hear exactly what has been done during the day, so that the editors of newspapers throughout the country will know that it is possible to get accurate reports, then they will be very apt to pay for those reports, and to print them rather than to print erroneous ones, such as they have hitherto been in the habit of printing. It is for the purpose of investigating that subject, not to foreclose anybody's judgment upon it, that I introduced the resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the honorable Senator from Maryland is mistaken in supposing that these things do no harm. They do very serious injury for a while, though after a time they can be undoubtedly corrected. I can give him an instance in my own case. I very seldom read them, but my attention has been sometimes called to them, and then I have done so. A certain gentleman who resides in Massachusetts, and is a very distinguished lecturer on all subjects connected with government, went to my town to deliver a lecture. He came out in the presence of my own townsmen, friends, and relations, and made a most bitter attack upon me for, as he said, opposing the proper payment of colored soldiers. He indulged in a regular tirade upon my conduct on that occasion. As it happened, the Globe had been received by one or two friends there, and after he got through a friend of mine went to him and said, "Mr. So-and-So, have you read Mr. Fessenden's speech on that subject?" "Oh, no, sir, I have not read it." "Where do you get your information?" Said he, "I get it from the Associated Press." "Well," was the reply, "here is the speech; if you will read it you will find that the statement of the Associated Press is altogether untrue; there is no correctness about it at all." Well, he said, he relied upon that, he made his speech upon that. It created so much excitement in my city among a certain class of people that I was obliged to request the editor of a paper there to publish my remarks in full as reported in the Globe, which he did; and that put an end to it, though I believe the gentleman who delivered the lecture is not satisfied to this day that he is not right and is not usually, I believe, when he has made a very severe attack on an individual.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I can state an instance of the same kind. When the question of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia was pending here, some person assuming to give an account of the proceedings of the Senate telegraphed to one of the newspapers that circulates throughout the northwestern section of the country that I opposed emancipation in the District of Columbia, and, though subsequently some of the newspapers published my remarks on the occasion and my votes on it, there are hundreds of people who believe to this day that such is the fact, so that these first reports which are published as the telegraphic reports of the proceedings of the Senate have really more influence in forming the public mind than the regular reports that are published in the Globe, and therefore there is a necessity, or at all events a very great propriety, that those reports should be correct in the first instance.

In reference to what was said about expelling persons from the Senate gallery, I certainly would not be understood as saying that I had any intention to expel any one; but when the question was put to me what power have we, I answered that if any man using this Chamber misrepresents the proceedings here and publishes a false account of them, we have it certainly in our power to deny him the privilege of being in the Senate Chamber or sitting in the gallery; that was all I said.

Mr. ANTHONY. I agree with what has been said by all the Senators who have spoken, that it is very desirable that we should have more accurate reports than we ever have had or ever can have under the present system. There is just one way to do it, and that is to pay for it. If the Senate desires to have prepared at the close of each day's session an abstract of the day's proceedings, and then to pay the expense of telegraphing it, the country will see the proceedings as they take place; but I do not believe anything short of that will accomplish the object. Rather than expel the reporters from the gallery, I would invite them to take seats in front of the Clerk's desk, for it is almost impossible for them in the gallery to hear with perfect accuracy what is said on the floor. I have wondered that the Associated Press has not applied for permission to seat a reporter on the floor of the Senate. I think it is almost as important that the reporter of the Associated Press should have a seat there as that the reporters of the Globe should have.

Mr. COWAN. I hope that if this subject is referred to a committee, that committee will inquire into the propriety of a law requiring all those who set themselves up to enlighten the community and report facts to sign their names at the end of that which they write, and that they be responsible for what they say and report.

Mr. SUMNER. That is Louis Napoleon's plan.

Mr. COWAN. That is the mode in France. He who undertakes to write for a newspaper there must put his name down, so that the people may know who he is and what his means of information are, what his character may be for truth and veracity, what may be his motives for misrepresentation. That would to some extent furnish a remedy for that of which gentlemen complain, of which I never have complained.

There is now, however, an arrangement which I think will obviate some of this difficulty. I understand that the publishers of the Globe are willing to furnish to members copies of the Daily Globe in lieu of those bound copies of the Congressional Globe which they usually furnish long after the session has closed, and which are hardly ever read by anybody. If copies of the Daily Globe are now circulated to the country press they will be enabled to correct any misrepresentations or any errors that occur through the medium of the Associated Press dispatches.

Mr. ANTHONY. That will not remedy it, because the Daily Globe cannot be sent by telegraph, and it is the first impression upon the mind which lasts.

Mr. COWAN. The Daily Globe will enable editors to correct their means of information, to correct errors in it.

Mr. ANTHONY. But they are too busy with the errors of to-day to correct those of yesterday.

Mr. COWAN. Then I suppose the mistake is incurable.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As the Associated Press seems to have no defender on this floor, I am inclined on this occasion to follow the example which I sometimes set in courts of justice, and volunteer to act in its behalf. I am under no obligations to the Associated Press or any other papers in the United States that I know of; but the conclusion at which I have arrived, after listening to all this debate is that if the Associated Press have not reported the gentlemen on the other side correctly, they have done them a great favor. Their charge against the Associated Press is that they have reported them exactly contrary to what they did say. If that be true, I think they are under great obligations to the Associated Press. [Laughter.] Take the example, for instance, of my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE.] He says that when the subject of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia was before this body the Associated Press reported him as being opposed to that measure. If the country only believed that, I think it was doing the Senator a great favor. If the people can only believe that five or ten years hence, I apprehend that honorable Senator will stand much higher in public estimation as a legislator than he does now, however high he worthily stands now. I think, therefore, that if the reports be in fact incorrect, if the exact words spoken on this floor have not been given, the intention of the reporters has been good, and unwittingly they have done gentlemen very great service.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia," have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill? It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

CATTLE DISEASE.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 23) to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States, have directed me to report it back without amendment. As the bill is of a nature which ought to be passed promptly, if at all, I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Its first section prohibits the importation of cattle, and makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make such regulations as will give the law full and immediate effect, and to send copies of them to the proper officers in this country, and to all officers or agents of the United States in foreign countries. The second section provides that when the President shall give thirty days' notice, by proclamation, that no further danger is to be apprehended from the spread of foreign infectious or contagious diseases among cattle, the act shall be of no force, and cattle may be imported in the same way as before its passage.

Mr. POMEROY. I suggest whether there ought not to be some time allowed before this prohibition goes into effect. There are parties who have given orders for cattle and for other animals that may be now on the passage and almost ready to land. I know of some such myself. They gave these orders under the law as it then existed, as they had the right to do. Now we come in and say that they shall not land them; the cattle shall not be received. It occurs to me that this law should not go into effect under thirty or sixty days, so as to give parties engaged in this business a little notice. I would suggest some amendment of that kind. I know that the Senator from Massachusetts has a large constituency engaged in this work, and that they are now about to land a large amount of cattle. It would be a great hardship to them for Congress to come in and pass a law prohibiting the importation, just as they were about to receive their cattle. I think there ought to be some notice given, thirty or sixty days.

Mr. CLARK. I inquire of the Senator from Kansas if it would not be a greater hardship to have those cattle come in if they be diseased.

Mr. POMEROY. That might be, but we have no evidence that any disease has come to this country; of late I mean. There was a disease brought here some years ago I know, but during the last four or five years there has been no disease that I know of introduced.

Mr. CLARK. Very true, we have no evidence that they are diseased or will be diseased, but it is the risk that they may be diseased that we want to avoid.

Mr. POMEROY. You might as well pass a law that nobody shall come here because he may bring cholera. You might as well pass an act that no immigrants shall come to this country and no vessels.

Mr. CLARK. We put them in quarantine. Mr. POMEROY. Then provide in this bill that there shall be an inspection of the cattle that shall arrive, during the next thirty days, if you please.

Mr. SHERMAN. The necessity of this bill is founded on facts of general notoriety. It is well known that in England and in Germany the cattle disease is prevailing to an alarming extent, destroying whole flocks and herds, and immense quantities of valuable property. This is a mere temporary measure intended to guard against the spread of the disease in the United States. The measure has been called for by the agricultural societies from almost every State in the Union. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts will remember that a few years ago the importation of a single cow into that State destroyed a very large amount of property. There is no way by which we can establish a quarantine of cattle; it would be idle to undertake a system of quarantine; and this measure has been devised merely for the purpose of guarding against an immediate danger. It is temporary in its character. As soon as the danger passes away, proclamation will be made by the President, and the regulations provided for by this act will cease.

The bill was passed, after some little consideration, in the House of Representatives, unanimously, and I trust it will be passed here. If it is passed at all, it ought to be passed immediately and to take effect immediately. To give a notice of sixty days or even thirty days, to allow cattle now on the way to arrive here, might probably be more just to the importer, but it might endanger the property of thousands and millions of our own citizens. It is better that the importers shall suffer a little hardship and reexport the cattle if on the way. I do not think there is any serious difficulty in the way, nor that any serious injury will be done by the passage of the bill as it is.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he has considered whether this bill during the two coming weeks may not interfere with the reciprocity treaty?

Mr. SHERMAN. That has been considered: the objection was made in the House of Representatives. I do not think the reciprocity treaty prevents us from excluding the importation of any article. The reciprocity treaty merely provides that certain articles of commerce imported from Canada to this country shall be relieved from the duty that would be imposed if they were imported from some other country. That is the effect of the treaty. It is supposed that this does not interfere with the treaty; but if it does, the second clause of the first section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make such regulations as will obviate any difficulty of that kind. I do not think it is an infraction of the treaty to prohibit the importation of cattle as a mere sanitary measure, because the meaning of the treaty is simply to give certain articles, the products of Canada, the privilege of being imported free of duty; and that does not prevent the Government of the United States from prohibiting the importation of a particular article entirely for sanitary or other purposes.

Mr. SUMNER. I will simply observe to the Senator from Ohio that if the difficulty to which I referred arising out of the treaty has been anticipated, as seems to be the case, I have nothing further to say. I had proposed to suggest the insertion of these words after the prohibitory words in the first section: "so far as the same can be done without violating treaty stipulations with any foreign Power;" but the Senator calls the attention of the Senate to the second clause of the first section which seems to give to the Secretary of the Treasury sufficient power to reach this difficulty. It is with that understanding, therefore, that I shall not press the point any further.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, the bill (S. No. 2) to preserve the right of trial by jury by securing impartial jurors in the courts of the United States, and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, were severally taken from the table, read a second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the bill (S. No. 11) to restore Lieutenant Joseph Hyffe to his grade in active service in the Navy, was taken from the table, read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

OFFICERS PAID ILLEGALLY.

Mr. SUMNER. I now ask the Senate to take up the resolution on the table to which the Senator from Maryland objected the other day, that we may make an amendment in it, according to his suggestion, and pass it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution:

Whereas it is provided by act of Congress that every person, in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe a certain oath in prescribed form, and it is further provided in another act of Congress (February 9, 1863, chapter twenty-five, section two) that "no money shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States to any person acting as an officer, civil, military, or naval, as salary in any office, which office is not authorized by some previously existing law, unless where such office shall be subsequently sanctioned by law;" and whereas it is reported that, notwithstanding these acts of Congress, certain persons have been allowed to enter upon the duties of office and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the prescribed oath, and certain other persons have been appointed to offices "not authorized by any previously existing law;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, so far as the records of his Department allow, to furnish to the Senate the names of any persons who have been permitted to enter upon the duties of office, and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the oath prescribed by Congress; also, the titles of such offices, with an account of the salary and emoluments thereof, and out of what fund the same have been paid; also, the names of any persons who have been appointed to any office "not authorized by some previously existing law," and if the same have received any salary, what it was, and out of what fund it has been paid.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON to strike out the preamble and also all of the resolution after the word "resolved," and to insert the following in lieu thereof:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the Senate whether there are any persons in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, except the President of the United States, who are discharging the respective duties of such offices, and who are receiving the pay and emoluments thereof, without having complied with the provisions of the acts of Congress of February 9, 1863, chapter twenty-five, section two, and if there be, that he state his reasons for the same; and also whether there be any persons appointed to any offices "not authorized by some previously existing law," and receiving salary, and if so, what it was, and out of what fund it has been paid, and the reasons for the same.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose to strike out all of the resolution after the word "resolved" and insert what I send to the Chair, which embodies completely the idea of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Massachusetts may alter the resolution as he proposes. I have seen that alteration and it meets the objection that I had to the original resolution. I therefore withdraw, with the permission of the Senate, the amendment that I proposed the other day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland is withdrawn, and the following modification of the resolution is offered by the Senator from Massachusetts: to strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert what will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War be requested, so far as the records of their respective Departments allow, to inform the Senate whether any persons have been permitted to enter upon the duties of office and to receive the salary and emoluments thereof, without taking the oath prescribed by Congress; or, if they have taken it, adding thereto explanations; and also, whether persons have been appointed to any office "not authorized by some previously existing law;" and if any persons have been so permitted or appointed, then to report if the same have received any salary or emoluments, and what they were, and out of what fund they have been paid, with the reasons for such permission or appointment; and also the explanations, if any, assigned by such parties at the time of taking such prescribed oath.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 20) requesting the President to suspend any order mustering out the officers of the Veteran Reserve corps until Congress shall take some legislative action in regard to the corps; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House for a joint committee to inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had appointed the committee on the part of the House, under the resolution for a joint committee to consider and report by what token of respect it may be proper for Congress to express the sensibility of the nation on the death of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, as follows:

ELIHU B. WASHBURN of Illinois, JAMES G. BLAINE of Maine, JAMES W. PATTERSON of New Hampshire, JUSTIN S. MORRILL of Vermont, N. P. BANKS of Massachusetts, THOMAS A. JENCKES of Rhode Island, HENRY C. DEMING of Connecticut, JOHN A. CRISWOLD of New York, E. R. V. WRIGHT of New Jersey, THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, J. A. NICHOLSON of Delaware, FRANCIS THOMAS of Maryland, ROBERT C. SCHENCK of Ohio, G. S. SHANKLIN of Kentucky, GODLOVE S. ORTH of Indiana, J. W. McCLURG of Missouri, F. C. BEAMAN of Michigan, J. A. KASSON of Iowa, I. C. SLOAN of Wisconsin, WILLIAM HIGBY of California, WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, JAMES H. D. HENDERSON of Oregon, SIDNEY CLARKE of Kansas, and KELLIAN V. WHALEY of West Virginia.

PROTECTION OF FREEDMEN.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 9, to maintain the freedom of the inhabitants in the States declared in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the bill read.

Mr. COWAN. Has that bill been referred to any committee?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir, it has not. It may be referred if Senators desire it, but I do not wish to have it referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill is asked for. It will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all laws, statutes, acts, ordinances, rules, and regulations, of any description whatsoever, heretofore in force or held valid in any of the States which were declared to be in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862, whereby or wherein any inequality of civil rights and immunities among the inhabitants of said States is recognized, authorized, established, or maintained, by reason or in consequence of any distinctions or differences of color, race, or descent, or by reason or in consequence of a previous condition or status of slavery or involuntary servitude of such inhabitants, be, and are hereby, declared null and void, and it shall be unlawful to institute, make, ordain, or establish, in any of the aforesaid States declared to be in insurrection and rebellion, any such law, statute, act, ordinance, rule, or regulation, or to enforce or to attempt to enforce the same.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall violate either of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor exceeding $10,000, and by imprisonment not less than six months nor exceeding five years; and it shall be the duty of the President to enforce the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. COWAN. I move the reference of the bill to the proper committee, the Committee on the Judiciary I should think. I object to its consideration now.

Mr. WILSON. Before the question is taken on the motion of reference, I desire very briefly to explain the bill and the reason for its introduction. The bill is based upon the proclamation of the President of July 1, 1862, which declared certain States to be in insurrection and rebellion. The proclamation of the President of the 22d of September, 1862, declaring emancipation, pledged the faith of the Government of the United States that the executive government, including the Army and Navy, would maintain the freedom of the persons declared to be free; and this pledge was repeated in the proclamation of the 1st of January, 1863. The Government of the United States, therefore, stands pledged to three and a half millions of persons to maintain their freedom. Whatever differences of opinion may exist in regard to the right of suffrage, I am sure there can be no difference of opinion among honest and just men in regard to maintaining the civil rights and immunities of these freedmen; they should stand at any rate like the non-voting white population of those States.

It has been said that the slave codes and the laws of these States in regard to persons of color fell with slavery, but in fact those laws are being executed, and in some of them in the most merciless manner. In several of these States new laws are being framed containing provisions wholly inconsistent with the freedom of the freedmen. A bill is pending before the Legislature of South Carolina making these freedmen servants, providing that the persons for whom they labor shall be their masters, that the relation between them shall be the relation of master and servant. The bill, as originally reported, provided that the freedmen might be educated; but that provision has already been stricken out, and the bill now lies over waiting for events here. That bill makes the colored people of South Carolina serfs, a degraded class, the slaves of society.

The Senate of Georgia, the telegraph tells us this morning, has passed a bill containing degrading and arbitrary provisions. It regulates contracts between master and servant. It provides that if over one month, the contract must be made in writing. Work hours, from sunrise to sunset. The servant is responsible for damaging the master's property. Wages are forfeited by leaving. The employer may discharge servants for disobedience, drunkenness, immorality, or want of respect. Leaving services or enticing servants away is a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $600 or imprisonment for four months.

In Mississippi the Legislature passed a bill in which it is provided—

"That if the laborer shall quit the service of the employer before expiration of his term of service, without just cause, he shall forfeit his wages for that year, up to the time of quitting."

That every civil officer shall, and every person may, arrest and carry back to his or her legal employer any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, who shall have quit the service of his or her employer before the expiration of his term of service without good cause, and said officer or person shall be entitled to receive, for arresting and carrying back every deserting employé aforesaid, the sum of five dollars, and ten cents per mile from the place of arrest to the place of delivery, and the same shall be held by the employer, and held as a set off for so much against the wages of said deserting employé, provided that said arrested party after being so returned may appeal to a justice of the peace or member of the board of police of the county, who, on notice to the alleged employer, shall try summarily whether said appellant is legally employed by the alleged employer, and has good cause to quit said employer; either party shall have the right of appeal to the county court, pending which the alleged deserter shall be remanded to the alleged employer, or otherwise disposed of as shall be right and just, and the decision of the county court shall be final.

That upon the affidavit made by the employer of any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or any other credible person before any justice of the peace, or member of the board of police, that any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, legally employed by said employer has legally deserted said employment, such justice of the peace or member of the board of police shall issue his warrant or warrants, returnable before himself or other such officer, directed to any sheriff, constable, or special deputy, commanding him to arrest said deserter and return him to said employer, and the like proceedings shall be as provided in the previous section; and it shall be lawful for any officer to whom such warrant shall be directed to execute said warrant in any county in this State, and that said warrant may be transmitted without indorsement to any like officer of another county, to be executed and returned as aforesaid, and the said employer shall pay the costs of said warrants and arrest and return, and which shall be set off for so much against the wages of said deserter.

"That if any person shall, or shall attempt to, persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro, or mulatto to desert from the legal employment of any person before the expiration of his term of service, or shall employ any such deserting freedman, free negro, or mulatto, or shall give or sell to any such deserting freedman, free negro, or mulatto, any food, raiment, or other thing, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, he shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than two hundred dollars and the costs; and if said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding two months' imprisonment in the county jail, and he shall, moreover, be liable to the party injured in damages: Provided, If any person shall, or shall attempt to, persuade, entice, or cause any freedman, free negro, or mulatto, to desert from the legal employment of any person, with the view to employ said freedman, free negro, or mulatto without the limits of the State, such person, on conviction, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars and not more than five hundred dollars and the costs, and if said fine and costs shall not be immediately paid, the court shall sentence said convict to not exceeding six months' imprisonment in the county jail."

This arbitrary and inhuman act makes the freedmen the slaves of society, and it is far better to be the slave of one man than to be the slave of arbitrary law. This act also forbids the leasing of lands or houses outside of the cities, thus making them landless and homeless. A gentleman of rare intelligence, writing from that State, says:

"I regret to state that, under the civil power, deemed by all the inhabitants of Mississippi to be paramount, the condition of the freedmen in many portions of the country has become deplorable and painful in the extreme. I must give it as my deliberate opinion that the freedmen are to-day, in the vicinity where I am now writing, worse off in most respects than when they were held as slaves. If matters are permitted to continue on as they now seem likely to be, it needs no prophet to predict a rising on the part of the colored population, and a terrible scene of bloodshed and desolation. Nor can any one blame the negroes if this proves to be the result. I have heard since my arrival here of numberless atrocities that have been perpetrated upon the freedmen. It is sufficient to state that the old overseers are in power again. The object of the southerners appears to be to make good their often-repeated assertions to the effect that the negroes would die if they were freed; to make it so they seem determined to goad them to desperation in order to have an excuse to turn upon and annihilate them."

A bill is now pending in the Legislature of Louisiana, which provides—

"That any adult freedman or woman shall furnish themselves with a comfortable home and visible means of support within twenty days after the passage of this act."

That any freedman or woman failing to obtain a home and support, as provided in the first section of this act, shall be immediately arrested by any sheriff or constable in any parish, or sheriff, constable, or police officer in any city or town in said parish where said freedman may be, and by them delivered over to the recorder of the parish in which they are arrested, and by him hired out by public advertisement to some citizen, being the highest bidder, for the remainder of the year in which they are hired.

"That every freedman or woman who contracts, will have a book countersigned by the recorder of the parish where he lives, when he or she first engaged their services after the passage of this act, in which will be recorded their name, age, and place where he or she last lived, and a certificate of his or her character and habits, and the length of time and to whom engaged, and the name of the employer. In case of his changing his employer, the consent of his former employer shall be entered on said book, before he shall be employed by any other person."

"That in case of the death of the employer, his heirs, or he who acquires his property, is bound by the contract with the laborers in the condition the deceased was, and the laborer on his part is bound to the new proprietor according to the terms of the previous contract. In case of the laborer leaving his employer's service without his consent, when taken will be assigned to labor on some public work without compensation until his employer reclaims him."

"General conversation will not be allowed during working hours; for any disobedience a fine of one dollar; failing to obey reasonable orders, neglect of duty, and living home without permission, will be deemed disobedience. No live stock will be allowed the laborers without the permission of the employer; all lost time from work hours (unless in case of sickness) the laborers will be charged twenty-five cents per hour; all lost time from home without leave will be charged at the rate of two dollars per day. All difficulties arising between the employers and laborers will be settled by the former, and if not satisfactory to the laborers an appeal may be had to the nearest justice of the peace, and two freeholders, citizens, one of said citizens to be selected by the employer and the other by the laborer."

"That any laborer contracting by the day, week, month, or year, or for a term of years, who leaves his employer without his consent, the employer shall have right to obtain a warrant from any judge or justice of the peace, directed to a sheriff or constable, who shall immediately arrest said laborer and deliver him to his employer."

Abraham Lincoln, in that proclamation that made his name dear to our common humanity, made the slaves of Louisiana free, forever free. Has that State a right to enact a measure to demean, degrade, enslave the men Abraham Lincoln made free?

I have prepared this bill to declare these laws in the States in insurrection and rebellion null and void, and if the bill should pass, the Army and the Freedmen's Bureau can arrest the execution of these arbitrary laws. The execution of these laws is arrested now in some places, but they are executed in the large portions of the States in insurrection and rebellion in a most oppressive and arbitrary manner. Our right to annul those laws I do not think anybody can question. Our right to declare void laws that practically make slaves of men we have declared to be free in those rebel States cannot be questioned. This bill is not based on the constitutional amendment, but on the fact that these States are in insurrection and rebellion. They have been so declared; they are legally so now. We have a right to declare these laws null and void, and I think, as a matter of humanity, we ought at once to do it. The crimes, the wrongs, the outrages that are perpetrated upon these hapless freedmen are shocking to our common humanity. I have letters from many of our officers, men of the highest character, setting forth the condition of affairs in many of these States. There are other Senators who have received letters and communications from men of character, describing outrages and cruelties that are perpetrated upon these freedmen.

This bill has been drawn with great care. I have submitted it, severally, to six eminent lawyers—two of them are hardly surpassed by any lawyers in the country. They pronounce it clearly constitutional. Our right to pass this bill I cannot doubt; I never met a man who doubted it. The right is as clear as any right we have to legislate for anything. As a matter of humanity, to protect these people, we ought promptly to pass this bill, and annul these laws now. Let us pass it at once as an act of humanity and justice, and then we can calmly proceed in our legislation to reorganize, reconstruct, and bring into the Union these States; but while these cruelties and wrongs are being perpetrated, I feel that Congress and all branches of the Government are incurring the indignation of men and the judgments of Almighty God.

In Mississippi rebel State forces, men who were in the rebel armies, are traversing the State, visiting the freedmen, disarming them, perpetrating murders and outrages upon them; and the same things are done in other sections of the country. The power to abrogate such laws is ours; we have the right to do it; and as a matter of humanity; and we ought not to adjourn over Christmas until we have declared such laws to be null and void. I am told by eminent gentlemen connected with the Freedmen's Bureau that where they have the power they arrest the execution of these laws, but as the laws exist they are enforced in the greater portions of those States. If we now declare those laws to be null and void, I have no idea that any attempt whatever will be made to enforce them, and the freedmen will be relieved from this intolerable oppression. Sir, these outrages are carried so far in some portions of the rebel States as to lead judicious men upon the spot to believe and to write that there is great danger that at Christmas there will be bloody outbreaks. Those people are being driven to desperation. There is no doubt of the fact that in a great portion of those States the high hopes, the confidence, and the joy expressed last spring by the freedmen, have passed away; that silence and sorrow pervade that section of the country; and that they are becoming distrustful and discontented. God grant that the high-raised expectations of these loyal and deserted people may not be blasted. God forbid that we should violate our plighted faith.

Now, sir, I should be willing to have this bill referred but for the loss of time that will be occasioned thereby. I think a measure of this character we ought to pass, and pass instantly, as a matter of justice and humanity. I have no desire whatever to say any harsh things of that portion of our country, nor of the men who have been engaged in the rebellion. I do not ask their property or their blood; I do not wish to disgrace or degrade them; but I do not wish that they shall be permitted to disgrace, degrade, or oppress anybody else. I offer this bill as a matter of humanity, as a measure that the needs of that section of the country imperatively demand at our hands. I believe that if it should pass, it will receive the sanction of nineteen twentieths of the loyal people of the country. Men may differ about the power or expediency of giving them the right of suffrage; but how any humane, just, and Christian man can for a moment permit the laws that are on the statute-books of the States in insurrection and rebellion, and the laws that are now pending before their Legislatures to be executed upon men whom we have declared to be free, I cannot comprehend. Therefore, sir, I have introduced this bill, and I should be glad to have it put upon its passage at once. I have consulted with eminent gentlemen connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, and they believe that it will be an immense relief.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do I understand the honorable member as objecting to the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, or to any other committee?

Mr. WILSON. I should be glad to have the bill passed now. I am not going to make a fight over the question of reference, but I should be glad to have action upon it at once. The bill has been very carefully drawn, and very carefully examined by some of the foremost minds of this country. I believe it to be entirely constitutional, and to be well drawn, and I should like to have it put on its passage. I think we ought to act on this subject before the holidays.

Mr. JOHNSON. There are questions that I think this bill will give rise to, on which it is very desirable that the deliberation of the Senate should be very calmly advised. The bill may have been very carefully prepared, and may have received the sanction of some very intelligent and able men; but I am not alone of the members of the Senate who have only for the first time seen the bill this morning, and I confess that on glancing at the bill now, I do not exactly understand what would be, if it became a law, the extent of its operation; nor do I see how it would accomplish the purpose the honorable member from Massachusetts has in view. There are no particular laws designated in the bill to be repealed. All laws existing before these States got into a condition of insurrection, by which any difference or inequality is created or established, are to be repealed. What is to be the effect of that repeal upon such laws as they exist? In some of those States by the constitution or by the laws, (and the constitution is equally a law,) persons of the African race are excluded from certain political privileges. Are they to be repealed, and at once, by force of that repeal, are they to be placed exactly upon the same footing in regard to all political privileges with that which belongs to the other class of citizens? Very many of those laws are laws passed under the police power, which has always been conceded as a power belonging to the States—laws supposed to have been necessary in order to protect the States themselves from insurrection. Are they to be repealed absolutely?

As I said, too, the bill will not accomplish the purpose of the honorable member if I comprehend it. It only repeals the laws which have heretofore been passed. If these States are in the Union, (about which at the proper time I shall have a word to say,) or when they come into the Union, they will have the same right to pass police laws that has been recognized as their right from the beginning of the Government to the present day. No member of this Senate, I am sure, will differ with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts in the wish that there should be no injustice perpetrated which the authorities of the United States can prevent. No man feels more anxious certainly than I do that the rights incident to the condition of freedom, which is now, as I, personally, am glad to believe, the condition of the black race, should not be violated; but I do not know that there is any more pressing need for extraordinary legislation to prevent outrages upon that class, by anything which is occurring in the southern States, than there is for preventing outrages in the loyal States. Crimes are being perpetrated every day in the very justly-esteemed State from which the honorable member comes. Hardly a paper fails to give us an account of some most atrocious and horrible crime. Murders shock the sense of that community and the sense of the United States very often; and it is not peculiar to Massachusetts. Moral by her education, and loving freedom and hating injustice as much as the people of any other State, she yet is unable to prevent a violation of every principle of human rights, but we are not for that reason to legislate for her.

As I have said, Mr. President, it is not my purpose to inquire into the question (about which there are honest differences of opinion) whether the States which were in insurrection are now States of the Union. I have now, and I have had from the first, a very decided opinion that they are States in the Union, and that they never could have been placed out of the Union without the consent of their sister States. The insurrection terminated, the authority of the Government thereby reinstated, eo instanti they were invested with all the rights belonging to them originally; I mean as States. Whether the individual citizens of those States have forfeited their own rights by committing treason or by the commission of any other offense is another inquiry; but in my judgment our sole authority for the acts which we have done during the last four years, the measures which we have adopted in raising armies, was the authority communicated to Congress by that clause in the Constitution of the United States which gives to Congress the power to suppress insurrection. If the power can only be referred to that clause, in my opinion—speaking, I repeat it, with great deference to the judgment of others—the moment the insurrection was terminated, there was no power whatever left in the Congress of the United States over those States; and I am glad to see, if I understand his message—a message, by the by, which, in common with almost the entire country, I admire as one of the ablest, if not the ablest, message that has ever emanated from the executive department of the Government; a message calculated to do immense benefit in the country itself by calming and settling the feelings and the controversies which existed; and a message which is still more calculated, if possible, to place us high in the estimation of the nations of the world—I am glad, I was about to say, to find that in the view I have just expressed I have the concurrence of the President of the United States.

Now, as to these outrages that are said to be perpetrated, (and no doubt to a certain extent it is true,) in the southern States, permit me to say as my own impression, from my knowledge of the people of those States as they now are—I mean the educated portion of those States; the men who have heretofore been in the councils of the country; men who have been the ornaments of civil life in the past, but who have gone astray; they have done so without abandoning at all any of the high moral principles by which their lives were antecedently characterized, and I believe as solemnly as I believe any truth that there is not more humanity now to be found in the humanest (if there be any difference) of the loyal States than is to be found in the States recently in insurrection. They are—and I speak from knowledge derived from conversation with many of the leaders who were engaged in the war—they are now as anxious to return as in their insanity they were anxious to leave us. They have seen the error of their course; they have seen that there was no safety except under the Union of the United States; they have seen that there is to be safety under the protection of the Government of the United States; and they are longing, passionately longing, for an opportunity to return among us and be again with us, brothers.

I have referred to this, Mr. President, merely for the purpose of guarding against an impression which the well-known authority of the honorable member from Massachusetts and his supposed means of information might carry with it, that these States and the men of these States are almost semi-barbarous. It is a mistake. That there are exceptions, I admit. There ever are exceptions. They are to be found in this District, which is especially under your protection by the Constitution of the United States, and they are to be found everywhere else. Crimes are being committed which startle with their enormity, even here. That constitutes no reason, in my judgment, why we should resort to legislation of this description; that is to say, legislation which repeals at once every law to be found upon the statute-books of these States by which supposed inequality has been produced between the different races that may be the inhabitants of those States.

Mr. COWAN. I simply wish to say that I have not moved this reference because I did not sympathize with the design or desire the attainment of the end contemplated by the Senator from Massachusetts. I am in favor, and exceedingly desirous that by some means or other the natural rights of all people in the country shall be secured to them, no matter what their color or complexion may be, and may be secured to them in such a way as that States themselves cannot hereafter wrest them away from them. I am in favor of the position that the courts of the country shall be open to everybody, Jews, Gypsies, Chinese, negroes, all men of every color and condition, and that they shall be competent as witnesses, unless excluded by crime or want of that religious belief which does exclude in some States of the Union; but I doubt whether the proper mode to attain that end is by legislation in Congress. I think the only way that it can be attained, and securely attained, is by an amendment of the Constitution, and I am in favor of that measure, and that I believe can be carried through during the next month. I think there is a disposition everywhere in the country, even in the southern States, to accord these rights to all men, and when it is done, it is proper that it be well done. I therefore desire that this bill should be referred to the Judiciary Committee, in order that it may undergo an examination in that committee, and that it may be seen whether there is any merit in it whatever. I am afraid there is not, that it would be a mere temporary remedy, and that we would lose more by usurping the power to meddle with it in our legislative capacity than we would gain by its operation in relieving from the difficulties which are suggested.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Maryland seems to think that I cast imputations upon the people in the rebel States. Sir, I have no desire to indulge in any harsh criticisms upon the people of that section of the country. We have had bitter contests over the mighty issues of years. The cause of liberty and the cause of country has triumphed; the men who went into rebellion have been defeated in battle; they have been conquered and subjugated; they are at the mercy of the Government of the United States to-day. Now, I repeat what I have said on this floor before, I never entertained an unkind feeling toward the people of that section of my country.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the honorable member does not suppose that I am under that impression. I certainly did not mean to intimate it, for I know to the contrary.

Mr. WILSON. I thank the Senator for his explanation; but I will say that I have never entertained a feeling of bitterness or of unkindness to the southern people; that in spite of all that has taken place, I have always regarded those people as my countrymen; wrong and deluded, but still my countrymen. Nor do I wish to impose upon them anything that may be degrading or unmanly; but I wish to protect all the people there of every race, the poorest and the humblest; and while I would not impose any degradations upon them, I would not permit them to impose any degradations upon others.

Sir, I deny the right of these States to pass these laws against men who are citizens of the United States. They are free, and, in the language of Attorney General Bates—

"Every citizen of the United States is a component member of the nation, with rights and duties under the Constitution and laws of the United States, which cannot be abridged or destroyed by the laws of any particular State. The laws of the State, if they conflict with the laws of the nation, are of no force."

But these old slave codes still exist; they are executed in four fifths of the rebel territory to day, and four or five of those States are passing other codes inhuman, unchristian, and inconsistent with the idea that these freedmen have rights. These freedmen are as free as I am, to work when they please, to play when they please, to go where they please, to work at what they please, and to use the product of their labor, and those States have no right to pass such laws as are now pending and have just been passed in some of them.

But, sir, the Senator from Maryland says that cruelties and great crimes are committed in all sections of the country. I know it, but we have not cruel and inhuman laws to be enforced. Sir, armed men are traversing portions of the rebel States to-day enforcing these black laws upon men whom we have made free and to whom we stand pledged before man and God to maintain their freedom. A few months ago these freedmen were joyous, hopeful, confident. To-day they are distrustful, silent, and sad, and this condition has grown out of the wrongs and cruelties and oppressions that have been perpetrated upon them. The evidence of all, or nearly all of the officers of the United States, of the Freedmen's Bureau, and of the Army, goes to prove that great outrages and wrongs are perpetrated upon these people. I do not think we ought to stand here quibbling over the authority to interfere.

These States have been declared to be in insurrection and rebellion, and they are legally in insurrection and rebellion now. That is the decision of Congress, of the President, and of the Supreme Court. I think we ought to act promptly and act at once, and tell these men who have been for four years in rebellion against the country that we have emancipated three and a half million people by the proclamation of the President, and that the President is pledged, and that the Army and Navy are pledged, to maintain their freedom.

I believe that the constitutional amendment has been adopted, and that under the second section of that amendment we have the power to pass not only a bill that shall apply these provisions to the rebel States, but to Kentucky, to Maryland, to Delaware, and to all the loyal States. But this bill is confined entirely to the States declared by the President to be in insurrection and rebellion, and applies to that population whom we have made free by presidential proclamation.

Sir, the law of Mississippi makes every one of these men whom we have made free practically a slave, and he is in a worse condition to-day than he was when he was a slave, because his master had some interest in protecting and caring for him. To turn these freedmen over to the tender mercies of men who hate them for their fidelity to the country is a crime that will bring the judgment of Heaven upon us.

The evidence is before us; we cannot shut our eyes to facts. The condition of the freedmen is worse to-day than on the day General Lee surrendered to General Grant. Their spirits are less buoyant; they are less hopeful, less confident of their future; and we owe it here in Congress to say that these laws shall never more be enforced, and that these States, at least while they are in rebellion, shall not have power to pass any laws to oppress men whom we have declared free, and to whom we have given the pledged faith of the Republic.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I sympathize heartily with the purpose of the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts. I believe it is the duty of Congress to give to the freedmen of the southern States ample protection in all their natural rights. With me it is a question simply of time and manner. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts whether this is the time for the introduction of this bill. I believe it would be wiser to postpone all action upon this subject until the proclamation of the Secretary of State shall announce that the constitutional amendment is a part of the supreme law of the land. When that is done, there will then be, in my judgment, no doubt of the power of Congress to pass this bill, and to make it definite and general in its terms. The bill now necessarily relates only to the States included in the proclamation of the President. It excludes the States of Kentucky, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, and other portions of the South, which were excepted in that proclamation. The moment the constitutional amendment is adopted, then our legislation on this subject may be general throughout the United States. Under the joint resolution proposing that amendment, there is no doubt of the power of Congress over this subject. I must confess my surprise at one or two recent dispatches issued from high officers of the Government in regard to the construction of the constitutional amendment. To me it is plain and obvious. The first section provides that—

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

This section secures to every man within the United States liberty in its broadest terms. The second section provides that—"Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Here is not only a guarantee of liberty to every inhabitant of the United States, but an express grant of power to Congress to secure this liberty by appropriate legislation. Now, unless a man may be free without the right to sue and be sued, to plead and be impleaded, to acquire and hold property, and to testify in a court of justice, then Congress has the power, by the express terms of this amendment, to secure all these rights. To say that a man is a freeman and yet is not able to assert and maintain his right, in a court of justice, is a negation of terms. Therefore the power is expressly given to Congress to secure all their rights of freedom by appropriate legislation. The reason why this power was given is also drawn from the history of a clause of the Constitution. By this clause of the Constitution, one which has always been a part of our fundamental law, it is provided that—

"The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States."

This clause gives to the citizen of Massachusetts, whatever may be his color, the right of a citizen of South Carolina, to come and go precisely like any other citizen. There never was any doubt about the construction of this clause of the Constitution—that is, that a man who was recognized as a citizen of one State had the right to go anywhere within the United States and exercise the immunity of a citizen of the United States; but the trouble was in enforcing this constitutional provision. In the celebrated case of Mr. Hoar, who went to South Carolina, he was driven out, although he went there to exercise a plain constitutional right, and although he was a white man of undisputed character. This constitutional provision was in effect a dead letter to him. The reason was that there was no provision in the Constitution by which Congress could enforce this right. Although here was a guarantee that the citizen of one State should have the rights of a citizen in all the States, yet there was no express power conferred upon Congress to secure this right, and no law has ever yet been framed that secured the right of a citizen to travel wherever he chose within the limits of the United States.

To avoid this very difficulty, that of a guarantee without a power to enforce it, this second section of the constitutional amendment was adopted, which does give to Congress in clear and express terms the right to secure, by appropriate legislation, to every person within the United States, liberty. It seems to me, therefore, as a question of time, it is better to postpone all legislation on this subject until the constitutional amendment is declared to be a part of the fundamental law.

Then, as I have said, it is a question of manner. When this question comes to be legislated upon by Congress I do not wish it to be left to the uncertain and ambiguous language of this bill. I think that the rights which we desire to secure to the freedmen of the South should be distinctly specified. The bill provides that all laws, statutes, acts, ordinances, rules, and regulations, of any description whatsoever, heretofore in force or held valid in any of the States which were declared to be in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862, whereby or wherein any inequality of civil rights and immunities among the inhabitants of said States is recognized, authorized, established, or maintained, by reason or in consequence of any distinctions or differences of color, race, or descent, or by reason or in consequence of a previous condition or status of slavery or involuntary servitude of such inhabitants, be, and are hereby, declared null and void, &c.

There is scarcely a State in the Union that does not make distinctions on account of color. Is it wise for us to legislate in regard to all these various subjects without having a full comprehension of what they are? In nearly every State in the Union there is some distinction. In the State of New York a certain portion of the negro population is allowed to vote, and a certain portion are excluded from voting—those who have not property. In the State of Ohio all those who are nearer white than black are allowed to vote; those nearer black than white are excluded from voting. These are distinctions contained in the laws of what were called the free States—all are free now. Is it the purpose of this bill to wipe out all these distinctions?

I have said that the language of this bill is not sufficiently definite and distinct to inform the people of the United States of precisely the character of rights intended to be secured by it to the freedmen of the southern States. The bill in its terms applies only to those States which were declared to be in insurrection; and the same criticism would apply to this part of it that I have already made, that it is not general in its terms.

It seems to me that when we legislate on this subject we should secure to the freedmen of the southern States certain rights, naming them, defining precisely what they should be. For instance, we could agree that every man should have the right to sue and be sued in any court of justice. No man can be said to be free within the language of the first clause until he has a right to sue and be sued, and to maintain his rights. So with the right to testify, an incident, an inevitable incident to liberty, without which liberty would be but a name. It seems to me even the exclusion of persons from testifying because they have been guilty of a crime is indefensible. I would receive the testimony of anything that could articulate; and sometimes objects without life are the most important elements of testimony. We should secure to these freedmen the right to acquire and hold property, to enjoy the fruits of their own labor, to be protected in their homes and family, the right to be educated, and to go and come at pleasure. These are among the natural rights of free men.

It seems to me, therefore, that when we come to legislate on this subject, it should be in clear and precise language, naming and detailing precisely the rights that these men shall be secured in, so that in the southern States there shall be hereafter no dispute or controversy. And I think we should at as early a day as possible announce to the people lately in insurrection precisely what we mean to do with them. In my judgment the Congress of the United States has now to impose conditions upon which those States shall be restored to their old relations to and in the Union. I want to see these conditions gravely considered, deliberately discussed, and fixed after debate; and I wish to see them plainly prescribed either by amendments to the Constitution or in some definite way, that the people of the southern States may know precisely what we intend to demand of them; and then when we have made our demands we shall be satisfied if they comply with them.

For the present, therefore, I think it would be better to refer this bill and postpone any definite legislation on the subject until the committee already provided for by the resolution of the two Houses shall have reported, or at least until after the constitutional amendment shall be declared a part of the Constitution of the United States by the proclamation of the Secretary of State.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to go beyond the limits of propriety in discussing this question, and I should not say a word had it not been for some of the extraordinary and alarming principles avowed here to-day. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts who has introduced this bill, having relation upon its face entirely to the States which are denominated "States lately in rebellion," has expressed the opinion that Congress has the power by its legislation to enter my State and to legislate for my people and for the people of Maryland and for the people of other States which it is not pretended have ever been in revolt; and we are now told that this power is to be derived from the closing paragraph of the act for the amendment of the Constitution. I wish the country to note the fact that when that proposed amendment was before this body there was no Senator then, according to my recollection, that avowed this doctrine.

Gentlemen told us that they simply wished to amend the Constitution so as to get clear of slavery, but no Senator then, according to my recollection, stated to the country that it was meant under this latter clause of that act to give to the General Government the powers of a consolidated Government, to wipe out the States of this Union from existence, and to vest in Congress the power to legislate for the States. I know, sir, that it was said by a distinguished modern patriot in New York that the old Union should not exist, but they meant to tear down the old house and build up a new one; but not even he avowed, nor did any other man, while the subject was under discussion, that it was intended to confer upon Congress, by the passage of that act, power to enter the States and legislate for the people of the States.

Sir, has it come to this, that simply because there has been a revolt in the southern States, and that revolt has been suppressed, we are to forget the lessons of the past, disregard all the experience of the past, all the teachings of the past, and now to blot out entirely our former system of government, and in an insane effort to elevate the African race to the dignity of the white race, to destroy all the rights guaranteed to us by our own State constitutions?

Mr. President, I know that some of us who scented danger in the distance were charged by the public press and otherwise with being disunionists; but the legislation proposed and the legislation which is to be carried through Congress, if it shall be carried through Congress, gives evidence to the country who in fact are the real disunionists of the land. And now, sir, before I sit down allow me to ask this question, why should there be such an anxiety to press upon and degrade the southern people now that the war is over? The history of the world does not show an example where there has been such a sudden and universal acquiescence in the change of the relations of any people to a Government as has been recently exhibited in these southern States. They appealed to arms for the assertion of what they thought or said they thought were their rights; the decision has been against them. Point me, if you can, to the example in history where any people, from the institution of civil government to this present hour, have so generally and so suddenly acquiesced in the changed relations which the war has produced. There is no such example.

They are charged still with being "disloyal." That is a word that I do not know the meaning of when applied to a republican form of government, and I do not wish ever to know the meaning of it. It has no proper place in a republican dictionary as applied to a republican Government. I have met many gentlemen from the South, and I have yet to hear the first man of them who is not earnestly anxious that his State should assume its former relations to the General Government. There has been perfect acquiescence in everything which the President of the United States has demanded, and certainly he has made very great demands indeed. He has asked them to ratify the constitutional amendment. They have done it. He has asked them to abolish slavery. They have done it. And yet, sir, although there is not a particle of resistance from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, or from the Ohio to the Gulf of Mexico, although peace reigns throughout the whole land, we are still told that the rebellion exists. How? Is there any war going on? Is there any opposition to the exercise of the Federal authority? Rebellion is an act.

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts says the President proclaimed that these States were in rebellion. Suppose he did; if the President who made that proclamation were alive to-day and could continue to live and exercise power for a thousand years, could he continue the rebellion simply because he had issued a proclamation that was still in existence unrevoked by him? Has it come to this, that the fact of the existence of a rebellion is to depend on the word of a President? I thought that rebellion meant resistance to authority, that it meant conflict; but no, the doctrine now is that the President having once said that a rebellion exists, that rebellion continues to exist forever unless the President says it shall cease! Sir, such is not the judgment of the people of this country. Everybody knows that war has ceased, and the rebellion as it is called has ceased. Your judges have so decided. It was so decided only yesterday in one of the courts of this country. What, sir, the President's proclamation to be the evidence of the existence of a rebellion! Verily, during the last four or five years we have had wonderful examples of presidential power; but I never dreamed that that power was so omnipotent that he could create a rebellion by proclamation and continue it for all time by proclamation.

But, sir, on the question immediately before the Senate I wish to say that I am in favor of the proposed reference to the Judiciary Committee, because if it be true that it was the intention of the framers of the constitutional amendment to give such a power as is now claimed to Congress, and if this bill is meant to carry out that assumed power, I should like to have the judgment of the Judiciary Committee on that subject. It is contrary to what the Secretary of State telegraphed to the provisional governor of South Carolina. It is contrary, as we all know, to the spirit and intention of the President's message and his uniform declarations. And here I will take occasion to say that while I did not support Andrew Johnson for the Vice Presidency of the United States, yet as far as he conducts the Government in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, recognizing the States of this Union as composing the Union, recognizing the rights of those States as political communities, I will give him a cordial support in every proper measure of his administration; where he is wrong I will oppose him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not rise, sir, with a view of discussing the bill under consideration: it is one relating to questions of a very grave character, and ought not to pass without due consideration. The Senator from Massachusetts tells us that it has been submitted to distinguished lawyers, and they all conceded its propriety, and nobody disputes the power of Congress to pass it. Doubtless that was their opinion and is the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts. Perhaps it would be my opinion upon investigation. I will not undertake to say, at this time, what the powers of the Congress of the United States may be over the people in the lately rebellious States.

There was a time between the suppression of the rebellion and the institution of any kind of government in those States when it was absolutely necessary that some power or other to prevent anarchy should have control. The Senator from Delaware, and I believe the Senator from Maryland, said the rebellion was over, but at the time that the rebellion ceased there was no organized government whatever in most of the rebel States; and was the Government of the United States to withdraw its forces and leave the people in a state of anarchy for the time being? Surely not. As a consequence of the rebellion and of the authority clearly vested in the Government of the United States to put down the rebellion, in my judgment the Government had the right, in the absence of any local governments, to control and govern the people till State organizations could be set up by the people which should be recognized by the Federal Government as loyal and true to the Constitution. It must be so. It is a necessity of the condition of things.

But, sir, I do not propose at this time to discuss this bill. It is one, I think, of too much importance to be passed without a reference to some committee. The bill does not go far enough, if what we have been told to-day in regard to the treatment of freedmen in the southern States is true. The bill, perhaps, also may be premature in the sense stated by the Senator from Ohio. We have not yet the official information of the adoption of the constitutional amendment. That that amendment will be adopted, there is very little question; until it is adopted there may be some question (I do not say how the right is) as to the authority of Congress to pass such a bill as this, but after the adoption of the constitutional amendment there can be none.

The second clause of that amendment was inserted for some purpose, and I would like to know of the Senator from Delaware for what purpose? Sir, for the purpose, and none other, of preventing State Legislatures from enslaving, under any pretense, those whom the first clause declared should be free. It was inserted expressly for the purpose of conferring upon Congress authority by appropriate legislation to carry the first section into effect. What is the first section? It declares that throughout the United States and all places within their jurisdiction slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist; and then the second section declares that Congress shall have authority by appropriate legislation to carry this provision into effect. What that "appropriate legislation" is, is for Congress to determine, and nobody else.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to ask the honorable Senator a question, with his consent, first answering his own. He asks me for what purpose that second section was introduced. I do not know; I had nothing to do with it. And now I wish to ask the honorable Senator whether, when it was before this body for adoption, he avowed in his advocacy of it that it was meant for such purposes as are now claimed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I never understood it in any other way.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Did you state it to the Senate?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that I stated it to the Senate. I might as well have stated to the Senator from Delaware that the clause which declared that slavery should not exist anywhere within the United States means that slavery should not exist within the United States! I could make it no plainer by repetition or illustration than the statement itself makes it. I reported from the Judiciary Committee the second section of the constitutional amendment for the very purpose of conferring upon Congress authority to see that the first section was carried out in good faith, and for none other; and I hold that under that second section Congress will have the authority, when the constitutional amendment is adopted, not only to pass the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts, but a bill that will be much more efficient to protect the freedman in his rights. We may, if deemed advisable, continue the Freedmen's Bureau, clothe it with additional powers, and if necessary back it up with a military force, to see that the rights of the men made free by the first clause of the constitutional amendment are protected. And, sir, when the constitutional amendment shall have been adopted, if the information from the South be that the men whose liberties are secured by it are deprived of the privilege to go and come when they please, to buy and sell when they please, to make contracts and enforce contracts, I give notice that, if no one else does, I shall introduce a bill and urge its passage through Congress that will secure to those men every one of these rights: they would not be freedmen without them. It is idle to say that a man is free who cannot go and come at pleasure, who cannot buy and sell, who cannot enforce his rights. These are rights which the first clause of the constitutional amendment meant to secure to all; and to prevent the very evil which the Senator from Delaware suggests to-day, that Congress would not have power to secure them, the second section of the amendment was added.

There were some persons who thought it was unnecessary to add the second clause. It was said by some that wherever a power was conferred upon Congress there was also conferred authority to pass the necessary laws to carry that power into effect under the general clause in the Constitution of the United States which declares that Congress shall have authority to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution any of the powers conferred by the Constitution. I think Congress would have had the power, even without the second clause, to pass all laws necessary to give effect to the provision making all persons free; but it was intended to put it beyond cavil and dispute, and that was the object of the second clause, and I cannot conceive how any other construction can be put upon it.

Now, sir, I trust this bill may be referred, because I think that a bill of this character should not pass without deliberate consideration and without going to some of the committees of the Senate. But the object which is had in view by this bill I heartily sympathize with, and when the constitutional amendment is adopted I trust we may pass a bill, if the action of the people in the southern States should make it necessary, that will be much more sweeping and efficient than the bill under consideration. I will not sit down, however, without expressing the hope that no such legislation may be necessary. I trust that the people of the South, who in their State constitutions have declared that slavery shall no more exist among them, will by their own legislation make that provision effective. I trust there may be a feeling among them in harmony with the feeling throughout the country, and which shall not only abolish slavery in name, but in fact, and that the legislation of the slave States in after years may be as effective to elevate, enlighten, and improve the African as it has been in past years to enslave and degrade him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator says that this second clause of the act proposing the amendment to the Constitution was intended to obviate the very evil which the Senator from Delaware now indulges in. The Senator from Delaware is not given to caviling; he generally speaks what he thinks and thinks what he speaks; but this idea is not original with me. I do not claim to be the author of this doubt. Your own Secretary of State telegraphed to the provisional governor of South Carolina, Mr. Perry, when he urged that it might be contended that Congress had this power under that clause of that act, that his objection was "querulous," that the clause was restrictive in its character; in other words, that it was not meant to confer and could not be understood as conferring upon Congress any such power as that now claimed, but that it was in fact restrictive in its character. The Secretary of State is presumed always to be honest in what he says; he never cavils, everything he says he means, I suppose, and he has put an interpretation upon this clause in perfect accordance with that which I myself have advanced.

Sir, we hear much about that amendment; and one word upon that subject and I have done.

It is said that the constitutional amendment is adopted. It requires three fourths of the States to adopt the amendment. With my theory of this Government and the State governments, I might say it was adopted, having now received the ratification perhaps of three fourths of all the States; but how honorable Senators who hold that these southern States are not in the Union, are not States, and have not the power of self-government, can contend that the constitutional amendment is adopted by and through the action of the people down South, I cannot imagine. It requires the votes of three fourths of the States; but how can votes in its favor be regarded by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, and others of like opinion, when they come from communities which he and they say are not States, are not entitled to the control of their own domestic affairs, not entitled to legislate for themselves? It seems that they are States for one purpose and not States for any other purpose. As far as the interests of the black man are concerned, if their action be favorable to him, they are States, but for no other purpose. I have listened to a great deal of illogical reasoning in the last four or five years, and I confess this is a pretty good specimen.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his motion, to enable us to take up a little bill I reported this morning relative to jurors in this District.

Mr. HOWARD. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA JURORS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of House bill No. 24, which I reported this morning from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Objection was made to it this morning, but I am satisfied there will be no objection now.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that if at any time it shall occur that all of the names in the box provided for in the fourth section of the act to which this bill is an amendment shall have been drawn out at any term of the court before the 1st of February next ensuing, the court, or any judge thereof, may order the marshal to summon from the body of Washington county twenty-three citizens, having the qualification of jurors, as provided in that act, to serve as grand jurors, and twenty-six citizens having such qualifications, to act as petit jurors, or either, as may be needed at any subsequent term of court to be held between the time of happening of the contingency named and the 1st of February then next ensuing; and vacancies in either grand or petit jurors so ordered to be summoned may be filled up by other persons summoned by the marshal upon the order of the court. As all the names in the jury-box provided for by the fourth section of the act to which this bill is an amendment were, at the late term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting for the trial of crimes and misdemeanors, drawn from the box, the bill also proposes to empower the judge assigned to hold the December term of the court for the year 1865, to order the marshal to summon from the body of Washington county twenty-three citizens, having the qualifications of jurors, as provided for in that act, to act as grand jurors for that term, and twenty-six citizens, having such qualifications, to act as petit jurors.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution from the House of Representatives (H. R. No. 20) requesting the President to suspend any order mustering out the officers of the Veteran Reserve corps until Congress shall take some legislative action in regard to the corps, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. GRIMES. There is a little joint resolution which was yesterday left in a very uncertain state, proposing to donate the camp equipage at Camp Kinsman. I move that it be taken up and referred to the Military Committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 18) granting certain public property to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of Iowa, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. HOWARD. I renew my motion. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 13, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the joint resolution of the House for the appointment of a joint committee of fifteen members to inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States, with sundry amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, expenditures, balances, &c., required by the second section of the act of May 1, 1820; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER then proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the committees for reports.

CONTESTED-ELECTION PAPERS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That all the papers in the several cases of contested elections now or hereafter referred to the Committee of Elections, be printed in whole or in part, in the discretion of said committee, and under its direction.

VETERAN RESERVE CORPS.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to suspend any order mustering out the officers of the Veteran Reserve corps until Congress shall take some legislative action in regard to the corps; and upon the resolution demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the resolution was read a first and second time.

The question being on ordering the resolution to be engrossed and read a third time—

Mr. SCHENCK demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, and that is, whether the men of the Veteran Reserve corps have been mustered out, and whether it is proposed to continue the officers after the men are all mustered out?

Mr. SCHENCK. The men are nearly all mustered out. It was submitted, as a question, to the officers and men to vote whether they would be discharged from the service or not. This was done under an order of the War Department. The men, as all the men of the regular Army, with perhaps here and there an exception, and as all the sailors on board the several ships of war would do if an opportunity were offered, either for the sake of a holiday or for the sake of getting rid of the service, voted almost unanimously to go out, leaving the officers of the corps, the organization of which has not yet been broken up, still in service.

About one half of these officers are now employed by the Government; and from the Freedmen's Bureau and other quarters applications are made from time to time to put upon duty numbers of these officers, which requests are usually complied with on the part of the War Office.

What is now proposed is, that the officers of that corps who are unemployed shall not be summarily dismissed from the service, but that some little time shall be given by a suspension of the order dismissing them from service until Congress shall take some action in respect to the future disposition to be made of the corps, either by incorporating it into the regular Army, or giving it an organization and permitting it to fill up its numbers as a part of that regular Army, or permitting its officers to return to private life.

This corps consists of officers, eighty-five per cent. of whom during the rebellion have been actually wounded, but who have recovered so far as to permit them to enter the service again.

A percentage of from ten to fifteen, making up the whole of the remainder, consists of those who have been disabled by sickness contracted in the service, but from which they have since recovered so as to be fit for duty, and it is proposed not to turn out upon the world under any action that has taken place these officers, many of them men of family, with persons dependent upon them for support, which must be given in some way until there is time for Congress to act and determine what disposition shall be made of the corps, whether it shall be retained as a part of the regular Army or not. That is the whole scope and purpose of the resolution, which is temporary in its character.

Mr. STEVENS. I was just going to ask the gentleman a question upon that very point. I understand now that this is not intended as a permanent arrangement, but only until the committee shall have time to look into the matter.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Committee on Military Affairs propose that Congress shall ask the President to suspend action merely until there can be an opportunity of looking into the subject and determining as to the disposition to be made in the future of this corps.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I have no objection to that course, but it occurred to me that from the fact that this Veteran Reserve corps had been organized entirely by orders from the War Department, and was made up wholly from the volunteer service, the men were entitled of right to be discharged from the service when the war was over. Nearly all of them had enlisted for the war against the rebellion, and it was their right to be discharged. It seems to me, therefore, that the submission of the question to the men to vote whether they would be discharged or not was a very singular proceeding. It was the right of the men to be discharged under the contract they had made with the Government, and it strikes me as a very singular proceeding to ask that the officers shall be kept in the service of the Government when there are no men to command. The men of their regiments and companies have been mustered out; there are not even skeletons left for the officers of these regiments to command, and this is a proposition to continue them in the service to draw their pay from the Treasury.

The men who composed the Veteran Reserve corps were wounded men also; they had been serving the Government at twelve dollars a month. These officers are getting all the way from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars a month, and have been receiving it all this time, and I do not think that Congress ought to be asked to continue them in the service any longer than they have men to command.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, and to say a word.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand, as has been already suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] that this corps sprang from the action of the War Department and is not subject to the discretion and good sense of that Department, and I would like to inquire whether the intervention of Congress now in this way will not be taken by the chairman of the Military Committee as an indication on the part of Congress that this corps, as far as it still exists, is to be perpetuated. I would like to know whether in the contemplation of the Military Committee this resolution, if it passes, does not tend to the perpetuation of this corps?

Mr. SCHENCK. I could not, perhaps, better reply to the inquiry made by the honorable gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] than to refer him to the language of the resolution, which proposes a temporary suspension, and only asks that it may take place until there shall be time to investigate the subject and for Congress to take some legislative action which may determine the future disposition to be made of this corps. That is the whole scope of the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not forget the language of the resolution when I seek the information which I do, and my point the gentleman from Ohio does not altogether take. The proposition is this: this is a subject now, and has been from the beginning, wholly in the discretion of the War Department, to do what it deems wise and best in all respects, and I ask him whether the interposition by a resolution, even with this phraseology, is not an intimation to the Department from Congress that, in the judgment of Congress, this corps ought to be continued by way of paving the way to a permanent establishment; whether that is not the fair tendency, if not the design, of this resolution?

Mr. SCHENCK. I think not, but the gentleman is as capable of drawing an inference as I am. I can only reply that it was unanimously concluded by the members of the Military Committee, all being present excepting some two or three, under existing circumstances to ask a suspension of action by the War Department, through the President, upon this subject, because they happened to be aware of the fact that unless that request was made, the Secretary of War would feel it his duty to dismiss these officers now from the service after the action that has taken place by the vote of the privates, and that in a summary manner.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, these officers could not be found and commissioned if necessary hereafter?

Mr. SCHENCK. It is more than improbable they could be found; and if found, in what condition I will not undertake to say. The gentleman is as capable of judging as myself whether or not an officer wounded in the service of the country, whose services it has been thought proper to retain because of his merits, who has upon his hands a wife and half a dozen children, if turned loose without employment of any kind, can be recovered for the public service some months, or years even, hereafter.

In reply to what was rather the argument than the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FARNSWORTH,] I will say that it was probably the right of the privates to determine each for himself whether he would remain in the service or not, when the question was submitted to him by an order from the War Department. Each private may have felt that he had that right, because when they were transferred from the volunteer organizations, to which they formerly belonged, to this corps, they naturally expected that they would go out with the expiration of the terms of service of the several regiments from which they had been transferred. So it was the right of each officer to vote to go out when the question was submitted to him. But the question of right does not, in the first place, apply in this case at all to the privates, because there is nothing contemplated here in reference to the privates.

So far as the officers are concerned, while the naked right exists now and did exist to go out, they not having elected to go out, the question of expediency now arises, what shall be done with them? As a question of expediency, I hold that these men have a claim not only upon the sympathy, but the justice of the Government, not to turn them out of the service in a summary manner, but to wait for a little while, at least until Congress shall advisedly take some action in regard to this corps, whether to retain it in its present organization, or to incorporate it in some other organization of the service, or some other action. That is the whole extent and scope of this resolution; that they shall be temporarily retained, or that a request shall be made to the President to retain them temporarily, with a view to enable Congress to consider the subject and take some order in the shape of legislation in regard to the matter.

Mr. CONKLING. If I have not interrupted the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] too much already, I wish to make a further remark. If the whole purpose of the resolution is to hold this subject in impartial abeyance for action, the objection to it is no doubt slight, and I am willing to assume good reason exists for its adoption.

I will add, however, that having had recent occasion to see a considerable body, selected by chance, from officers of the Veteran Reserve corps, I certainly cannot quite agree that the officers of that corps, as a body, fall within the considerations of sympathy suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] On the contrary, I am bound to avow the belief that, so far as a large part of the officers not mustered out are concerned, they are a body of men quite as able, to say the least, to maintain and care for themselves as other persons now or lately in the military service, and out of the service, for whom nothing is proposed. No doubt there is a large percentage of exceptions to what I state. But I am sure I speak within bounds when I say that this corps, as it now stands, while containing many men to whom the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] are applicable, also contains a large number of men to whom those considerations have no application at all. And for one, when the time shall come to vote upon the question whether all these officers as a body are to be retained permanently in the service, or to be mustered out, if it must be wholly one way or wholly the other, I shall vote to muster them out as a measure of retrenchment and economy.

Mr. SCHENCK. The remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] take something of the form of argument and statement, as well as of inquiry. I shall not, however, undertake to reply to the extent of being drawn into a discussion of the merits of this body of officers to whom reference is made by the resolution. In the first place, I can only say, as to the future disposition to be made of this corps, I have not for one made up my mind what is the best legislation upon that subject. Whether to retain the corps as a body, or incorporate it in the regular Army, or to have a revision of it and an examination of those who at present constitute those officers, with a view to an admission of a portion of them; all of that I leave to be considered, discussed, and acted upon by Congress hereafter. The resolution proposes only that they shall not now be dismissed in a summary way, but that Congress should take time to determine what shall be done.

Now, as to the general merits of the officers in this corps, I have only to say that the conclusions which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] and myself have respectively reached upon this subject are very dissimilar. I hold that they are a body of men, taken as a whole, of exceedingly meritorious character. Eighty-five per cent. of those of whom this body consists have been wounded more or less severely in the public service, in fighting to put down the rebellion. It is a body of men who have proved themselves to the country and to the Government as entitled to both sympathy and justice from that country, and from the Government representing the country. I hold that if any class of men is entitled to the gratitude of this country, for services actually rendered, it is this body of men, whose character as a body the gentleman now calls in question.

But taking the gentleman's own proposition, that there is a large percentage of meritorious officers included in this body, that very fact is a reason why they should not be summarily and as a whole turned out until there shall be some opportunity, under the legislation of Congress, for culling out those who are meritorious, and giving them the opportunity to remain in the service.

Mr. CONKLING. I am sure that the gentleman from Ohio does not intend to put me in a false position.

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. He does so most emphatically when he represents me as calling in question the character of these gentlemen or any of them. All I mean to say is, that this corps includes a great many men who do not fall especially within the purview of the gentleman's remarks; not that I question the character of a single man in the corps, and not that I deny any part of the meed of praise which the gentleman wishes to bestow.

Mr. SCHENCK. I may have misunderstood the gentleman. I certainly did understand him to take the ground that at least a large majority of this corps are as capable of earning their living in some other way as any other class of men, and had no more claims upon the Government.

Mr. CONKLING. Not a majority—a considerable number.

Mr. SCHENCK. But, however that may be, I say that, upon the gentleman's own admission, a very considerable number—I think his words were "a large percentage"—are entitled to the respect, the sympathy, the gratitude, the justice of the Government for services performed. This admission is sufficient to make out my case, and show that we ought not to turn out in a summary way a body of men that includes within it any considerable percentage having that character, but that we can afford at least to wait a little while, and not put them in a position to require that they should apply for what I suppose the gentleman himself will admit they cannot receive while in the public service—pensions for the wounds which they have received and the disability they have incurred. Instead of putting them upon the pension list, I propose to keep them in the service for a little while until Congress can act on the subject understandingly; and I hope such action will be taken promptly.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SCHENCK. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. If this joint resolution should not pass, will not this whole matter be within the discretion of the Secretary of War, and cannot that officer, if he please, keep these men in the service until Congress shall act?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will answer that question by saying that the Secretary of War has no desire to dismiss these men summarily from the service; but, though it is within his power to retain them, he feels that, unless some intimation be made to him of a desire on the part of Congress that he shall wait until there can be some legislation on the subject, he will be obliged to muster them out, at least so many as are unemployed, even before legislation can be had. It is with the full concurrence of the Secretary of War, and after consultation with him on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, that this resolution is now offered.

The question being upon the passage of the joint resolution,

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 111, nays 50, not voting 21; as follows:

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HUNDRED DAYS' MEN.

Mr. DARLING submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into the propriety of allowing pensions to the surviving representatives of soldiers called into the service of the United States for the period of one hundred days, or less, and who died while in said service; said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

REGULAR ORDER.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to submit a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I dislike to object to gentlemen, but if we adhere to the regular order of business I think we will get along better. I will yield to the gentleman, and hear his resolution read.

DUTY ON SALT.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to consider the expediency of increasing the tariff or duty on foreign salt imported into the United States, by the amount of the duty imposed by the act of 1864, to provide for internal revenue, on salt manufactured in the United States, and to report by bill or otherwise at an early date.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

INDIANA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. ORTH presented additional testimony in the Indiana contested-election case of Washburne against Voorhees, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

KENTUCKY SOLDIERS' HOME.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call committees for reports.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on the Militia, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Militia be, and are hereby, directed to inquire into the condition of the Government property at Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and whether or not said property can be procured by the State of Kentucky as a home for her disabled and wounded soldiers; and said committee shall have power to report by bill or otherwise.

MISSOURI STATE MILITIA.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call on the States for resolutions.

Mr. LOAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of placing the troops known as the Missouri State militia on an equality with the other volunteer soldiers in the service of the United States; and that the committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

DAKOTA CAVALRY.

Mr. BURLEIGH submitted the following resolution:

Whereas it is represented that certain volunteers from the Territory of Dakota, known as companies A and B of the Dakota cavalry, were mustered into the service of the United States, along with their horses and equipments, supplied with their own private means, and that in pursuance of an order from the War Department, said horses were afterward taken into the possession of the Government, and there retained by them until the discharge of said companies, or lost or destroyed in the service, without compensation; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the facts, and if they shall find them substantially true as stated, report a bill providing such compensation as may be just to the said owners.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not wish that resolution to go to the Committee on Military Affairs in that way. It is a direct instruction to that committee, if they find such and such to be the facts, to report a bill without regard to the law. I suggest to the gentleman to modify his resolution so that the committee shall be instructed to inquire into the whole subject.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I accept that modification of my resolution.

The resolution as modified was adopted.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the consideration of resolutions calling for executive information laid over one day under the rules.

MEXICO.

A resolution submitted by Mr. GARFIELD requesting the President, if not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to this House any information in possession of any of the Executive Departments of the Government in reference to a so-called decree by the French agent in Mexico, under date of September 5, A. D. 1865, establishing slavery or peonage in that republic; and also what action, if any, has been taken by the Government of the United States in reference thereto.

The SPEAKER stated that a similar resolution had already been passed.

The resolution was laid upon the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER stated that the next business in order was the consideration of resolutions on which debate had arisen, and which had been laid over under the rule.

A resolution, submitted by Mr. MOORHEAD, directing that all public documents of which extra copies have been ordered to be printed for distribution, and which have not been delivered to the persons entitled thereto under the resolution of the last House of Representatives, shall now be delivered, by the officer having possession of the same, to the Representatives in this House of those districts whose former Representatives have not drawn the documents to which such districts were respectively entitled according to the rate of distribution established.

A similar resolution having been adopted, the resolution was laid upon the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF LOYAL STATES.

A resolution, submitted by Mr. HOOPER, directing the appointment of a committee of one from each State to consider and report, by bill or otherwise, if any and what action should be taken to repay to the several States the amounts of money advanced and paid by them for expenditures connected with the late war.

On motion of Mr. HOOPER, the resolution was referred to the select committee on the subject raised on motion of Mr. BLAINE.

EQUALITY OF CIVIL RIGHTS.

The next resolution taken from the Speaker's table was a resolution offered by Mr. FARNSWORTH, on the 6th instant, declaring that as all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, that cannot be regarded as a just Government which denies to a large portion of its citizens, who share both its pecuniary and military burdens, the right to express either their consent or dissent to the laws which subject them to taxation and to military duty, and which refuses them full protection in the enjoyment of their inalienable rights. That in imposing taxes upon the people of the United States none are excepted therefrom on account of color; so, too, in the laws enacted by Congress for enrolling and drafting into the military service of the Government those liable to military duty, no exemption because of color has been allowed; and while we have rewarded the foreigner, who is ignorant of our language and institutions, and who has but just landed upon our shores, with the right of citizenship for a brief service in the armies of the United States, good faith, as well as impartial justice, demands of this Government that it secure to the colored soldiers of the Union their equal rights and privileges as citizens of the United States. That we agree with the President of the United States that "mercy without justice is a crime;" and the admitting of rebels and traitors, upon whose hands the blood of slain patriots has scarcely dried, and upon whose hearts is the damning crime of starving to death loyal men taken as prisoners in battle, to the rights of citizenship and of suffrage, while we deny those rights to the loyal black man, who fought for the Union, and who fed and protected our starving soldiers, is a fit illustration of that truism.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not propose to ask the House to take action on that resolution now, and I will move that it be referred to the joint committee of fifteen when appointed.

Mr. CHANLER. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I intended to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not do it.

Mr. CHANLER. I regret exceedingly that the gentleman forgot to do what he intended—to move the previous question to prevent debate; but such a resolution as that cannot pass without rebuke from this side of the House, and unprepared as we are to meet it, we are forced, from his omission to discharge his duty toward the colored soldiers, to meet him at once.

He proposes to refer to the select committee of fifteen this resolution, a question entirely distinct from the purpose for which that committee is raised, and to place it side by side with the most important question ever referred by this House. These men, whom he and we all know to be yet in a condition of transition, he wishes to put upon a footing equal to those who not only in this war, but in every war, have carried the arms of this Government, and have secured to it under the national banner victories as great as those achieved by any nation, and greater by far than those achieved by the race of which the gentleman from Illinois is the champion.

I will not attempt at this time to assail the motive of the gentleman in giving to the black soldier his right and claim to the admiration of the white man. My object is to assail none, but I wish to appear here as the advocate of those the gentleman has assailed, and upon the threshold of this session to see that no stigma shall be cast upon the foreigners who may not have understood our language or known our laws, and this side of the House remain silent.

The merits of this question the gentleman from Illinois is better able to describe than myself. We know the services the black soldier has rendered to this Government, and when the time comes for rewarding him for his past services by those emoluments which are bestowed upon the brave and the suffering I will not be wanting in that hour. But there is, and undoubtedly will be, a difference between us as to the amount of reward to be meted out. I do not, with that gentleman, consider that the problem of the negro race is solved. I am not prepared at once to raise them from the humble pedestal upon which they now stand, to that high point of public approbation which the foreigners in this country have won for themselves through generations of toil, suffering, and oppression. I take issue with the gentleman on that point. He assumes that the problem is solved, and that the black man is our equal. I deny the proposition, but I do not mean thereby to deprecate the black man. I waive all such comparisons; but I deem this resolution an act of positive injustice in its wording; and I hope I am not using too strong language in saying that I deem it an insult to the white citizens of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I would inquire if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. STEVENS. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but I must move that the House proceed to business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order, but the gentleman from New York will be entitled to the floor when this subject is resumed. The Chair will have the rule read.

The Clerk read from Barclay's Manual, as follows:

"It is the invariable practice to permit a member, upon the expiration of the morning hour, to take the floor, even though another may be occupying it, to make a motion to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table."

Mr. CHANLER. I am content.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope that the gentleman from New York does not desire to occupy further time. If he does not I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow the resolution to be referred to the committee.

Mr. CHANLER. I must be excused from yielding for that purpose. We, upon this side of the House, have very few opportunities of being heard, and I do not want to lose the chance.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How much more time has the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. Fifty-five minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. I must insist on my motion.

The question was taken, and Mr. STEVENS's motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The SPEAKER stated that the only business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House for the appointment of a joint committee on the subject of reconstruction.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line one strike out the word "Senate;" and in line two, after the word "Representatives," strike out the words "in Congress assembled" and insert in lieu thereof "the Senate concurring;" and in line fifteen strike out all after the word "otherwise" to the end of the resolution, so that the resolution will read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee of fifteen members shall be appointed, nine of whom shall be members of the House and six members of the Senate, who shall inquire into the condition of the States which formed the so-called confederate States of America, and report whether they, or any of them, are entitled to be represented in either House of Congress, with leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate. It is proper that I should say one word. The Senate took what to them appeared to be the proper view of their prerogatives, and though they did not seem to differ with us as to the main object, the mode of getting at it with them was essential, and they very properly put the resolution in the shape they considered right.

They have changed the form of the resolution so as not to require the assent of the President; and they have also considered that each House should determine for itself as to the reference of papers by its own action at the time. To this I see no objection, and while moving to concur, I will say now that when it is in order I shall move, or some other gentleman will move when his State is called, a resolution precisely similar or very nearly similar to the provision which the Senate has stricken out, only applicable to the House alone. I merely give that notice now. I cannot move it as an amendment to this resolution, because that would send the resolution back to the other House, which is not desirable. I now move the previous question.

Mr. RAYMOND. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania waive the previous question long enough to allow me to make of him or of the Speaker a single inquiry?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. RAYMOND. I understood him to say that the Senate had so changed the form of this resolution as to avoid the necessity of getting for it the signature of the President.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand it so.

Mr. RAYMOND. I wish to inquire, not being versed in the usages of the House or its rules, whether this clause of the Constitution does not apply. It is the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution:

"Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill."

I do not understand how that can be evaded. It is possible that the usages of the House may dispense with it.

Mr. STEVENS. Under the usage of the House, a resolution in this form is never sent to the President, and it was not desired that this resolution should be. I know it has not been the practice heretofore to send such resolutions to the President.

Mr. RAYMOND. I did not wish to make a point on it. I rose simply for information, as the point is entirely new to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as making the point. The Chair would decide the point, if made as a point of order—the precedents are all one way—but the Chair does not decide points of order except when made.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand that the matter has been understood to be controlled by another section of the Constitution, which authorizes each House to make rules for its own government. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and being put, the amendments of the Senate were agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Will it be in order for me now to offer an independent resolution in regard to this subject?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROOKS. We will not object on our side.

Mr. STEVENS. I will not offer it now.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed House bill No. 23, entitled "An act to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States."

EQUALITY OF CIVIL RIGHTS—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. FARNSWORTH, upon which Mr. CHANLER was entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHANLER. Mr. Speaker, in my humble opinion, by resolutions of this kind it is sought to reduce this contest between the two races down to a legislative enactment. The reference of it to such a committee as this may be philanthropic or it may not. But so far as it is the act of a member of the Military Committee I deem it unnecessary; I think I can satisfy the House that it is unnecessary, from a reference to the record of the struggle we have but just gone through in regard to black troops.

The organization of the Army, so far as the black soldier is concerned, is entirely in the hands of the Executive of the United States. He holds that organization of black troops entirely in his control, as firmly as any despot may control the armies of any European monarchy. The gentlemen of the Military Committee will correct me if I am in error when I say that a simple act of Congress authorizing the Executive to call the black man into the service of the armies of the United States for the purposes of labor, empowered the President of the United States to raise the hordes of negro troops which now stand enrolled in the service of this Government. I do not propose to make objection to the past; I do not assail the merit of those soldiers; but I ask the members of this House to reflect upon the necessity of such a proposition as this; when, under an act of Congress, in time of war, a black army could be set on foot, why do you need a select committee to consider this subject? If it was sufficient, by the simple act of the Secretary of War issuing a general order, to enroll these black troops, let them now stand upon their merits, and let their services be rewarded by those who called them into existence as soldiers. Let them take their turn and their chance with the Veteran Reserve corps; with the privates of that corps which have been mustered out of service and are now discharging their duties as private citizens. That is the right way. They fought for this Government, and have suffered as much as the blacks have suffered. I draw no distinction of color. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] who introduced this resolution has deemed it proper to load it with opprobrium of those who have done their duty as well as any black soldier who ever served. He made the comparison, and all the merit of the distinction is his.

But to pass on, with regard to the necessity of this resolution. Until you have established in your military system a perfect equality from your private soldier up to the highest officer allowed by law, and until these people shall come before you recognized by general enactment, I deem this reference to the select committee a special job for the particular purpose of inflaming public passion and public prejudice. It belongs to no system pertaining to the organization of the Army, but belongs rather to that institution known as "the nigger in the fence." It belongs to all those extraordinary enactments for the purpose of keeping up a sectional prejudice against an established existing power in another section, and which have fed the Republican party into its present fat proportions. It enables them to-day, while arousing the prejudices of the people in peculiar sections, to hold the power of the Government at their will.

From a political point of view, this resolution is particularly unnecessary at this time. The administration of power is so completely in the hands of the Republican party that, I take it, it is needless for them, as a political job, to agitate this question. If I understand this resolution, it is a most dangerous one, and, I think, will prove a fatal petard to the engineer who introduced it. If such a resolution as that is necessary to come from a member of the Military Committee, if it is desirable for the party to which he belongs, and the people whom he represents, that he should mark his career here, and the career of his party, as antagonistic to the white population of the country, who, though born abroad, are united to us by every bond of civilization, blood, and historic association, I can only say that the introduction of such a resolution is more fatal to him and his party than to the white foreigner or those who hold the negro as his inferior. This side of the House can lose nothing by the passage of this resolution, but may gain much. I admire the cool moral courage which prompted its introduction, while I deprecate the prejudice that gave it birth. By the introduction of this resolution, the gentleman inaugurates a system which sprung up in time of war, and which, if the policy of the Administration is uttered by the Executive, is to be the policy of this Government and of both branches of Congress.

If the policy of the Administration as announced by the Executive in his message is to become a fixed policy of the party which raised him to power, or is to become the established policy of this Government in its domestic relations, I look upon the passage of this resolution as throwing down the gauntlet to that portion of this nation in which the black population largely predominates, where society is in chaos, and where the black race will be found; if gentlemen will take the trouble to learn, falling back into a system of semi-barbarism. The gentleman will find that, while he seeks to force upon one section of this Union the prejudices of another, he is not adding to that system of reorganization of society which it is the duty of every member on this floor to advocate and by every means in his power to advance.

But, sir, this question of colored troops means more than meets the ear. It means an established police, whose ramifications shall reach to the remotest corners of this land, whose different parts shall be under the control of the central Government, not for the purpose of maintaining that equal justice and that harmony of administration which are essential in all representative forms of Government, but for the purpose of putting the heel of central power upon that portion of the white race recently in rebellion, but now begging humbly for readmission to the protection of this Government.

I look upon such measures as these as dangerous to the peace and welfare of the country; as distracting the councils of the nation, and dividing the dominant race, who have held in their hands the sovereignty of this Government, which was won by their fathers, inherited by them, and, I hope, is to be handed down by us in its purity, for the government of our own race as well as those whom destiny may have put beneath us. I am willing, sir, to raise the black man to every honorable position for which his capacities fit him; but I am opposed to any effort which shall, by taking him from the position in society to which he has been accustomed, expose him to dangers which he is not fitted to meet.

These are my opinions. I know that they militate against the prejudices of those who believe that there is no difference between races or colors of men. I believe that, on this subject, the declaration of the Constitution of this Government is plain. "The people of the United States" means that race to which we who now constitute the Congress of the United States belong. I hope that the purity of the white race, the representation of the white race, and the sovereignty of this people as a white people will be maintained boldly, in the face of prejudice and in the face of obloquy.

Sir, this resolution is premature, not only as a matter of policy, as I have already remarked, but from the condition of that race. Those who have studied the history of the American Government for the last four years must have observed, as a wonderful proof of the innate prejudice of a certain portion of this people, that while every exertion has been made to protect the black man, every opportunity has been taken to sacrifice the life of the red man. If this love of so-called "equality," this intensified philanthropy which has so agitated the political nerves of a certain portion of the people of this country is sincere, why have their efforts been so restricted? Why have they not raised up the black man to a position at least equal to that of the Indian, who fights for himself and defies your arms? While using the armies of the United States to keep the Indian in subjection, you are endeavoring to raise the negro to an equality with the white race, for which he is not fit; an effort illogical, unphilosophical, and which must finally fail. Until the negro is elevated by education and culture to a grade of intelligence which he has never yet shown the ability to attain, you are unwise in seeking to place him in a position, the duties of which he cannot comprehend, and to expose him to dangers with which he is not competent to cope.

Sir, the character of this resolution is at this time prophetic. I am happy that, incidentally, we are afforded this indication whereby the members on this side of the House, and the sound-thinking people of the whole country may understand that the rights of one portion of our citizens, who have been invited by our legislation to make their homes here are to be stricken down—that, in one word, immigration is to be checked until the black man, by the aid of the central Government, is able to compete with the white labor of the country. If this resolution means anything in behalf of the black man, it means that while you are blindly seeking to do a good thing toward the negro, you are doing a very great injury to all classes of society in this country. That resolution, sir, does not bear the stamp of the wisdom and the policy of this Government which raised this country into first rank among nations, and has extended its area from ocean to ocean, for, sir, if it belonged to the wise legislation of the past, it would provide that the foreigner seeking our shores should have every advantage. It would have promised him a happy future, a home, and all those charms which the western world can afford to those who are fortunate enough to have homes in its midst. It would have avoided the odious comparison between foreigners and negroes, and at least have been silent on the ignorance of foreigners. There was a time, not very remote, when Illinois was a Territory, and when these very ignorant foreigners, alluded to by the resolution, wandered in that direction under the promise of homes and encouragement held out to them by a wise and patriotic policy. The people of the West then sent out their emissaries to the farthest land to induce men to come here and settle; yes, sir, men ignorant of our language, ignorant of our laws, and deficient, perhaps, in many of those sterling qualities which characterize the favorite class of the gentleman from Illinois. They were invited here and dealt kindly with notwithstanding their ignorance of our language; and I believe that one of the noblest monuments that policy has developed is Illinois, rich in the abundance of the products of her soil. She owes much to these very ignorant foreigners. They were the Germans to whom the gentleman must allude as ignorant of our language; they were many of them ignorant Irishmen, these hosts of industrious men who have brought his native State, or rather his section, to its present glorious fertility and beauty. Yet the gentleman now in the American Congress rises up and denounces the ignorance of our language and our laws of these same foreigners as a matter with which they are to be branded! Yet these immigrants and their sons have laid the foundation of the glory of this mighty nation. We know now many of our monuments of greatness we are indebted to them for, and yet the gentleman talks in this high-flown way of these foreigners who are ignorant of our language and our laws. Why, sir, we and our laws and our institutions are the result of immigration. This land is the refuge of white men from all parts of the earth, and they have been allowed to take for their assistance the various elements of civilization, whether the negro or Indian, for the purpose of carrying out some great and hidden design of the Ruler of the universe.

By what right does the gentleman from Illinois brand his fellow-men, who, two generations later than himself and his ancestors, have come to find liberty and homes in the United States of North America? Is it philanthropy? Is it patriotism? On the contrary, is it not prejudice?

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt the gentleman agrees with me perfectly in what I have said. I believe that in his bosom he knows this is a nation for the white race. I believe that brave officer, who has fought, and I have no doubt is willing to fight again for our institutions, knows that when his blood is shed it is to hand down to his children the proud title of being American citizens. He does not mean to declare that there is no pride in his breast of race or color. He does not look upon himself as the inferior of the black man. Why, sir, if he went to the shores of Africa, and met an African chief arrayed in barbaric splendor, and could not speak the language of the country, he would, according to the theory of his resolution, if not able to speak the African language, be the black man's inferior. And there are countries where the gentleman would be arraigned for ignorance if he were incapable of speaking no other language than his own—countries high in civilization. If I understand the gentleman correctly, every man who does not understand the English language is inferior to himself. That seems to be the logic of that resolution. Now, when it is found necessary for these lovers of African liberty and African civilization to seek refuge from the miserable prejudices which they entertain of the white race, I hope they will take a sail to Congo river, and there pitch their tents, recline in the shade, and surround themselves with the peculiar fascinations and privileges of Africa, where Venus allows no limit to her power, and love rules every minute of the hour. There they will find full scope for their prejudices in behalf of the black race.

Sir, we have had enough of this love and zeal for the black race. It is an epidemic akin to the black vomit. It has generated in our streets into a sort of yellow fever. We have a color a shade lighter, but no better because of the mixture of white blood. If there is morality, dignity, and common pride of manhood in the people of this country, there will be need of some stronger enactment than resolutions such as this to protect the black man. You are trifling, gentlemen; with a mighty power. You are insulting the noblest pride of man, and that, too, for party purposes. If you think the humble immigrant comes to this country with less pride than you, if you think he will sacrifice the dignity of his race, you are mistaken.

I regret and shall always regret those manifestations of outrage by which the white man rules this continent. I regret the outrages which the British empire committed against those who recently rose in Jamaica. Two or three thousand human beings have been sacrificed in a brutal and summary manner. For what? Was it philanthropy, or was it simply British cruelty, or was it prejudice of color? Whatever view you may take of it, one thing is certain, the black race is doomed if you array the white man against him, as this resolution does. Arouse the passions of the immigrants to this country against the humble laborer of the South, and what will be the result? The first field to be cultivated will be the field of battle, and the extermination of this race, which you pretend to protect, will be the certain and inevitable result.

And yet in the face of all this, the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois leads off in an attack upon the policy of this Administration after a most happy change in its treatment of the freedmen. You propose by again altering that policy to array one race against the other, and to form two hostile parties on every field of industry and labor in this country, and to drive the negro where no white man will follow to compete with him; or else to stop immigration and limit the number of hands which shall advance the civilization of one section while you cramp that of the other. It tends to no good. If men ignorant of our language are to be turned from our shores, and the negro, ignorant of nearly everything, is to be protected by the Administration, I would ask the wisecracks of philanthropy who propose such measures as this, where they are to find the crops for export, the cotton for our manufactories, and the white men to meet the necessities of war as well as to fulfill the duties of peace?

I leave it to those who advance such a measure to explain the matter. I have met it as I would meet such a resolution at any time, promptly with opposition. I regret that I felt myself called upon to delay the action of the House, but I deemed it an important question. And I regret I was called upon to take up so important a subject with so little opportunity to arrange the arguments which in abler hands will perfectly and fully meet the case.

While I admire the coolness with which the party in the majority on this floor advance every dogma of their principles, I must thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] for his most admirable forgetfulness which allowed me to state my views, and apologize to the House for the delay which I have caused.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I presume the House and the country have been greatly edified by the highly eloquent speech of the gentleman from New York, and I hope the House is now prepared to refer the resolution to the committee indicated in my motion. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that the resolution be laid on the table, and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 113, not voting 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Benjamin, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Chandler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, James M. NQT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Buckland, Culver, Dawes, De-frees, Delano, Donnelly, Dumont, Goddard, Harris, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, Jones, Kasson, Miller, Paine, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Sawyer, Stillwell, Strouse, Robert T. Van Horn, and Voorhees—26.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

The question recurred on the motion to refer the resolution to the select committee, on which the yeas and nays had been demanded.

Mr. JOHNSON withdrew the demand for the yeas and nays.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HONOR TO THE LATE PRESIDENT.

The next business in order was the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. INGERSOLL on the 6th instant, and laid over under the rule, debate arising thereon:

Resolved, That the committee to be appointed under the resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee of one from each State, to take into consideration what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express concerning the event of the decease of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, be directed to take into consideration the expediency of providing for the completion of the Washington monument, with a view to the dedication of said monument to the commemoration of the virtues and patriotism of those great and good men, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved that the resolution be referred to the select committee named in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the memorial and accompanying papers of Mrs. A. S. Henry, widow of the late Major William S. Henry.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. For what purpose are they to be withdrawn? It is not the custom of the House to give permission to have papers withdrawn without notice of what use is to be made of them, and without copies being left. Does the gentleman desire to refer them to another committee or to the Court of Claims?

Mr. ANCONA. They may be presented to the House hereafter in the shape of a claim. Application has been made to me to withdraw the papers, I presume for the purpose of presenting another claim.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It has never been the habit of the House to give such permission unless copies are left.

The SPEAKER. The usage is to withdraw the original papers, but leave copies.

Mr. ANCONA. Well, I have no objection to taking that course.

Leave was then granted for the withdrawal of the papers, copies being left.

SOPHIA SCHIMMELPENNIG.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill for the relief of Sophia Schimmelpennig; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

Mr. WENTWORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. WINDOM, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill for the better organization of Indian affairs in Arizona Territory; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

COMMISSARIES OF SUBSISTENCE.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution for the relief of certain commissaries of subsistence of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE IN GERMAN.

Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That, as there are many persons who have proved themselves patriotic and loyal men in the recent effort to sustain the national life, but who have a limited knowledge of the English language, and yet desire to read the message of our patriotic President, ten thousand copies additional of the President's message be printed for distribution in the German language.

SALE OF MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to provide for the subdivision and sale of the gold and silver lands of the United States, and others containing valuable minerals, for the coining of the products of such lands, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, United States Navy, to the active list from the retired list; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution authorizing the entry for consumption of goods in bond, on payment of their respective rates of duty; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KUYKENDALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to extend the benefits of the bounty land act of March 3, 1855, to the soldiers, sailors, and seamen of the United States who served in the late war of 1861; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EIGHT HOUR SYSTEM OF LABOR.

Mr. NIBLACK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the propriety and expediency of providing, by law, for the adoption of what is known as the eight-hour system of labor in all matters and places to which the jurisdiction of Congress extends; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The question was taken, and the resolution agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following:

Resolved, That in view of the magnitude and importance of the Pacific railroad as a means by which to secure the rapid and permanent settlement of our new States and Territories; the development of their vast resources, agricultural and mineral; a reliable postal communication between the Atlantic and Pacific within our borders; as well as ample and efficient military protection of all classes, settlers, travelers, and miners, against Indian hostilities; and as a bond of union between the East and the West, uniting them in closer relationship, socially, politically, and commercially, any unnecessary delay in the progress and completion of this great work will be a matter of public concern; and the committee having charge of the Pacific railroad are hereby instructed to inquire what action, if any, is required on the part of Congress to expedite the same; and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was agreed to.

LOSSES BY THE WAR.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider and report whether any of the inhabitants of the States declared to be in insurrection, by the proclamations of the President, dated August 16, 1861, and July 1, 1862, are entitled to compensation for any losses of property occasioned by the operations of the armies of the United States employed in the suppression of the rebellion.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it be read, for we have so many proposed amendments to the Constitution that I want to know what this can be.

The joint resolution was then read a first and second time. It provides for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, so "that no State shall make any distinction in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race or color."

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. SCOFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to extend the jurisdiction of United States commissioners; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution donating certain Government property in Illinois to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of that State; and I ask its consideration at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Let it be read for information.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the barracks and all other camp equipment at the various military camps within the State of Illinois, except at Rock Island, shall be donated to the Soldiers' Orphans' Home of said State; and that all such property shall be transferred and delivered to the said Soldiers' Orphans' Home as soon as the Government can dispense with the use of the same.

Mr. DAVIS. I must object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Then I ask leave to introduce it and have it referred.

No objection was made, and the joint resolution was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHARLOTTE BENCE.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask leave to introduce a bill, which I ask to have read, and upon which I ask the House to act at this time.

The bill was for the relief of Charlotte Bence, widow of Philip H. Bence, late captain of company F, thirtieth regiment Iowa volunteer infantry, and provides for placing her name on the pension roll at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from the 1st of October, 1864, and for and during her widowhood.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the bill may be considered and acted upon at the present time.

Mr. DAVIS and Mr. LE BLOND objected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I trust that the gentlemen will withdraw their objections until I can explain the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. I cannot consent that the bill shall be acted on now. Let it go to the proper committee and be examined. If it be reported formally, I suppose there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope, then, that the bill will be received for the purpose of reference.

There being no objection to the introduction of the bill, it was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REMISSION OF MILITARY SENTENCES.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs inquire into the justice and expediency of paying to soldiers whose pay has been withheld in pursuance of the sentences of military courts and orders, upon conviction for minor offenses, the amounts due to them up to the time of conviction, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DAVIS. I object.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at thirty-five minutes past two o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1865.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDGAR H. GRAY, offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art from everlasting to everlasting, God, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever: Thy years fail not; Thy days have no end. What is man that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou dost visit him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and yet hast crowned him with life and immortality beyond the grave. O God, we pray that all the dispensations of Thy providence may be sanctified to our good, and that we may be made to realize that our term of existence is brief upon earth; that man cometh up like the flower and is soon cut down; the wind passeth over him, and he is gone; the places that know him now shall know him no more forever. So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom and become wise unto everlasting life. Guide and direct us in the discharge of all the responsibilities resting upon us, and when we have discharged our duty and fulfilled our mission and accomplished our sojournings here upon earth, may we die lamented by the good and go up on high to receive the approbation of the Judge, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord forever." Amen.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in obedience to law, a statement prepared by the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, showing the appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1865, the expenditures for the same period, and the balances on hand; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to make a motion to which, I suppose, there will be no objection. It is, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest whether it is not advisable to postpone that motion for a little time. I have had an intimation that some matters may come in from the other House that may require to be acted on at once, and the delay of a day might be of importance.

Mr. HARRIS. I made the motion now, because I supposed the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Foor] would present resolutions which would perhaps preclude the making of such a motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only make the suggestion. I do not object to the motion. It is for the Senate to decide.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. There is a vacancy upon the Committee on Pensions, occasioned by the withdrawal of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Wilson.] I move that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR SYSTEM.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to offer a resolution: Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the adoption of the eight-hour system of labor in all employments and places to which the jurisdiction of Congress extends, so far as the same may be practicable, and to report by bill or otherwise.

This is simply a resolution of inquiry, and I presume there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that I have any objection to the resolution. It is one, however, instructing a committee to report upon the rightfulness or propriety of adopting an eight-hour labor system, and I think it had better go to some other committee than the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. It presents no question of law, and is not at all suited, I think, to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest that it go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think that is the appropriate committee, because the application of such a system, so far as the Government is concerned, would be in the navy-yards and naval stations.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is a very proper suggestion.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the resolution had better not be adopted at all. I do not think the question is one that comes properly before us at this time. All these things, I believe, are regulated by the laws of the particular States; and so far as the navy-yards are concerned, we have a law on the statute book that the men employed in the navy-yards shall work the same number of hours as similar employes in the private ship-yards around the navy-yard, so that we are dependent in regard to this matter in our different yards entirely upon the legislation of the different States, and that is the way it ought to be.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into the discussion of the merits of the question at this time. I seldom hear an objection to a mere resolution of inquiry that is presented, which proposes a reference to a committee. I think the Senator from Iowa yesterday expressed himself as somewhat surprised that any objection should be taken to a simple resolution of inquiry addressed to a committee. I think that the Judiciary Committee is the proper committee to which this question should go, and I should be glad to have it referred to it. The committee, if it sees proper, can report in any manner it chooses, by bill or otherwise, or ask to be discharged. The question can then come up for discussion on its merits.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GRIMES. I merely inquire as to whether it is usual to instruct a committee to report. I believe we instruct them to inquire or request them to inquire; but is it the habit of the Senate in a resolution of reference to require a committee to report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order to introduce a resolution of that sort.

Mr. GRIMES. I believe it has not been the usual practice.

Mr. BROWN. I do not desire to press the resolution this morning.

Mr. CONNESS. I object to its consideration this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that there was any objection to its consideration, and having been debated to such an extent, it would seem the objection has been waived, and the Chair thinks it too late now to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BROWN. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside if there be no objection.

DEATH OF SENATOR COLLAMER.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senate to suspend, for this day, its deliberations upon public affairs, that we may offer fitting and appropriate tribute to the character and the memory of one who has long been associated with us in the national councils, but who is with us now no more. Since our assembling here at this present session, we have all had occasion to remark—none of us can have failed to remark—the absence of one of our number; one whom we have long been accustomed to meet and to hold counsel with in these halls. An elder brother, who has long mingled with us in our deliberations here; a wise and discreet statesman; a learned and judicious counselor; a pure patriot; a just and an upright man, has been removed from among us by the hand of death. A venerable form, long familiar to our sight, has been taken away out of our presence. I bring no new message to this body—for it has already been heralded throughout the country—yet none the less sad, in making the formal announcement to the Senate of the death of my late colleague, Hon. Jacob COLLAMER. It is eminently fit and becoming, Mr. President, as it is also in accordance with an approved and sacred custom, that we pause for an hour in the ordinary routine of our daily labors, that we may consecrate that hour to the virtues and the memory of a deceased and lamented associate, who has shared so long and so largely in our regards, and in the public confidence, for his mature wisdom and for his great moral excellence.

"Your colleague, Judge COLLAMER, is dead!" was the startling telegraphic message I received at my home about five weeks ago. He expired at his residence in Woodstock, Vermont, on the evening of the 9th of November past, after a brief illness of little more than a single week, at his own home, in the midst of his own affectionate and devoted household, in the full exercise of his intellectual faculties, with an abiding and unshaken faith in the Christian religion, and in the cherished hope of a blissful immortality.

But three weeks before his decease he visited Montpelier, the capital of the State, some fifty miles distant from his residence, to attend the funeral services of a younger and favorite brother. Having paid the last sad offices of respect and affection to a brother's memory, he returned to his own home; but alas! only to lay himself down soon to die. By this dispensation, so sudden and so sad, the Senate of the United States has lost one of the oldest, most experienced, and most trusted of its members; the country one of the ablest and purest of its statesmen; society, and the church of which he was a member, one of their worthiest and brightest exemplars; my own State, her most eminent citizen; and this day there is mourning through all her borders.

JACOB COLLAMER was born in Troy, in the State of New York, the 8th day of January, A. D. 1791, and was, therefore, at the time of his decease, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, and in the number of his years was the senior member of this body. In early childhood he was removed, with his father's family, to Burlington, Vermont. There his early life was spent. There he was educated. There his academic years were passed. He entered the University of Vermont at the age of fifteen, where he graduated in 1810, with credit and commendation for good conduct and scholarship, thus giving early promise and hope to his friends of future eminence and usefulness. This promise and these hopes were not doomed to disappointment.

Immediately upon the conclusion of his collegiate course he entered the law office of the late Judge Aldis, of St. Albans, then an eminent and leading lawyer at the bar in the State. Having passed through the usual preparatory course of legal studies, he was admitted to the bar in 1813, and entered at once upon his professional career. After remaining a few months at St. Albans, and thence stopping for a year or two in the town of Randolph, he finally settled at Royalton, in the county of Windsor, where he resided during the whole period of his active professional career, and until he removed to Woodstock, in the same county, in 1836, where he continued till the time of his death. Here his advancement in professional business and reputation was alike rapid and gratifying, and soon placed him in the front ranks of the leading men of his time at the bar. Forensic laurels, fresh and fair, gathered thick and fast upon his youthful brow, and he became at once the compeer, as he was the contemporary, of Prentiss and Phelps, and Royce and Bates; of Van Ness and Upham; of Skinner and Hall and Everett, and early took rank even with the senior and more advanced champions of the profession, like Daniel Chipman and David Edmond, and Chauncey Langdon, and Horatio Seymour, and Charles K. Williams, and Jonathan H. Hubbard, and Charles Marsh, and William C. Bradley, who had long held supremacy at the bar in our State. It was in a school of practice like this; it was in contact and collision with minds like these, that his own powers were quickened and invigorated, and in which he was early trained and disciplined to habits of close application and study, and which became the fixed habit of his life, and was, indeed, one of the chief elements of his success, and which enabled him to reach and to maintain the post of eminence and distinction, awarded to him by the popular judgment, in the front ranks of the legal profession.

During the period of his active professional practice, although his time and attention were chiefly engrossed in his professional duties, yet, besides holding for several years the local offices of register of probate, and of State's attorney for the county of Windsor, he was, at four different times, elected by the people of Royalton to the popular branch of the State Legislature. He served through the several sessions, devoting himself, with his accustomed vigilance and fidelity, to the interests of his constituents and of the State, and took a prominent and influential part in the debates and the business of the body of which he was a member.

In January, A. D. 1836, and while then a judge upon the bench, he was a delegate from his town to the constitutional convention then holden at Montpelier, to consider and to act upon certain proposed amendments to the State constitution, the most important of which was a proposition to abolish the old "Gubernatorial Council," so called, and in its stead to constitute a legislative branch having coordinate powers with the House of Representatives, to be called "the Senate." This proposition was vigorously opposed in the convention, and brought out a protracted and perhaps the ablest parliamentary discussion ever had in the State upon any single question. The convention contained an unusual number of the leading and foremost men of the State. Judge COLLAMER led the debate in the affirmative of the question. The proposition was carried; and I feel myself authorized to say, mainly through his influence.

In 1833, and after a successful and even brilliant career at the bar of just twenty years, he was placed, by vote of the Legislature, upon the bench of the supreme court of the State, a position for which he possessed peculiar and pre-eminent qualifications, and which he held by successive elections nine years, and until he was returned by the people of his congressional district to the national House of Representatives. As a judge upon the bench he added luster to the reputation he had already acquired as a lawyer at the bar. He possessed intellectual and moral qualities most essential and requisite to the best discharge of the duties of a high judicial magistracy—a clear and discriminating mind, an impartial judgment, strong practical good sense, a profound and instinctive sense of right and wrong, patience of investigation, an inflexible integrity, and a sincere and earnest desire to reach a just and correct conclusion. He held the scales of justice, therefore, with a firm and even hand. All these qualities were brought into practical application, and were beautifully exemplified throughout his whole judicial career; and when he retired from the bench he laid aside the judicial ermine untarnished, and "without spot or wrinkle or any such thing."

From the bench he was transferred by the voice of the people of his district to the United States House of Representatives, where he took his seat in 1843, succeeding Horace Everett, long a distinguished member of that body. By successive elections, he continued an active and useful member of the House, though most of the time in a small political minority, until March, 1849, when he was called to the Cabinet of President Taylor as one of his confidential and constitutional advisers, and placed at the head of the General Post Office Department. Under his judicious and energetic administration, the vast and complicated machinery of that Department was brought into system and order and efficiency. He held this position until the death of President Taylor in July, 1850, when, with all his associates in the Cabinet, of whom the distinguished Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] now present, was one, he resigned his place, and returned, a private citizen, to his home in Vermont.

He was not long permitted, however, to remain in the quietude of private life. The people of his State still demanded his services in a public capacity, and in the following October he was chosen, by the Legislature, presiding judge of the court in the judicial circuit in which he resided. He held this office through four years by successive legislative elections, discharging its duties with "all diligence and fidelity," and to the entire popular acceptance and approval, when in October, 1854, he was elected to the Senate of the United States, and he took his seat as a member of this body the first Monday of December, 1855. He was re-elected to his seat here in 1860, with an almost unprecedented degree of unanimity. He has been with us and of us just ten years. His course through all this decade, embracing, as it does, perhaps, the most important period in the history of the Republic, is familiar to us all—it is familiar to all the country. During this period, and on this forum, where grave questions of State; where questions of peace and war; where questions of foreign and domestic policy; where questions of trade and commerce; questions of finance and revenue and taxation; here where every variety of question pertaining to governmental administration, is presented for consideration, for discussion, and for final determination—here, in this forum, he has won for himself a national reputation, an honorable and an enduring name, as a learned and able Senator; as a wise and discreet counselor; as a judicious and upright legislator; in short, as a Christian statesman—and a Christian statesman, it has been well and truly said, is the glory of his country—who has borne himself erect and above reproach through all this career, and kept himself "unspotted from the world." By the very constitution of his nature he revolted at every form and species of fraud and corruption, or of wrong and injustice. No man ever ventured to approach him with the offer of a price for his honor. Jobbers in iniquity came not into his presence. Purity of motive and integrity of purpose, unsullied and unassailed, were alike the law and the rule of his life, in public or in private action. All of us who have known him longest and known him best, will, with one accord, concede to him the possession, in an eminent degree, of what Cicero commends as the bona Senatoris prudentia—the "wisdom of a good Senator."

It is no less our duty, Mr. President, than it is our grateful privilege, in the midst of this sorrow, in this high place, and in the presence of the American people—if I may borrow the language of another on a like occasion—to pay the tribute of our recognition of the national loss, in the removal of those to whom we have been accustomed to look, especially in times of doubt and difficulty, for direction and for counsel. Such a loss is the more deeply felt, occurring at a period like the present, when questions novel and of paramount importance, growing out of a new and changed condition of public affairs, are to be considered and determined—questions vital to the best interests of the country, and involving the highest welfare, and even the very integrity and faith of the Government. The national heart has been laden with mourning and grief at the loss of many gallant and noble and patriotic sons of the Republic—numbering in its list of the mighty dead the chosen Chief Magistrate of your country—during this passing year now drawing to its close, to whom we were all looking for counsel and for guidance in these times of perplexity and trial. In the midst of these great bereavements, we have only to bow in humble submission to the will of Him who chastiseth "not willingly," and who "doeth all things well." It is only left to us to cherish the memories of the good and great who have been taken from us, to imbibe the spirit of their teachings, and to follow on, so far forth as we may do it, in the light of their examples.

Like most of the distinguished men of our time, and especially of our country; like most of those who have risen to the high places of power and trust; like most of the men who stand at the head of affairs in the various departments of life, whether political, professional, literary, commercial, or other pursuit; like most of the men who in our day and country have made their impress upon society, and who have written their own history upon the times in which they lived—like these men, JACOB COLLAMER was emphatically the author and the arbiter of his own fortunes. He owed nothing at all to the fortuitous aids or the accidental circumstances of birth or fortune or family patronage. Under God, he made his own fame and his own fortunes. With his own hands he cleared the rugged pathway which led him up to the entrance door of the temple of honor and renown. He made his own good name, and made it known and honorable among men. With the advantage of a gifted mind, and with a resolute purpose to fulfill the great end of his being—the service of God and his country—by application and industry, by energy and perseverance, and an honest and an honorable life of well-doing, he formed his own character and won his own distinction, and left it as a rich inheritance to his children, and as an example to those who shall come up after him.

Other and like examples abound through all our history. So did Daniel Webster, in whom the son of an humble Salisbury farmer among the granite hills of New Hampshire becomes in after years, and by popular appellation, the "great expounder of the American Constitution;" the great American Senator; the great American statesman, who stands, by the common recognition of mankind, as the intellectual monarch of his age. So did Abraham Lincoln—clarum nomen—the poor Kentucky boy; the martyr President, who, under God, had saved a country and redeemed a race; the martyr President, who, having saved his country from the great rebellion of all history, and redeemed a race from the bondage of centuries, falling by the assassin hand of treason, went down to the grave amid a nation's tears, and amid the requiem of a nation's wailing, yet bearing with him to the tomb more of the world's affections, more of its sympathies, and more of its honors too, than were ever accorded to other man, or prince, or potentate of earth; and whose highest eulogium is spoken in the universal lamentation. And so—I beg pardon, if in the least I offend against the proprieties of this occasion, or of this presence—so did Andrew Johnson, the humble mechanic from the mountains of North Carolina, who now, by the will of the American people, and by a providential dispensation, wields the power and challenges the homage of the first magistrate of the nation, and on whose will or word to-day, more than of other living man, hang the destinies of this American Republic. These are great examples. These are illustrious examples. Our history is full of them. They are as beacon-lights along the dim and crowded pathway of human life. They are for instruction, for guidance, for encouragement, for inspiration to the rising and the coming generation of American youth.

"The fame which a man wins for himself is best; That he may call his own."

JACOB COLLAMER was endowed with a rare combination of intellectual and moral qualities of a high order; a capacious mind, at once active, clear, and discriminating—a mind, too, in which the analytic powers and the reflective faculties were largely developed; and he was also gifted with a retentive memory. He was capable of fixed and continuous application of his mind to the examination and analysis of whatever question he took in hand. These faculties were all sharpened and strengthened by varied reading and acquirement, and by habits of careful study and reflection. He possessed, in a remarkable degree, the power of condensation, and of arranging the various points or propositions involved in any subject under discussion in the most clear and logical order, and which enabled him to present them with great force and perspicuity to the minds of others. He always secured respectful attention and deference to his opinions, whether in public debate or in private discussion, for the clearness and force with which he presented his views. He often enforced or illustrated an idea or proposition by the timely introduction of some apt and racy and often amusing anecdote.

If he was not always eloquent, he was always instructive. If he was not an orator in its ordinary acceptance, he was more and better than a mere orator. He was a reasoner—a clear and logical reasoner. He was an excellent talker—an excellent public as well as private or social talker. He had the faculty of making himself understood, and consequently of making his subject understood. He addressed himself to the reason and the understanding, rather than to the impulses or the fancies of men. It was his aim and his effort to convince the judgment by force of argument, rather than to move the passions by the appeals of eloquence, or to please the fancy by the beauties of rhetoric. If he had not the highest order of what, in popular phrase, is called genius, he had more solid common sense than any man of genius, and was master of its practical use.

A thoughtful and conscientious man as he was, he spoke always and only from the convictions of his own judgment. His opinions, especially upon grave and important questions, were not hastily formed nor inconsiderately expressed, but only after the most careful and mature reflection. Hence his opinions always commanded great respect and deference, and carried with them a corresponding weight and influence. His opinions, especially upon legal and constitutional questions, or upon questions of international law, were always received with profound deference and regard. His intelligent and independent judgment, his strong, practical good sense, and his unbending integrity of purpose, imparted to all his opinions uncommon weight and value.

His whole life, public and professional, whether at the bar or upon the bench; whether in a high executive department or in the halls of legislation, has been assiduously devoted to the cause of truth and justice. Few public men have left a more excellent or a more honorable record.

With his high intellectual endowments were happily blended the kindlier affections of the heart; and to all these were superadded the purer and holier graces of a Christian faith and of a consistent Christian life. In 1825 he made public profession of his faith in the Gospel of Christ and united with the Congregational church in Royalton, then the place of his residence. Through all these forty years, his life, in all its varied modes, no less in the public than in the private walks of society; no less in the national councils than in the social and domestic circle, furnishes a practical and beautiful illustration of the beneficent influence and power of the religion he professed.

The loss of such a man is indeed a loss to the nation; it is a loss to the State; it is a loss to society. But we have only to know that it is God's doing, and "be still." This bereavement I hardly need to say, Mr. President, falls with terrible and crushing severity upon an interesting and stricken family household. But I am not at liberty to enter the sanctuary of this grief. I may not lift the curtain which veils from public view the deep sorrow which sitteth and weepeth there.

Mr. President, he whose death we now lament is gone to be with us here no more. His work on earth is done. He strikes a golden harp among the seraphim on high. His precepts and his example are left to us for our instruction and our profit. Happy, indeed, will it be, if we shall so profit by them that we shall be ready, as he was ready, for the final summons, in that hour which is coming to us all, and to some of us is not far off, when this world and its worthlessness shall fade from our sinking vision.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect due to the memory of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

Ordered, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, it is not for Vermont to mourn alone; New York claims the privilege of standing by her side in this hour of her affliction, of bending with her in grief over the grave of her illustrious Senator. He was the son of Vermont by adoption, of New York by birth. The elevated position he so long occupied, the extensive influence he so long wielded, the honor awarded to him by all, may justly excite the pride of both his native and his adopted State. A man of singular worth and rare virtue has been lost to both.

As Senators, we may well unite in paying our tribute of respect to the memory of one so justly honored, and pause in our deliberations to bestow our homage upon one so justly beloved. The Senate has, indeed, lost one of its ablest statesmen, one of its purest patriots. In honoring such a man, we honor ourselves.

When we met in this Chamber a few days ago, I am sure the thought was present to every mind that one of our number was not here; that one seat had been made vacant; that the oldest, the most experienced, and, perhaps, the wisest of our body, was gone. It is hard for us to believe that the venerable form so familiar to us here will no longer stand in our midst; that he who so lately was the object of our reverence has already been carried away into sepulchral darkness; that we shall never again listen to words of wisdom and patriotism from his lips. Those who knew him best will miss him most. In the Senate, where his counsels had been so prominent, his death will be felt as no common bereavement. We do well to mourn his loss.

How frequently, Mr. President, we have been called to honor the Senate's dead, to pay the homage which friendship is ever prompt to offer to those who have been our associates in the nation's council! This is the eighth occasion, since I became a member of this body, when the Senate has paused to render its public tribute to the memory of its dead. The eloquence of Douglas and Baker is no longer heard in these Halls. Bingham and Pearce and Thomson and Bowden and Hicks no longer appear in their wonted places. Thus, one after another, familiar faces disappear, and the great and the good pass from among us. But of them all, not one will be more missed from the Senate than he to whose memory we now pay the last tribute of affection and respect.

It is not my purpose to speak in detail of the life or the character or the public services of our lamented friend. To do so would be to repeat what has been so well and so beautifully said by the Senator who has preceded me, in the eloquent eulogy to which we have just listened. He has traced the course of Judge COLLAMER from the earliest beginning of his career to his latest hour; showing how by his energy, his intellectual power, and his moral worth, he reached the high position he so long occupied.

I did not know him, as did the Senator from Vermont, when in the prime and freshness of his life. When we first met the hand of time had touched him. But even then I saw enough to realize what he might have been when in the full maturity and vigor of his manhood. He had passed the allotted period of human life; yet even his latest years were devoted, with equal fidelity and success, to the service of his country; and to the last he continued to exhibit the fruits of a mind well disciplined by early habits of industry, and well furnished with the rich stores of a long experience. In him were happily combined those elements which constitute a sound and judicious statesman. A man of great personal dignity, he was justly esteemed for the excellence of his judgment and the purity of his character. His most prominent characteristics were, I think, sound discretion, clear discernment, good common sense, and great honesty of purpose. No purer patriot ever participated in the councils of the nation.

He did not often occupy the attention of the Senate in debate, but when he did rise to speak he was sure to receive the most respectful and earnest attention. Such was the directness and force of his argument, so affluent were his resources, both of wisdom and experience, so minute was his knowledge of public affairs, that all present, Senators and spectators, became eager and instructed listeners.

He had looked upon life with an observing eye. No man was more thoroughly conversant with the great interests of the country. His memory seemed almost exhaustless, and from its treasures he was ever ready to draw instruction for the benefit of others. It was, however, in his private and friendly intercourse that I learned most to admire him. I count it among the felicities of my life that I was permitted to know him, and in some degree to enjoy his friendship.

But he has been taken from us in the midst of his usefulness. His sun went down in brightness. No twilight obscured its setting. When his appointed time had come, disease, "not tardy to perform its destined office," dismissed him from earth, and he has gone to his heavenly rest.

Judge COLLAMER was happy in the circumstances of his death. Of him it may be said, as it was of John Quincy Adams, that "no excesses of a profligate youth, no vices of middle life, had shattered and hurried to a premature dissolution the body in which his incorruptible spirit resided." Nothing in his habits of life interfered with nature, to whose gentle influences it was left to destroy gradually, and to restore in a good old age to its parent dust, the perishable part of our friend. The law of mortality, which knows no exception among the passing generations of our race, was executed, in his case, with as much tenderness and reserve, so to speak, as is ever permitted by Providence.

He was not left to be an object of compassion to his friends and admirers. No painful contrasts forced them to revert in memory to better days. But, with a mind unimpaired, with an interest in life unabated, with a self-command which protracted sickness had not destroyed, he passed to his rest. Thus we pay our last tribute to the memory of one whose life has been long, and useful, and illustrious. In private life he was without reproach. As a lawyer, he was an ornament to his noble profession. As a judge, he was learned and upright. As a Senator, he occupied the front rank among the statesmen of our country. There may have been those whose career has been more brilliant and dazzling, but there have been few whose labors have been more useful, or who have secured for themselves a reputation more enviable or enduring. We all respected and admired him while living, and now, that he is dead, we render our sincere homage to his memory. Never again will he grace this Chamber with his presence; never again shall we hear his voice. He has passed through the vicissitudes of a long and eventful life. He has met and manfully fulfilled the duties allotted to him upon earth. Death came to him in the ripeness of his years and his fame. No stain rests upon his honored name. His life was full of moral beauty, and with mingled feelings of reverence and love we commemorate his virtue and lament his loss.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the loss of such a man as JACOB COLLAMER to the public councils at any time would have been deeply lamented. In the existing condition of the country the feeling is deepened, and the event justly esteemed a serious calamity. He had been so long in the public service, his course was so well known, the character of his mind so frequently and so favorably illustrated, his wisdom so uniformly exhibited, and during our recent perils and the complications consequent upon them, his patriotism as well as his wisdom was so conspicuous and comprehensive, that wherever his death became known it was recognized as a great national affliction. And so it is. Valuable as we, his associates especially, know were his teachings and example during the past four years, now that the shock of arms has ceased, the flow of fraternal blood arrested, and the authority of the Government everywhere reinstated, there yet remain questions of great interest to be adjusted, upon which his advice would have been of great importance. From my intimate knowledge of him, I deplore his loss the more because I am satisfied that he would have greatly assisted us in so solving those questions as to make our Union more perfect than it ever has been—making it a Union supported by the hearts of the people as well as by the force of constitutional obligation. The measures calculated to effect at the earliest moment this great and priceless result require high intellectual and moral qualities—qualities so elevated as to be inaccessible to the weaknesses and prejudices which are often, to the impairing of their usefulness, seen to control even cultivated minds. It is from the general conviction that these qualities were possessed by our deceased associate, that the voice of regret at his decease was so general.

The universal sentiment seemed to be that under the guidance of wisdom such as his, all would be well; that his exposition of the policy suited to the vital difficulties of the hour would be so clear and statesmanlike as materially to influence the deliberations of Congress, inform and satisfy the public judgment, and hasten their safe and speedy settlement. And well might this impression prevail, for to such a work the mind of Judge COLLAMER was admirably adapted. Nature had endowed him with excellent mental capacity, and he had cultivated it with great care and diligence. His knowledge of the institutions and history of our country was alike exact and profound. He had studied them not only in their details, but in their philosophy. He came, therefore, to the consideration of all measures of public policy with great advantages. Impressed with the conviction that our institutions, if administered as our fathers designed, contained every power necessary to secure individual liberty and the public welfare, he was, whether in war or in peace, for keeping every department of the Government within the limits prescribed by the Constitution. To transcend these under any exigency he overreputed as inadmissible and dangerous. With a mind strongly conservative by nature and training, while doing full justice to the different opinions of others, he at all times opposed as a solemn duty measures or principles projected or maintained by any department of the Government which he believed were unwarranted by the Constitution. This he exhibited in strong terms in his admirable and exhaustive speech of the 12th of February, 1862, on the Treasury-note bill. Referring to the doctrine of necessity as justifying or excusing the exercise of powers not delegated by the Constitution, he said:

"I do not know how other members of the Senate look upon the obligation of their oath to support the Constitution of the United States. To me it is an oath registered in heaven as well as upon earth, and there is no necessity that, in my estimation, will justify me in the breach of it. I think those men who are now risking their lives upon the high places of the field to support the Constitution, are not to be treated in this Hall by us with the concession that we are ready, if the necessity calls for it, to break it. All that our rebel enemies are engaged in is the overthrow of the Constitution, and all that we are contending for is its maintenance and preservation."

In the debate, too, on the confiscation bill, his view on an important question of public law is also illustrative of him. The doctrine he announced on that occasion, though not held by all statesmen of the present day, is now of great practical moment as well as of vital interest to thousands of our citizens.

Referring to the asserted obligation of the people of the South to submit to the authority of the de facto governments which prevailed there, and to the legal consequences of such submission, he observed:

"However loyal their feelings, a government de facto is over them. They cannot get away. They have nowhere to go. They have nothing to go with. What would you have a man there to do? What has this nation a right to demand of him?"

And among other instances, relying upon what he justly characterized as the "bright and high" example of Chief Justice Hale in taking office under the usurped government of Cromwell, he stated that in his opinion a citizen otherwise loyal did not commit treason by submitting to or even by holding office under a de facto government; and his concluding words upon this subject were these:

"Such, sir, is the respect paid by the world, and especially that part of the world from which we spring, to a de facto government, and the nations of the earth deal with them as governments, no matter what the usurpation."

I have no purpose, and certainly the present would be a very unfit occasion to indulge it if I had, to examine into the correctness of this proposition or its application to the late rebellion. The speech is referred to as was the one before quoted, because it accounts in part, I think, for the impression so widely entertained that a conservative and enlightened statesman in the inscrutable providence of God had been taken from us at an epoch in our country's history when his services could not have failed to be of great value. But irrespective of all particular exhibitions of it, it was not surprising to those who knew Judge COLLAMER in advance that he proved so well fitted to the duties of the important positions to which his State called him. An habitual student, with a mind perfectly honest, with a long experience at the bar and on the bench of his own State, (a bench ever distinguished for ability and learning,) he came to the councils of the General Government thoroughly prepared to meet their highest demands, and this the result proved. From the first he ranked among the ablest of our jurists and statesmen, and continued to maintain that rank to the last. As long as the nine volumes of the Vermont Reports of cases during his judicial career remain, the exactness and depth of his legal knowledge will serve to guide and inform the profession and promote everywhere the cause of enlightened jurisprudence; and while the debates of Congress during the period of his service in either branch are left, we who are yet here, and those who shall succeed us, will find in his speeches lessons full of instruction and replete with patriotism on almost every question of public policy or of constitutional law that can arise. In the purity of his life, too, the industry with which he discharged his various official functions; in his freedom from prejudice, his constant regard to the rights and interests of all the States, and in his uniform courtesy to his associates, we have an example at all times to be honored and followed.

Mr. President, it was my good fortune to have been associated with him, not only in the Senate, but for some fourteen months in the executive councils during the administration of General Taylor. Before that period I only knew him as a distinguished public servant; but in those months our relations became, to my great benefit and gratification, intimate, leading to a friendship which it is a great pleasure to me now to remember was never even for a moment disturbed. Those who were acquainted with his administration of the Post Office Department during that time know that it was in all respects admirable. Its vast and complicated business, throughout his administration, was never more ably conducted. I feel that it is unnecessary, in the presence in which I stand, to say more of his public career. No praise of it, however great, would those who have been with him in this Chamber consider exaggerated. And for the same reason would it be idle for me to do more than to allude to his social qualities, for these we all knew and delighted in. The public business of the day ended, its cares dismissed, and private intercourse resumed, which of us does not recollect that his conversation was always instructive, friendly, and entertaining? To allude to it even affords but a melancholy pleasure, as it so forcibly reminds us of the great private affliction we have sustained. But in our bereavement we are not without consolation. The sad evil did not occur until our friend had served his country most faithfully and well, and particularly during the last four years of its severe trial with unsurpassed ability and the purest patriotism.

It is a further consolation that it did not occur until the crisis of our nation's peril had favorably terminated; until the fratricidal blow aimed at its life by wicked ambition, proving for a time able to mislead the honest masses of the South, was so utterly defeated and crushed that its renewal is impossible, and until the authority of the Constitution and laws was restored and submitted to in every part of the land. Our consolation, however, would have been the greater if he had been suffered to remain until he could have seen established that stronger bond of union than Constitution and laws alone can give, which is to be found in mutual sympathy and affection; until he had seen us again, and more perfectly than ever, one people, acknowledging the same political principles, influenced by the same motives, and impelled by the same purpose of working out, under and by virtue of the governments of the union and of the States, a prosperity and renown greater than we have possessed in the past, and abandoning forever the heresy of secession, and abolishing the special institution, (the causes, direct or indirect, of the late convulsion,) resolved to make our Union, to which we owe all of our happiness, individual and social, that we have heretofore enjoyed or can hope for, not only firmer than ever, but, as far as human effort can accomplish it, make it perpetual.

If this additional privilege had been vouchsafed him by Providence, our departed associate and friend would, I believe, have left the world without other pang than that acute one which is inseparable from the sundering of domestic ties, (ties never stronger than in his case,) and in the full assurance, which takes from death its sting and from the grave its victory, of that judgment in mercy which a firm belief in the truth of the Christian dispensation assures him who holds it will be awarded to a well-spent and religious life on earth.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, among the distinguished men who, during the past ten years, have occupied these seats, I regarded Senator COLLAMER as having no superior. He was not among those, if any such may be found, selected through his own skill in political combinations, in reward for party services, to advance the interests of personal followers, or on account of individual popularity. With great directness, not to say abruptness, of speech, extreme tenacity of opinion and purpose, and apparently a somewhat proportionate disregard of the opinions of others when differing from his own, he was not likely to gather around him, and retain the attachment of, a party devoted to himself, or to interest large numbers of men in his individual success. Notwithstanding these obstacles in his political path, few among our eminent public men have been more successful in attracting and retaining the confidence and regard of the people among whom he lived, and inspiring with profound respect those with whom it was his fortune to be associated in the conduct of public affairs.

That this was so may be accounted for in some measure by the character of the people whom he so long and so ably represented, and in a still greater degree by the possession of intellectual and moral qualities which overshadowed all such trifling defects, if so they may be considered. The small but noble State of which he was a most distinguished citizen has long been accustomed to look for its official representatives among those most eminent for virtue in private, and for capacity for usefulness in public life. It has ever seemed to act upon the idea that public trust should be confided to the most faithful, and public honors conferred upon the most capable and deserving of its sons. Thence it has followed not only that its domestic affairs have been well and ably conducted, but that its weight in the councils of the nation has been largely disproportioned to the extent of its territory and the number of its people.

Mr. COLLAMER was the possessor of qualities which could not fail to attract the attention and to secure the confidence of a people able and disposed to estimate men at their true value. Though his love of approbation was largely developed, he was more anxious to deserve than to receive it. Ambitious to secure the respect of others, he never forgot that without his own it would be worthless. Gifted by nature with great quickness of apprehension, discriminating powers of a high order, a just thinker, an admirable logician, and withal a student both from taste and habit, he could not but become an able lawyer, more distinguished, perhaps, for the exactness of his professional learning than for the extent of its range. That learning, however, embraced all the subjects coming within the sphere of his practice, and involved with the pursuits of those among whom he lived, and whose interests he was called upon to protect.

Carrying to the bench of his State such habits of study and thought, and such intellectual powers, and with them a most delicate conscientiousness, he could not be otherwise than an eminent and upright magistrate—eminent even among the able and learned men who, from its earliest history, have adorned its judicial annals, and given to American law character and renown. It is not, however, for me to speak of him at length, either as counselor or judge, inasmuch as I never happened to witness his efforts at the bar or upon the bench. Yet, though living in another, and not an adjoining, State, his professional and judicial reputation was such as could not be confined within the limits of his circuit, and his name had been familiar to me long before it was my good fortune to meet him where, upon a broader theater, and at a great crisis in his country's history, requiring the exercise of the best powers of the human mind, he was destined to perform a most useful and honorable part.

Our lamented associate brought to the Senate, at the commencement of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, a rich experience in legislation, gathered in the halls of his adopted State, and in the national House of Representatives. With a man like him time never was suffered to pass unimproved. Intrusted with public affairs, to make himself familiar with all that pertained to them, to master the details of business, and to guard with vigilance the public interests, were to him solemn and religious duties. To this end he spared no labor, however severe, and shrunk from no task however burdensome. With such habits, and thus ripe in intellect and experience, he commenced his senatorial career, not, like many others, with everything to learn, but fully armed, master of his weapons, and ready for the great conflict upon which he was about to enter. Time never finds a great occasion without finding also, earlier or later, the men fitted to meet it. Familiar with his country's history, learned in its laws, thoroughly imbued with its principles of government, in the best sense a patriot, thoughtful and wise in council, firm in purpose, and spotless in character, our associate and friend was admirably fitted to meet the duties of a perilous hour. How well and bravely those duties were performed we can all bear witness. Spared to see the clouds of civil war which had so long darkened over his beloved country finally dissipated, and the sun of peace rising in unobscured brilliancy, he passed away from earth too soon, as it would seem to our imperfect vision, and while very much to which his sagacity and prudence might have largely contributed still remains to be done.

Conspicuous in the debates of the Senate, Mr. COLLAMER, though of prepossessing personal appearance and ready in speech, was not remarkable for oratorical power, and at no pains to ornament his discourse with rhetorical illustration. His remarks were always suited to the occasion, and confined strictly to the question in debate. Plain, simple, and unpretending in manner and style, always severely logical and master of his subject, he was invariably heard with attention, and with the expectation, never disappointed, that new light would be cast upon the question, however elaborately it might have been previously discussed by others. His speeches were well considered, but never assumed the shape of orations, carefully written out, adorned with rhetorical flourish, and "pointed with inverted commas." The closest was to him a place for prayer and thought, for forgiveness of injuries, real or fancied, and for the cultivation of good-will to man, rather than a laboratory of vituperation, open or covert, whether of men or measures. Quick at repartee and somewhat impatient of interruption, his retorts were sometimes caustic, but had no tinge of malice. If their sting was felt it left no wound; while the rich vein of humor, which never failed, and an inexhaustible fund of apposite and amusing anecdote, always illustrative and most happily related, rendered his efforts alike interesting to a miscellaneous audience and instructive to his associates.

You and I, Mr. President, have long known and felt how delightful our lamented friend was in private and social intercourse, how playful and genial was his wit, how fertile he was of anecdote, how keen of observation, and how instructive his conversation, both in lighter and graver moods. No one of his associates in this Chamber can, better than myself, bear testimony to his kindness of heart, his readiness to impart information and give the advantage of his learning and wisdom to those about him whenever sought or needed. Seated by his side, session after session, for many years, I habitually asked his advice and sought his aid whenever embarrassed by doubt or difficulty. The patience with which he listened, and the ready kindness with which he responded, imparting from his rich store all that was needful, compelling me to make his thoughts my own, could not but secure my gratitude and win my affection. I venerated and loved the man as one regards an elder brother, upon whose superior knowledge and wisdom, and unselfish singleness of heart, he feels that he may, in all emergencies, safely rely; and I grieve for his loss as one laments the breaking of a link in that chain of life's pleasures which he feels to be growing shorter and shorter day by day.

At a period like the present, calling for so much wise experience and unselfish devotion in our national councils, the loss of such a man cannot but be severely felt. And yet, in the inscrutable ways of Providence, it well happens that the termination of no single life is ever permitted to produce more than a momentary ripple upon the great ocean of human affairs. Whatever impress the individual may make upon the time in which he lived is soon trodden out by myriads of advancing footsteps. Other hands take up the unfinished work, and it goes on without any perceptible stay or interruption. The noblest ambition of man is, therefore, to perform well and faithfully the part assigned to him, and he is fortunate if content with what he may receive, and humbly thankful if spared responsibilities beyond his ability to bear. It may be truly said of our departed friend that he was true to his own conceptions of duty, both in public and private life. And if he was not without a love for worldly distinction and eminent place, that love was subordinate always to his convictions of right, and his highest aim was to serve faithfully, and to divine acceptance, as a Christian soldier, in the great battle of life.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Nestor of the American Senate has been called from the scene where his counsels have been so often heard, and his wisdom was so justly honored. Whatever of eloquence, of learning, of skill in debate may remain in this body, the death of Judge COLLAMER leaves a void here which will not easily be supplied. Whoever aspires to fill his peculiar place, and exert a similar influence, must possess not only equal abilities and a character as pure, but a judgment enlightened like his by the lessons, and a mind stored with the fruits, of a long and varied experience.

If, in our estimate of the dead, we are sometimes liable to pass beyond the measure of a just appreciation, we may be assured that whatever language of eulogy is applied to him, we are in little danger of exceeding a correct judgment of his merits. In the Senate, and wherever else he was called to act, he was a man so marked and peculiar that his superiority in many striking respects was at once acknowledged. It was my good fortune to know him somewhat intimately; first in the House of Representatives, and more lately in the Senate. While in both these positions he was conspicuous among the celebrated and able men with whom he was associated in public affairs, there were certain qualities, intellectual and moral, in which he was not surpassed by any of the distinguished men of his time. And, first of all, he was a just man. His integrity was a pervading and governing characteristic of his nature; which not only controlled his conduct, but shaped his sentiments and opinions, so that he seemed gifted with an unerring judgment of right and wrong. Enlightened by this high sense of justice, his reasoning faculties could scarcely fail in the attainment of truth; and for him to refuse its acknowledgment or resist its sway was an impossibility. Hence it was that in those intellectual processes for which he was so distinguished, he seemed never to be contending merely for polemic victory, but rather to be illuminating, by the light of his unclouded reason, the path which his controlling sense of justice compelled him to pursue. It was impossible to follow him in the steps of his irrefutable logic, without being struck by his perfect sincerity, as well as by the strength of his reasoning; and the arguments by which his own mind was convinced seldom failed to convince his hearers. Thus as an advocate he compelled the assent of courts and juries to his propositions. But it was as a judge that he seemed in his peculiarly appropriate sphere. Here, his high sense of right and his unrivaled reasoning powers, combined to render his legal judgments almost infallible; and the suitors to whom justice was dispensed by him seldom complained even of his adverse decisions.

To us our venerated and deeply-lamented friend was chiefly known by his punctual and constant attendance and his faithful labors in this body, in the business and debates of which he took a leading part. Here for many years we have listened to his words of wisdom, and have been guided by the light which he shed upon every subject which he discussed; yet I cannot recall an instance in which he exerted those great abilities, with which he was intrusted for the good of mankind, for the purposes of ostentation or self-display. The arts of eloquence he apparently little esteemed. These, with the graces of rhetoric and the felicities of expression, he left entirely to others, satisfying himself with a plainness of language, and often with a homeliness of phrase, which sometimes gave an added strength to his unanswerable reasoning. In the midst, however, of his closest argumentation, the flash of wit, the quaint stroke of humor, the apt and illustrative anecdote, would occasionally vary the current of thought and relieve the attention which might otherwise have been wearied by the severe and exact logic to which he usually so rigidly adhered. Nor should it be forgotten that, with all his power in debate, he was generous and considerate of others. No harsh or unkind word ever escaped his lips. He seldom indulged even in repartee, passing in silence any attack, real or supposed, upon himself, and applying his powers only to the subject-matter of his discourse. As he was respected, so he was respectful and courteous in debate, treating others with the same consideration and regard which all conceded to his own pure character and superior abilities.

In the truest and best sense of the word Judge COLLAMER was a conservative. To conserve, to defend, to uphold and maintain the Government, the Union, the Constitution, the laws of the United States, this was his constant effort, the mission and the labor of his life. He did not believe, however, that true conservatism consists in upholding ancient error, or persisting in wrongs because they seem by the lapse of time to have become irremediable, or by custom and usage to have grown inviolable. On the contrary, he thought that what is good in a Government may best be defended and preserved by seeking the proper occasion to correct abuses and rectify mistakes. A genuine conservative, he was not the blind advocate of existing evils, nor the stubborn apologist of the past. He knew when to yield to unavoidable able vicissitudes, when to favor necessary changes, when to originate improvements and suggest alterations, as well as when to resist the visionary schemes of reckless innovators. He sustained no policy merely because it was old; he favored no measure merely because it was new.

I have spoken of Judge COLLAMER as he was seen in the performance of his public duties. There was another side of his character in which the persuasive advocate, the inflexible judge, the wise and politic statesman was seen in a more genial and winning light. In the unrestrained intercourse of private life and the flow of ordinary conversation there was a charm in his society which those who knew him intimately cannot soon forget. The judge and the Senator were forgotten in the brilliant and delightful companion, the generous and sympathizing friend, the wise, the candid, the far-seeing man.

In the fullness of his years, after a life of usefulness and of honor, and in the assurance of a Christian hope of a blessed immortality, he has gone to his reward. Of those who survive him, of those who in coming years are to succeed him here and elsewhere, there are few who can equal him in ability and in virtue. His intellectual and his moral traits partook of the antique mold, rather than of the modern type of character. Yet though rare and peculiar, they are not inimitable, and to the noble and aspiring youth of our country, whose hearts beat high with the love of civil liberty, and who are fired with a generous ambition to benefit and exalt the human race, they furnish an example worthy of earnest emulation and full of the highest encouragement. They may see him in youth studious, laborious, and virtuous; in manhood exerting all his powers for the good of mankind; and in his ripened age, still in the full possession of his faculties, and conscientiously performing all his duties, crowned with public honors and the respect and affection of a grateful people. They may learn, also, from his life, that the greatest talents do not eclipse the higher and purer light of a truly Christian character; and they cannot fail to perceive the superiority of moral over intellectual greatness, when they observe that with all his preëminent abilities, the most striking characteristic of JACOB COLLAMER was his perfect integrity.

Mr. RIDDLE. In sorrow for the necessity, with pleasure for the privilege which the sad necessity has created, I, Mr. President, second the resolutions before us.

Eulogy is not my forte. Obituaries are to me unpleasant. Eulogies I would not attempt; obituaries sometimes become an imperative duty. If perchance the one is blended with the other, it shows at least that the heart is holding such dominion over the mind as to impel utterance to honest sentiments.

In the death of JACOB COLLAMER, I think Vermont has lost one of her brightest jewels, the Senate one of its most courteous members, and the country one of its greatest statesmen. He was great in feeling, great in thought, great in principle, and great in action. The compeers of Calhoun, Clay, Webster, and Wright, by his demise are nearly, if not entirely, extinct.

But for the illumination of their minds, reflected by the archives of our country, we would be left comparatively in the dark to grapple with the difficulties which surround us; hence the greater the loss. Would that he had lived to aid in the great work of reconstruction which we are, I hope, about to inaugurate.

My first acquaintance with Mr. COLLAMER was in 1849 or 1850, when he was Postmaster General of the United States, the duties of which office he discharged with signal ability and general satisfaction. I do confess that the impressions which he made upon me at that time were different from those of later days when we became better acquainted and more intimate. He was apparently an austere man, but there was as little of harshness or rigidity in his composition as of any man who ever lived. Honesty, dignity, and self-possession, prominent characteristics of the man, naturally created such an impression, and especially upon a young man who differed with him materially upon most political questions, and who was predisposed to oppose his administration. This apparent austerity in a measure separated us, but the union, like the welded link in the chain, only united us more strongly when made.

An epitome of his life I would gladly give you, but that has been furnished by his surviving and venerable colleague. It may, nevertheless, be proper for me to allude, I trust it will be considered modestly, to his deportment as a Senator, his position as a jurist, and his character as a statesman. Some men when they acquire the position of Senator, (I use the word "acquire" without wishing it to be literally applied to the deceased,) seek popularity rather than labor to direct to proper channels the popularity which their good acts and position have created. This is the rock, mark my word for it, upon which Great Britain is bound to split. In other words, some men embrace the "isms" of the day—I use the manufactured word "isms," not knowing any other so comprehensive—rather than breast the storm which such "isms" naturally engender, and which must ultimately destroy every vestige of republican institutions if persevered in. Judge COLLAMER was not of this class; and in this respect he must have elevated himself in the estimation of the honorable men of Vermont. He believed, and I think correctly, that if our ship of State was to be stranded, it would be by fanaticism, and the denial to the States of their reserved rights under the Federal Constitution. His last speech before this body justifies me making such a declaration; but political expressions, or even expressions which lean that way, are not relevant to this occasion. I may, however, be permitted to add, that "his solid qualities as a man, and his evident desire to observe the right as a guide in political matters, won for him many friends, even among those who, like myself, differed from him essentially in the conclusions to which he arrived." I have thus, Mr. President, merely briefly alluded to his views to show that a great man can, to a great extent, shake off the shackles of party, be sustained by an honest constituency, and shine out, in the estimation of an enlightened world, as a patriot and statesman. Such was Judge COLLAMER. No Senator ever doubted his honesty; no Senator ever questioned his integrity; and when he arose to address you, Mr. President, he was recognized, as he should have been, over many of us, in consequence of his age, experience, ability, and acknowledged statesmanship. If this be a compliment, God grant his friends may duly appreciate it.

I speak, sir, perhaps, apparently with too much feeling, but it fortified I was his companion upon his return home after the adjournment of the last Congress. I may say that during our last journey I learned to know him better, and, if possible, respect him more. I knew he was unfamiliar with selfishness. His laudable ambition was satiated. His country, with which I may say he was born, was his adopted child. He had grown up with it. In boyhood he fought its early battles; in manhood he contended for its institutions; and in old age, when death was dawning upon him, he enunciated the noblest principles of his life, and the only principles which can save this Government. I leave to Senators and the country to judge what these principles are.

Before to-day I did not know Judge COLLAMER's religious views. I knew he was spiritually inclined, and I believe no man can be great without such inclination. It is the gem from which true greatness grows, cultivate it as you may. It enlarges the heart, brightens the intellect, and gives true nobility to the soul. It is equally certain that many assume it for base and mercenary purposes, and they are the pests upon society; but Judge COLLAMER, I may say, and let the remark not appear sacrilegious, it assumed. He was honest enough to admit his errors; bold enough to confront his enemies; conscientious enough to concede his faults; and humble enough to pray to his God for forgiveness.

During the journey to which I have alluded I advanced the idea that although man was mortal, government, the creature of man upon this earth, properly regulated, might become immortal; that morality and love for the neighbor were the essential attributes of lasting power and sovereignty, and that sovereignty maintained under such instincts would become immortal. To this the judge partially dissented, but expressed a desire to read a work upon the subject, a copy of which I sent him a few months before he died.

He also expressed a desire to read the works of Emanuel Swedenborg, whom he considered as one of the greatest men and writers of his age, but feeling as it were that his days were numbered, he said to me in a suppressed tone, "It is too late to commence such an undertaking." Thus we parted, and parted forever, unless to meet in the same mansion in another and better world.

May the Green Mountain boys of Vermont decorate his grave with the verdure and natural grandeur of their hills; and may the constitutional principles which he enunciated and advocated be indelibly impressed upon their minds! I would want this, to use a paradox, be an unwritten inscription upon his tomb.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, since Henry Clay left this Chamber by the gate of death no Senator has passed that way, crowned with the same honorable years as Mr. COLLAMER; nor has any Senator passed that way, whose departure created such a blank in the public councils, unless we except Mr. Douglas. He was our most venerable associate; but his place here had not shrunk with time. He was, when we last saw him, as important to our debates and to our conclusions as he had ever been. He still possessed all those peculiar powers of argument and illustration, seasoned with a New England salt, which he had from the beginning. He was not so old, that he was not often the life of the body.

When he came into the Senate, it was after long and various experience as lawyer, judge, Representative in the other House, member of the Cabinet and then again as judge, in all which characters he had been single, pure, honest, faithful, and laborious. Though little of a traveler, he had seen much. He had also read much, and he had done much. But all the results of observation, study, and action had so passed into his nature as to become a part of himself. If he expressed an opinion even on law, it seemed to come from himself, and not from books. He was the authority. And yet he was fond of books, whether in his own profession, or in other departments of study.

His fidelity assumed the form of accuracy in all that he said or did. He spoke accurately, and he was especially accurate with his pen. Perhaps nobody was apter in the style or language of legislation. He was an excellent draughtsman, although, without doubt, too professional for a taste not exclusively professional,—indulging in traditional phrases and those favorite superfluities of the lawyer, said and aforesaid. The great act of July 13, 1861, which gave to the war for the suppression of the rebellion its first congressional sanction, and invested the President with new powers, was drawn by him. It was he that set in motion the great ban, not yet lifted, by which the rebel States were shut out from the communion of the Union. This is a landmark in our history, and it might properly be known by the name of its author, as "Collamer's statute."

All who ever sat with him in the committee-room will long remember the carefulness with which he gave his counsels and the completeness with which he explained them. Perhaps his wisdom and facility in business were nowhere more manifest. I seize this occasion to confess most gratefully my own personal obligations to him in this interesting relation.

The same character which appeared in the committee-room showed itself in conversation, enlivened by a constant humor. He too had his "little story" for illustration; but in this respect he differed from the late President as one of his own Vermont mountains differs from an outstretched and laughing prairie of the West. In manner he was Socratic. The curious observer, fond of tracing resemblances, might say, that in his head, and even in his general appearance, he was not unlike the received image of Socrates; while his colloquial powers might recall Socrates again, as he is pictured by the affectionate Xenophon, "handling all who conversed with him just as he pleased." He had also the same antique simplicity, and I doubt not he would have followed the wise man of Athens bare-foot in the waters of the Ilissus. I would not push this resemblance too far, and I use it only for illustration and not for parallel. And yet as I bring to mind our departed friend, he seems to assume this classical form. Call him, then, if you please, the Green Mountain Socrates.

Debate, except on the highest occasions, is only conversation in public. With him it was conversation always. He spoke, as he conversed, with the same pith and humor, and with the same facility. But his facility did not tempt him. In this gilded amphitheater, where the speaker is sacrificed to the galleries, as of old the gladiator was sacrificed to make a Roman holiday, he declined all display, and simply conversed, and such was the desire to hear him that we gathered near to catch his words. He was not a frequent speaker, and he never spoke except when he had something to say; nor did he speak for effect abroad, but only for effect in the debate. Of course, he was too honest and too considerate of the Senate, to speak without the preparation of reflection and study. Though at times earnest, he was never bitter. He never dropped into the debate any poisoned ingredients.

Sometimes he spoke with much effect, especially on matters of law or finance or business. On the great question which for a generation overshadowed all others, and finally wrapped the country in the "living cloud of war," he was sincerely anti-slavery, but with certain short-comings, which, in this impartial tribute, ought not to be concealed. His lenity toward our monster enemy showed itself unconsciously when he spoke of malignant rebels as "those southern gentlemen who had seceded;" and then again when at an earlier date he spoke of "two civilizations;" but he bore kindly the reply that civilization was only on one side. And yet on two occasions in this Chamber he strove for the right very bravely, so that his position was historic. One of these was many years ago, shortly after he came into the Senate. The other was only last year. The historian and the biographer will describe these scenes. One of them is the fit subject of art.

The earliest of these occasions was when, under the influence of the President of that day, backed by Jefferson Davis in the Cabinet, an illegal government was set up in a distant Territory, which, in defiance of the people there, proceeded to institute an infamous Black Code borrowed from slavery. The President countenanced the illegal government and smiled upon the Black Code. The representatives of slavery in both Houses of Congress, with their northern allies, indifferent to human rights and greedy only of political power, sustained the President in his disregard of that fundamental principle of the Declaration of Independence, that "government stands on the consent of the governed." The contest was unequal. On the one side was a struggling people, insulted and despoiled of their rights; on the other side was the President with all the vast powers of this Republic, with patronage less than now but very prevailing, and with a great political party which gave to him an unhesitating support. The contest reached this Chamber. Naturally it came before the Committee on Territories, where happily the good cause was represented by JACOB COLLAMER of Vermont. The interest increased with each day, and when the committee reported, a scene ensued without example among us.

The reports of committees are usually handed in and ordered to be printed; but now at the call of a Senator from South Carolina the report of the committee, whitewashing incredible outrages, was read by the chairman at the desk of the Secretary of the Senate. The chairman left his seat for this purpose, and stood face to face with the Senate. For two hours the apology for that usurpation, which had fastened a Black Code upon an inoffensive people, sounded in this Chamber, while the partisans of slavery gloated over the seeming triumph. There was a hush of silence, and there was sadness also with some who saw clearly the unpardonable turpitude of the sacrifice. Mr. COLLAMER followed with a minority report, signed by himself alone, which he read at the desk of the Secretary, standing face to face with the Senate. Jesse D. Bright was at the time our President, but he had installed in the chair on that momentous occasion none other than that most determined artificer of treason and drill-sergeant of the rebellion, John Slidell, who sat behind, like Mephistopheles looking over the shoulder of Truth, while the patriot Senator standing before gravely unfolded the enormities which had been perpetrated. Few who were present then now remain; but none who were present then can fail to recall the scene. The report which Mr. COLLAMER read belongs to the history of the country. But the scene comes clearly within the domain of art. In the long life of our departed friend it was his brightest and most glorious moment, beyond anything of honor or power, whether in the Cabinet or on the bench. For what is office compared to the priceless opportunity, nobly employed, of standing as a buttress for human rights?

The other signal occasion, when he showed much of the same character and was surely inspired by the same sentiment, was during the last year, when the illustrious President, who now sleeps in immortality, undertook, in disregard of Congress and solely by executive power, to institute civil governments throughout that region of the Union where civil governments had been overthrown—imitating in the agencies he employed the Cromwellian system of ruling by "major generals." The case of distant and oppressed Kansas was revived. Who can forget the awakened leonine energy of the aged Senator, when, contrary to his custom, he interrupted another in debate to declare his judgment against the power of the President to institute permanent civil governments "to last beyond the war." The dividing line was clear. The President might exercise a temporary military power; but Congress must lay the foundations of permanent peace. This simple principle was, of course, only the corollary of that rule of Jefferson, which has become one of the common-places of our political system, asserting "the supremacy of the civil over the military authority." The eggs of crocodiles can produce only crocodiles, and it is not easy to see how the eggs laid by military power can be hatched into an American State.

This interjected judgment was afterward developed in a speech, which, for sententious wisdom and solid sense, is, perhaps, the best he ever delivered. It is not long, but, like the Roman sword, it is effective from its very shortness. He spoke with the authority of years, but he spoke also with another peculiar authority, for it was he who drew the act of Congress which placed the rebel States under the ban. Positively, earnestly, and most persuasively he insisted that Congress should not abdicate its control of this question. His conclusion was repeated again and again. It was for Congress, he said, to say when that state of things existed which would entitle the rebel States to perform their functions as integral parts of the Union. It was for Congress to decide this question, and not for the President, except so far as the President unites in an act of Congress by his signature. And he asked, "When will and when ought Congress to admit these States as being in their normal condition?" To which he answers, "It is not enough that they stop their hostility and are repentant. They should present fruits meet for repentance. They should furnish to us by their actions some evidence that the condition of loyalty and obedience is their true condition again, and Congress must pass upon it; otherwise we have no securities. And I insist that the President by making peace with them, if you please, by surceasing military operations does not alter their status until Congress passes upon it." Then again filled with the thought, he exclaims, "The great essential thing now to insist upon is that Congress shall do nothing which can in any way create a doubt about our power over the subject." And still pleading against executive interference, he says, "I believe that when reestablishing the condition of peace with that people, Congress, representing the United States, has power in ending this war as any other war to get some security for the future. It would be a strange thing if it were not true that this nation in ending a civil as well as a foreign war could close it and make peace by obtaining, if not indemnity for the past, at least some security for future peace." This was the last speech of our patriot Senator. It is his dying legacy to his country. Let all, from President to citizen, heed its words. The aspiration so often expressed to-day that he had lived to take part in the restoration of the rebel States is fulfilled. He lives in his declared opinions, which are now echoed from the tomb.

Say not that I err, because here, at his funeral, seeking to do him honor, I exhibit him bravely standing face to face with executive power, wielded by a President who was instigated by Jefferson Davis, and then again bravely standing face to face with executive power, wielded by the gentle hand of Abraham Lincoln. In the first case it was to save an outraged people; in the other case, it was to vindicate the powers of the people of the United States in Congress assembled to provide guarantees and safeguards against that wickedness and perjury which had deluged his beloved country with blood. Say not that I err, because now, at his funeral, anxious that his best actions should not be forgotten, I commemorate this championship. He is dead, but the good he has done cannot die. And hereafter faithful Senators, struggling with executive power, will catch a new inspiration from his example. A bishop of the church tells us that "all is not lost while there is a man left to reprove error and bear testimony to the truth; and the man who does it with becoming spirit may stop a Prince or Senate in full career, and recover the day." But where this spirit has been shown—where an honored associate has earned this title to fame—I insist that it shall be made known. The battles of regiments are inscribed on their colors. I now inscribe on the colors of JACOB COLLAMER the civic battles which he fought. Swords of honor are placed on the coffins of lamented generals. I now place on the coffin of a lamented Senator the simple truthful record of his acts.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. President, I had intended not to occupy the attention of the Senate by any observations of my own upon this occasion. My distinguished colleague, who was for so many years associated in public life with Judge COLLAMER, not only in this, but also in the other House of Congress, was so eminently fitted, both in thoughts and words, to do justice to his fame and memory, and to express the deep regret and grief of the people of our State at his loss, that I did not feel at liberty to weaken what he might say by any feeble utterance of my own. The knowledge, too, that other distinguished members of this body, long associated with Judge COLLAMER, not only as Senators, but in other high departments of the public service, would address the Senate upon the announcement of his decease, was an additional circumstance urging me to silence. But more mature consideration has brought me, within a very few hours, to a different determination, and to the belief that in justice to myself, as the successor of Judge COLLAMER to a seat in this branch of Congress, and to the people of the State which so highly trusted and honored him, my own feeble voice ought to be added to the general mourning over his lamented decease.

My colleague and other Senators who have addressed us at the present time, have far better knowledge of the career of my lamented predecessor, as a statesman and a member of the General Government, than myself, for they were associated with him, and witnessed his daily labors in those great departments, while my knowledge was merely that of the people at large, derived from the published proceedings and debates, and the current history of public affairs. This reason alone is ample why I should not trespass upon a theme already so sufficiently and eloquently presented.

But the greatness and usefulness of my predecessor consisted not alone in his distinguished services to his State and nation in the two Houses of Congress, and as a Cabinet minister. He was eminently distinguished as a lawyer and a judge; and in these respects I doubtless knew him better than any other member of this body except my colleague; and the few words I desire to say will relate mainly to his professional and judicial character and reputation. Professional reputation and fame, however well earned and deserved, (except at a few favorite points, and in the national tribunals,) is always local in its character, and extends little, if any, beyond the sphere of its actual administration; hardly ever outside the lines of a State.

And the same is true of judicial reputation, earned upon the bench of the State courts, unless the judicial career of the recipient extends over an unusual period of time. The reason for this is sufficiently apparent from the fact that the professional and judicial labors of lawyers and judges are generally bestowed upon matters of mere private concern and individual interest, and however important and useful to the parties themselves, excite but little interest in the public mind. Much the larger part of Judge COLLAMER's professional life had passed before I knew him personally, for he had been already three years upon the bench of our supreme court when I came to the bar in 1836. From that time until his retirement from the bench in 1842, I was a practitioner before the court of which he was a member. During the short period that elapsed between his retirement from the lower House of Congress, and his return to the bench in 1850, he resumed the practice of his profession; and during that time I was a member of the supreme court of the State. Under the new organization of the judiciary of the State in 1850, Judge COLLAMER was made judge of the second judicial circuit, and held that office until his election to the Senate in 1854. During this period I held the same office for the fourth judicial circuit, and it was during this time only that I was ever brought into very intimate personal relations with him.

I learn from members of the profession who were contemporary with Judge COLLAMER in the earlier portion of his professional career, that his excellent natural abilities, together with his thorough and accurate knowledge of the law, obtained by close application and study; his diligence and faithfulness in attending to the interests of his clients, and especially his unswerving honesty and integrity, soon brought to him large professional employment, and that his sphere of practice and reputation steadily enlarged up to the time he left the bar for the bench. He was ever exact and thorough in his preparation, to the smallest details, and in the conduct of trials was always watchful that no proper presentation or argument beneficial to his client should be omitted. Nor did he ever fail to see and to avail himself of all proper advantage given him, either by the weakness of his adversary's cause or by any lack of professional skill shown in its support. But his practice of the law was honorable and manly; he never sought advantage for his client's cause by the use of craft and cunning, so often resorted to by less scrupulous members of the profession. But it was more in his character as an advocate that his peculiar and characteristic fairness was exhibited. He always presented every legitimate argument in favor of his cause forcibly and effectively.

But he never resorted to subtle and ingenious sophistries to disguise and conceal a dishonest cause, or to entrap and bewilder the triers. His style and manner as an advocate, especially before juries, were peculiarly his own. His presentation of a cause to a jury was as cool, deliberate, and dispassionate as his argument of a dry question of law before the court or a question of public affairs in the Senate. He never appealed to the passions or prejudices of his auditors, whoever they were, but sought always to move and convince their judgments. He abhorred and detested every form of deceit and falsehood in others, and disdained the use of it himself.

Such an advocate was of course ever listened to with the highest respect, and his arguments received all that consideration to which his ability and candor so well entitled them.

Judge COLLAMER came to the bench a ripe, thoroughly trained lawyer. His popularity as a judge was all that could have been expected from a man of his talents and attainments. He was especially fortunate and gifted as a presiding judge at jury trials. His ready and accurate knowledge of the law, his keen and quick apprehension, his extensive acquaintance with men, and the motives and incentives to human conduct, and especially his strong and intuitive love of justice, enabled him at once to master a case, and detect the true from the false, and, without apparent effort, to make the truth of the case manifest to others. His manner and deportment upon the bench were always kind and considerate; he listened patiently to even slow and plodding counselors, endeavoring to explain and illustrate what he already saw clearly.

He was ever prompt, fearless, and inflexible in his decisions, with nothing of timidity or favoritism, always so painful when exhibited on the bench. It is saying no more than the truth, that he was one of the most efficient and satisfactory nisi prius judges who have ever sat upon the bench.

His published opinions while a judge of the supreme court are models of judicial compositions. For accuracy of learning, terseness of statement, clearness and comprehensiveness of style, I do not know where they are excelled.

Had Judge COLLAMER remained upon the bench to the end of his life, like Chief Justice Shaw of Massachusetts, or Chief Justice Gibson of Pennsylvania, I have no doubt his judicial fame would have equaled that of those eminent jurists.

I have no need to speak of the character of Judge COLLAMER in his more private and personal relations, or his rare and generous qualities and gifts as a social companion. All who were ever associated with him in any capacity will ever retain a loving remembrance of his kind and genial nature, his keen and pleasant wit, his love and fund of anecdote. His duties as a husband and father, as a citizen and Christian, were ever faithfully and conscientiously fulfilled.

In brief, sir, I have never known any man who came nearer attaining the full measure of what I believe to have been the great object of my predecessor in the performance of all the duties of life, from the humblest to the highest, to be a just man before God and his fellow-men.

The people of his and my State have ever held him in the highest respect; they mourn his loss in common with the whole nation, and they will ever cherish in their hearts the memory of his wisdom and his virtues.

Fortunate may each of us consider himself, if at the end of the journey of life he be able to leave behind him a reputation so full of usefulness, and a character so pure and unsullied.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 14, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JURORS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 24) entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia."

COMMITTEE FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. ROSWELL HART, of New York, as a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia, in place of Mr. DAVIS, excused.

REIMBURSEMENT OF LOYAL STATES.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of the following-named members as the special committee on the subject of the reimbursement of the loyal States for advances made and debts contracted in support of the war for the preservation of the Union:

RECONSTRUCTION.

The SPEAKER also announced the appointment of the following named as members on the part of the House of the joint committee to inquire into the condition of the late so-called confederate States, and their right to representation in Congress:

REPRESENTATIVES OF DAVID G. BATES.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of David G. Bates; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have been requested, Mr. Speaker, by several gentlemen to bring up the question of the adjournment of Congress over the holidays. I will, by the consent of the House, offer a resolution, leaving the dates blank, and get an expression of the sentiment of the House on this subject. I think we may as well determine at this time when and for how long Congress will adjourn over. I will state frankly that my own proposition would be to adjourn over from to-day until the 8th or 9th of January.

There being no objection, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on the — day of December, they will adjourn to meet on the — day of January next.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman leaves blanks in his resolution, and I move that when we adjourn for the holidays we shall adjourn from the 21st of December to the 4th of January, from Thursday until Thursday, being two weeks. I move to fill the blanks in that way.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make it the 9th of January.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In order to test the sense of the House, I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on the 9th of January.

Mr. STEVENS. My proposition is to adjourn from the 21st of December to the 4th of January.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand the original proposition to be, that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet on the 9th of January.

The SPEAKER. That is the original proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to say that we may as well at once vote to include all of the holidays and be done with them. I am for the 9th of January, which will include the 8th of January, a day much thought of in my section of the country, and generally celebrated in the right way. I prefer to take in all the holidays at once, and thus leave gentlemen who live at a great distance from the capital to spend the holidays at home.

Mr. RADFORD. You might as well include the 4th of July.

Mr. JOHNSON. They do not know anything in New York of the 4th of July; it is "played out."

Those of us who live within twelve hours' ride of the capital do not consider it material whether we take two or three little adjournments, or take them altogether. I prefer to favor those who live at a distance by taking all of the holidays at once.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. For the same reason we ought to include the 22d of February. For my own part I am for voting now and adjourning next summer. It is said there is nothing to do now; but, sir, we have just as much to do now as we will when we come back from the holidays. No business will be digested during the holidays; the Houses will not be in session; committees will not meet; members will not be here; and no reports will be ready then any more than they are now. We will get together after several weeks' absence in the same condition as when we adjourned, and we will have lost two or three weeks of the healthiest and best season for work. The result will be that we will be sweltering here during the months of July and August, with every prospect that we will be visited in spring by a deadly epidemic which has already visited Asia and Europe.

It seems to me that it is folly on the part of Congress to adjourn now. Why not continue our session, and adjourn over Christmas and New Year's day, or several days for the holidays? We can adjourn again on the 8th of January. Why not continue our sessions and work during the healthy season of the year, when we are vigorous and in good condition, rather than to stay here and swelter during the month of August. I have never been here a long session but that the members toward the adjournment have regretted the adjournment over the holidays, and that they had not staid here and worked. I should like to get an expression of the members who think with me—who are in favor of working now and adjourning early.

Mr. SPALDING. I am opposed to this whole practice of adjourning over the holidays and consuming some two or three weeks of valuable time. When I came here, I came prepared to spend the session of Congress and to do the work intrusted to us, but I am willing to accommodate my western friends who came with the expectation of returning to visit their friends during the holidays. I am willing to vote for a reasonable time. The sense of the committee of which I am a member was taken this morning, and we agreed to vote for an adjournment of two weeks, from the 21st of December to the 4th of January. That is as long a time as was ever given, and as long a time as in reason can be asked.

I reiterate what has been so well said by the gentleman from Illinois, that we are losing the most valuable time for work by adjourning over two or three weeks now when we can work every hour and day, whereas when the warm season begins we shall be sweltering here and shall regret we did not work when the season admitted. I hope that the majority of this House will not consent to adjourn for a longer period than two weeks. I will vote for that; if it is to exceed that, I will vote against the whole measure.

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Will my colleague yield a moment, that I may modify my amendment? Mr. KELLEY. I will.

Mr. STEVENS. I will modify the amendment, and make it read "that when the House adjourns on Wednesday, the 20th," so that we need not meet on Thursday. Many members want to reach home before Sunday, and I have great respect for their scruples. While I am up, I will say that I shall be very sorry if the House adjourns over from this week or the beginning of next, for the reason that the Committee of Ways and Means are expected, and indeed are ordered by the rules of the House, to report the principal appropriation bills within thirty days after the meeting of Congress. So far, we have not been able to do anything for want of the estimates. We are very anxious to get in those bills before the holidays, and put them on file, in order that members may examine them. We cannot do that if we adjourn before next Wednesday.

Mr. KELLEY. If the 8th of January is to be kept as a holiday, it seems to me we might as well adjourn to the 9th, as to the 4th. It comes on Monday, and we might as well adjourn until Tuesday as Monday of that week.

But it was not to that point that I rose. I rose as promptly as I could at the close of the remarks of my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] to ask him for a little information. He told us that the 4th of July was played out. I wanted to know where that was done, whether it was at Vicksburg or at Gettysburg.

Mr. JOHNSON. I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. RADFORD] the 4th of July was played out. It was played out at Gettysburg. My colleague did not help to play it out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now demand the previous question on the propositions before the House.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The first question being on the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON to the amendment of Mr. STEVENS, and there being, on a division—ayes 98, noes 58—

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. PIKE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand, and take the yeas and nays upon the main proposition.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will withdraw the demand.

Mr. SPALDING. I renew it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. I do not understand how an amendment to an amendment can be in order when it embraces the precise proposition of the original resolution.

The SPEAKER. That would be a good point of order if the facts were so, but unfortunately that is not a correct statement of the case. The original proposition fixed two periods of time, one for adjournment, and one for reassembling. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania fixes two different periods of time; and the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa proposes to change the time of reassembling only as fixed in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 71, not voting 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Delano, Denison, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

An act (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia;" and

An act (H. R. No. 28) to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

The question recurred on agreeing to Mr. STEVENS's amendment as amended; and being put, the said amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I now demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution as amended, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope it will not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROLLINS moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken, and the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 67, not voting 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brownwell, Brooks, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Baker, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blow, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Dawes, Defrees, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Hogan, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Latham, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marshall, McKee, McKuer, Mercier, Morris, Moulton, O'Neill, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Smith, Spalding, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Voorhees, Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Wright—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Brandegee, Chanler, Culver, Delano, Dumont, Garfield, Goodyear, Harris, Higby, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Jones, Marston, Miller, Morrill, Noell, Pomeroy, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Schenck, Robert T. Van Horn, Wendworth, and Whaley—25.

So the concurrent resolution was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the House will not do that. Let us meet to-morrow and receive reports of committees. I do not care if anything else is done. Perhaps we can go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will waive the motion until we see if we can get through with the call of committees.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I renew the motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers and testimony relating to the claims of Philip Epstein and others, recently investigated by Colonel Nicodemus, in compliance with a resolution of the House; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports.

REFURNISHING THE PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriation for refurnishing and repairing the President's House; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask that by unanimous consent the rule requiring the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole be dispensed with, and that it be considered in the House now.

No objection was made.

The bill was read. It appropriates $30,000, or as much thereof as shall be necessary, for refurnishing the President's House and repairing the same.

Mr. STEVENS. I will simply say that we have reported the amount which was contained in the deficiency bill which failed between the two Houses. They find it absolutely necessary to have more than the usual amount—which is $20,000—for the house is now, owing to circumstances which have occurred, almost totally unfurnished, and this sum is absolutely necessary. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS also, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. STEVENS. I will move that this bill be made the special order in Committee of the Whole for to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I suppose this bill is in conformity with the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior. If so, we might as well consider it now as at any other time.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well. I am desirous to have the bill passed at once. It is drawn in accordance with the estimates. I will, therefore, withdraw my motion to make it a special order, and ask that it be considered at the present time.

No objection was made.

The bill was read at length. It provides the following appropriations:

For invalid pensions under various acts, $500,000. For revolutionary pensions and pensions of widows, children, mothers, and sisters of soldiers, per acts of March 18, 1818; May 15, 1828; June 7, 1832; July 4, 1836; July 7, 1838; March 3, 1843; July 21 and 29, 1848; February 3, 1853; June 3, 1858, and July 14, 1862, $9,800,000. For Navy pensions of widows, children, mothers, and sisters, per acts of August 11, 1848, and July 14, 1862, $140,000.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is debate in order now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] who reported the bill is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I will give way to my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] if he desires to make any remarks upon this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to say a few words upon this subject. I was not aware this bill was coming before the House at this time. I certainly have no objection to the passage of this bill. It is, I presume, a bill making appropriations for the payment of those annuities and bounties provided for by law. But I desire to say that I am very well satisfied in my own mind that our pension laws need revision. The amount now payable to pensioners, under the law, is too small. Eight dollars a month will not support and maintain a person who is dependent upon the Government bounty. There is also a class of persons dependent upon the Government for this bounty who are not, in my judgment, now provided for by law. Our examining surgeons throughout the country, I find, very uniformly recommend, when a party has lost a limb, a leg, or an arm, that it be regarded as a full disability. Certainly it is a full disability so far as enabling the party to obtain for himself a livelihood.

But there is another class of persons who are still more disabled, certainly more disabled so far as obtaining a livelihood is concerned. They actually need and must have the help of others, even to help them to sit at the table. They are those without arms or without legs, or totally blind, perhaps. Yet those parties can receive only eight dollars a month, and that is not enough; they should have more. And I will take this opportunity of saying that unless some other gentleman shall move in the matter, I shall, at the earliest convenient day, introduce a bill which will increase the lower grade of pensions, giving parties more than eight dollars a month for what is now called full disability, and providing for that particular class of persons who are unable to take care of themselves, who are disabled beyond the power of taking care of themselves. That is all I desire to say on the subject at this time.

Mr. STEVENS. The remarks of the gentleman are not quite pertinent, although that is a matter of no great importance. We are now making appropriations under the law as it stands. We could not alter the law by a provision of an appropriation bill. The remarks of the gentleman are very well as suggestions to the committee who have that subject in charge. I will say to the gentleman that I am very glad he is willing, now the war is over, although he was not quite willing while the war was going on, to aid those who are the victims of the war. I shall vote for what he has suggested, to double the pensions as they now stand; and I shall also vote to make them payable out of the forfeited estates of those who have created the necessity for those pensions. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken, and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. STEVENS also, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1867.

The bill was read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for the 12th of January, 1866, and from day to day until disposed of, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER HUDSON RIVER.

Mr. DAVIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to declare a certain bridge over the Hudson river a public highway.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I wish to say to my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] that, out of courtesy to him, I have refrained from objecting to the introduction of this bill; but I deem it proper to notify him that I shall oppose the passage of the measure, as the question is one in which my constituents feel a deep interest.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifty thousand extra copies of the official report of Lieutenant General Grant, without covers, be printed for the use of the House; and that in addition to the above, there be printed of the same one thousand copies with covers for the use of the headquarters of the armies of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I think that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LAFLIN,] had better make the number a little larger. This report is very much in demand. It is so long that the country papers have not been able to print it at all; and very few of the city papers outside of New York have printed it. I would suggest to the gentleman to make the number fifty thousand.

Mr. LAFLIN. In view of the suggestion of the gentlemen from Illinois, it is perhaps proper that I should make an explanation.

The members of the Committee on Printing are as anxious as any members of this House to do all credit to the character of this report. They agree that it is a most important and interesting report; yet they feel that, in reference to this subject of public printing, they have a duty to perform which they cannot neglect. It is time that we should enter upon a system of retrenchment; and anxious as we are to pay a compliment both to the subject and the author of this report, we feel that we cannot, at this time, too much study economy. We have investigated this subject, and we have found that, in offering this resolution calling for twenty thousand copies, we exceed by one hundred per cent. any demand on the part of the House for the printing of any document of a similar character during the past four years. I may state also that, as appears from a statement of the Superintendent of Public Printing, every copy of this report will cost, without covers, seven cents, and with covers, ten cents.

We would have been very glad to report in favor of even the very large number which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] at first proposed—two hundred and fifty thousand, which would have involved an expense of nearly $25,000—if the state of our finances would have permitted it; but, sir, when we bear in mind that, in no department of the public service have our expenses increased so rapidly, and in the judgment of many with so little reason, as in the department of public printing, we think it high time for us to stop and consider whether it is not possible to inaugurate a more economical system. Let me say to members of the House that they may prepare themselves to find the Superintendent of Public Printing, when he shall submit his report, making an extra requisition of over $600,000; and the House may have reason to be gratified if the expenditures for public printing during the past year have not been nearer $2,000,000 than $1,500,000.

Now, sir, if we intend to enter upon a system of retrenchment, let us begin at the very start. Here is a document, the interest and importance of which I am willing to acknowledge; but by consenting to print so large a number as has been proposed, which is five times the number of copies of any similar document ever printed by the House, we should inaugurate a precedent which, I know, would be urged with power and effect, not only upon the committee, but upon the House, during the whole session. In some way we must economize in our expenditures for public printing. This resolution, even in the shape submitted by the committee, provides for an expenditure one hundred per cent. greater than former expenditures in similar cases. We have this document without covers, because covers cost three cents apiece. Now, I submit to the House whether, with this state of facts, it becomes us in this early period of the session to inaugurate a system which, if carried out to the end of the session, will increase our public printing from $1,500,000 to over $3,000,000. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does not the gentleman yield for the purpose of allowing me to submit my amendment?

Mr. LAFLIN. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERK TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. ELIOT, from the select committee on freedmen, reported the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the select committee on freedmen be authorized to employ a clerk at the usual compensation.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

WAR DEBTS OF LOYAL STATES.

Mr. BLAINE, from the select committee on the war debts of the loyal States, reported the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the select committee on the war debts of the loyal States be allowed to employ a clerk during the present session, or until he is discharged, at the usual compensation.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House, I desire to make a statement. There was a little confusion in regard to the number which should compose that committee, between the gentlemen from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] It was my intention to have yielded to the number of nine, and not to the number of twenty-three. I think that the various interests involved in the matter would be fully answered and better satisfied if, by unanimous consent of the House, the Speaker were allowed to add two members to that committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. With such an excellent committee as it is, I think it is quite large enough.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to add two members to it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, objected, but afterward withdrew his objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the States and Territories for bills and resolutions.

COURTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. DENNY introduced a bill in relation to the courts in Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DENNY asked that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the gentleman to move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. This subject has been considered during the last two Congresses, and there has been much conflict of views in regard to it. I make that motion.

Mr. DENNY. I have no objection to a reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, if that be deemed the best way to accomplish the object I have in view. The subject is one of great importance to my constituents, and if it be referred to that committee, I hope that it will be reported back as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. WILSON. There is no provision in the bill for any notice being given of the times and places of holding courts in that Territory. That of itself should send the bill to that committee to be properly amended.

Mr. DENNY. I ask that the committee have leave to report at any time.

There being no objection it was so ordered. The bill was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT JERSEY CITY.

Mr. WRIGHT introduced a bill making an appropriation for a custom-house and warehouse at Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, introduced a bill to amend the act of March 3, 1853, granting land to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, and an act supplementary to the act of July 4, 1864, of the same import; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, also introduced a bill to equalize bounties to soldiers of the Army of the United States during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TREASON.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That treason against the United States Government is a crime that ought to be punished.

Mr. WENTWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that it be referred to the select committee of fifteen.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order during the pendency of the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE moved that the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 152, nays 0, not voting 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Brooks, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Seefeldt, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Voorhees, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—152.

NAYS—0.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Delos R. Ashley, Baxter, Blaine, Brandegee, Chandler, Culver, Delano, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Harris, Hill, Jones, Ladin, Latham, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Niblack, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Raymond, Schonck, Stillwell, Francis Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—30.

So the resolution was unanimously adopted.

During the call of the roll, Mr. VOORHEES stated that Mr. NIBLACK was unexpectedly absent; that if present he would give the resolution a very cordial support.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged motion. All the committees have been called for reports. To-morrow is private bill day, and I presume no reports from the committee on private bills will be ready; and with the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PRICE called for tellers on the motion. Tellers were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

Mr. DONNELLY introduced the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas republican institutions can find permanent safety only upon the basis of the universal intelligence of the people; and whereas the great disasters which have afflicted the nation and desolated one half its territory are traceable, in a great degree, to the absence of common schools and general education among the people of the lately rebellious States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the joint committee on reconstruction be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing in the capital a national Bureau of Education, whose duty it shall be to enforce education, without regard to race or color, upon the population of all such States as shall fall below a standard to be established by Congress; and to inquire whether such a bureau should not be made an essential and permanent part of any system of reconstruction.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Is this a concurrent resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. SCOFIELD. It instructs a joint committee.

The SPEAKER. Either House can instruct a joint committee.

Mr. JOHNSON moved to lay the resolution on the table, and demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. DONNELLY were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-nine, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 113, not voting 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Aaron Harding, Edwin N. Hubbard, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Le Bond, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, Radford, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Smith, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Voorhees, Winfield, and Wright—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hubert, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kaykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, Melndoe, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Seefeldt, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—113.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley,

Banks, Blaine, Brandegee, Chanler, Conkling, Callom, Culver, DeFrees, Delano, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Harris, Hogan, Jones, Kasson, Lynch, Miller, Newell, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Rousseau, Schenck, Starr, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, and Robert T. Van Horn—32.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The main question was ordered to be put; and being put, the resolution was adopted.

SALARY OF ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York, asked unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the salary of O. S. Buxton, first assistant doorkeeper of this House for the Thirty-Ninth Congress, be made equal to that of the reading clerk.

Several MEMBERS called for the regular order of business.

MEMBERS OF A COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER announced that, in accordance with the order of the House of to-day, he had appointed Messrs. GREEN CLAY SMITH of Kentucky, and THOMAS W. FERRY of Michigan, as additional members of the select committee on the war debts of the loyal States.

The call of the States and Territories for resolutions was then resumed.

RAILROAD FACILITIES.

Mr. SLOAN submitted the following resolution; upon which he demanded the previous question;

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be directed to inquire whether persons visiting the national capital from the West are subjected to any unnecessary inconvenience or obstacles in passing through the city of Baltimore, and to report to this House at an early day whether it would be just and expedient to authorize the Northern Central Railroad Company of Pennsylvania to extend their road to this city.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SLOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COBB submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire whether the act of Congress by which so much of the District of Columbia as lies south of the Potomac was retroceded to the State of Virginia, is not void as being in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States; and if so, what legislation is proper or necessary to enable the Government to resume its jurisdiction over that portion of said District; and that they may report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. PAINE submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas, during the late rebellion more than one million volunteer soldiers and one hundred thousand volunteer officers have, by meritorious services in the field, entitled themselves to the gratitude of the nation, and many hundreds of such officers and soldiers have, by study and experience, become qualified for any commission in the regular Army, and many so qualified have been partially disabled by wounds or otherwise, and are yet capable of performing most of the duties required of officers in time of peace, and many of those required in time of war;

Resolved, That justice demands that in case of any increase of the standing Army within five years from January 1, 1866, all new commissions below the commission of Lieutenant general shall be granted to such meritorious and capable volunteer officers and soldiers as have not heretofore held commissions in the regular Army, and that such as have been partially disabled and are yet capable of performing the duties necessary in peace and war shall be preferred in granting such commissions.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That all papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called confederate States of America, or either of them, shall be referred to the joint committee of fifteen without debate, and no members shall be admitted from either of said so-called States until Congress shall declare such States or either of them entitled to representation.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the gentleman to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot do that.

Mr. HALE. I wish to offer an amendment excepting the claimants from the State of Tennessee from the operation of that rule.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot agree to except the claimants from Tennessee. The committee can pass upon their cases first if they see proper.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to lay the resolution upon the table, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KASSON. Before the vote is taken, I wish to inquire if this resolution is not the end of the resolution of the House which was cut off by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question. It is in the nature of debate.

Mr. BROOKS. It is the same, precisely the same resolution.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 42, nays 109, not voting 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbard, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Noel, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Smith, Strouse, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Voorhees, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Callom, Darling, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Briggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Hubbard, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hull, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Kelly, Keitcham, Kuykendall, Latin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Schellbarger, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, Trowbridge, Van Aorman, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—109.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Blow, Bromwell, Chanler, Culver, Davis, Dawes, DeFrees, Delano, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Goodyear, Harris, James Humphrey, Jones, Julian, Kasson, Kelso, McCullough, Miller, Newell, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Schenck, Sloan, Taylor, Upson, and Robert T. Van Horn—31.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was disagreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. WARD. I was out of the Hall when this resolution was offered. I ask that it may be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. I understand that this resolution, which it is attempted to pass here, is in violation of the Constitution and of the law of Congress which requires the Speaker of this House to administer the oath of office to the Representatives of States as they appear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules both points of order. The question is upon seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. KELLEY. I would ask the consent of the House that a letter from Governor Brown be read to the House.

Objections were made by members on both sides of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. Pass the resolution, and then read the letter.

Mr. SMITH. I rise to a point of order. In the first place I desire to inquire whether, when the resolution was returned from the Senate day before yesterday, and the House concurred in an amendment of the resolution, and a motion was made to reconsider that vote, which motion was laid on the table, therefore deciding clearly what the opinion of this House was in regard to that motion—I inquire now, as my point of order, whether it is fair and proper for a resolution, rejected by both the Senate and the House, to be pushed through at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is not in the province of the Chair to decide what is fair or unfair for the House to do. The House themselves must determine that question. The Chair rules that it is not a good point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to a question of order. In my judgment, it seems that there is another constitutional objection to the passage of this resolution. The Constitution of the United States provides that each House—

Mr. STEVENS. I call the gentleman to order. The gentleman has made no point of order. The Chair has nothing to do with what is constitutional and what is not, in this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] will state his point of order, and then the Chair will decide it.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it in order for this House to pass a resolution which is already in conflict, in my judgment, with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States? [Laughter.] I desire simply to submit this proposition for the consideration of gentlemen of this House. The Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. As it seems to me, when Representatives come here claiming to be—

Mr. SLOAN. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Davis] is not stating his point of order. He must state it briefly, and the Chair will decide it with equal brevity.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit to the House the propriety of passing a resolution which appears to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. KELLEY. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Davis] is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to submit a question which I believe to be a question of order, involving the meaning of the word "papers" in this resolution. I submit that it is not in order to refer the credentials of members of this House to a committee of the Senate. I believe the same question was raised in the Senate. I ask a decision on that point, whether the word "papers" in this resolution involves credentials of members of this House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I suppose the Speaker will decide that question when the question properly comes up for decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not regard it as a point of order upon this resolution. The Chair has no objection to state, if the House desire, what his decision would be upon such a question when it shall come up.

Mr. BROOKS. Let us hear the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. We better vote upon the resolution now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that point when it comes up.

Mr. BROOKS. I wish to ask a question which may govern my vote upon this subject. I would ask whether the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] who presented this resolution, considers "papers" to include credentials or not. Papers are one thing, and credentials altogether another thing. Papers may be presented and referred to anybody. Papers are very unimportant, but credentials from States are matters of very great importance. Does the gentleman, by this resolution of his, propose to refer the credentials of Representatives from the State of Tennessee, for instance, to this committee composed of members of the Senate as well as of the House?

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order—that this debate is all out of order pending the call of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can make no decision except on points of order; and these various suggestions are not points of order.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to a point of order?

Mr. THAYER. No, sir; simply to appeal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to allow me to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has objected to further debate.

Mr. THAYER. I simply desire to make a suggestion in regard to the phraseology of the resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. It is very good as it is.

Mr. THAYER. I do not appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS;] I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, the previous question having been seconded, the resolution cannot now be modified except by unanimous consent, because the House may desire to take a vote upon the proposition in the exact shape in which it was introduced.

Mr. THAYER. It is quite apparent that, if the resolution pass in its present shape, it will bind this House not to receive members unless—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Chair must arrest all debate and conversation, unless gentlemen rise to legitimate points of order.

The previous question was seconded, there being, on a division—ayes ninety-three, noes not counted.

The main question was ordered, which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ANCONA called the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 107, nays 56, not voting 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the resolution; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DECEASE OF SENATOR COLLAMER.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, communicated resolutions adopted by the Senate relative to the decease of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the resolutions were taken from the table and read, as follows:

Resolved, unanimously, That the Senate has received with the deepest sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, unanimously, That the members of the Senate, from a sincere desire of showing every mark of respect due to the memory of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, unanimously, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions just received from the Senate announce, what recurs with painful regularity, that death has again thinned our numbers, and that we, members of Congress, sooner, perhaps, than others in different walks of life, are doomed to an early dismissal from among the living. In this instance, it is true that our deceased friend, the late Senator from Vermont, had reached fullness of years and of honors, but his constitution had been so admirably preserved that those of us who had recently associated with him were glad to believe he had yet many years in store of useful and lustrous service. His sudden departure surprised the country and his colleagues as much as his own family, and he will be as sincerely lamented by the public as by his friends and relatives. It was my happiness to have been admitted to his intimacy, and I shall speak of him in terms of affection, my feelings not allowing me to do less, but at the same time, as he would himself have most desired, with entire justice.

Hon. JACOB COLLAMER would have been seventy-five years old had he lived until the 8th of January next, having been born at Troy, New York, January 8, 1791. With his father, a soldier of the Revolution, he moved to Burlington, Vermont, where he received his education, and graduated at the Vermont University in the class of 1810. After being admitted to the bar in 1813, he made a brief campaign in the last war with England, as a lieutenant of artillery in the detached militia of the United States service, and there was no portion of his history to which he referred with more pride. Having settled in Royalton, he represented the town, while successfully pursuing his profession, in the State Legislature in 1821, 1822, 1827, and 1828, was member of the State constitutional convention in 1836, and was made associate justice of the supreme court of Vermont in 1838. He was continued on the bench until 1842, when he was elected a member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States. Re-elected in 1844 and 1846, he was, at the expiration of his service in this House, immediately called to the Cabinet of President Taylor. Upon the death of the President he resigned his place in 1850. The same year he was again placed as judge in the supreme court of Vermont, and so remained until 1854, when he was elected a Senator of the United States for six years from 1855. At the expiration of the term he was re-elected. At his first entrance upon his duties in the Senate he was placed upon the Committee on Territories, of which Judge Douglas was chairman, and made the celebrated reply of the minority (March 12, 1856) to the report of that distinguished gentleman on the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas. The compact statement of facts, the logical deductions therefrom, and the powerful condensation of the summing up at the conclusion, at once established his reputation in that body of which he became so marked a member. At the close of his career he held the position of chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, and was also member of the Committee on the Judiciary. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the Vermont University in 1849 and from Dartmouth College in 1857. Suffering from a sharp attack of congestion of the lungs, induced by a cold caught while returning from the funeral of a brother, Senator COLLAMER died, from an organic disease of the heart, on the evening of Thursday, November 9 last, at his residence in Woodstock, attended by the love and watchful solicitude of a devoted family, where the pastor of his church, on the following Sabbath, performed impressive funeral services, without pomp or show, and where the people of the town and the bereaved family, as the sun was slowly sinking in the west, followed him with tears and sorrow to his quiet tomb.

His constant elevation produced no change in the modesty of his demeanor, and there was no station, in this long recital of his public employments, which he did not fitly fill and adorn.

At the start in life, young COLLAMER was a Jeffersonian Republican. Later, when parties assumed other names, he was a Whig, and always distinguished for the thoroughness with which he examined all questions, for his moderation, for the courtesy with which he ever treated political opponents, and for his scorn, which he took no pains to conceal, of demagogues. Though stoutly maintaining his own predilections, he reviled with cruel words neither parties nor persons, and now, that his course is run, he is at peace with all the world.

As a judge, he was distinguished for swiftness in the dispatch of business, for ability and stern impartiality, and for the perspicacity of his opinions, as orally delivered or as recorded in reports. While in office, though habitually urbane, he never forgot the gravity and dignity of his judicial position, which sometimes gave the impression of hauteur not actually felt. He was a good disciplinarian, and, therefore, occasionally curt, as when the time of the court was unnecessarily consumed by illogical or irrelevant speeches, and the unfortunate members of the bar, or partial observers, may have thought he was sour and cold, when he was really, to those who knew him, a man of excellent humor, and as appreciative of merit as of demerit. While he had a full grasp and comprehension of the principles of law, his memory never failed to supply instances in which those principles had been illustrated, and applied. Under his administration, jurors had little difficulty in the solution of nice questions of law and fact, however intimately blended; and the authority of jurors under his guidance and teachings suffered no depreciation, but their functions and capacity appeared to be vindicated upon every trial. In a State which has not been deficient in eminent jurists, including such men as Chipman, Chase, Van Ness, Phelps, Prentiss, and Williams in the past, not to say anything of the living, the name of COLLAMER is, and will be, ranked as a worthy peer. He was an upright judge.

It will be remembered that the Cabinet of General Taylor, in its high order of character and ability, has rarely, if ever, been surpassed in the history of our country, and it was, in fact, what cabinets were designed to be, the wise council of the President. Among such distinguished associates it is fair to say the late Senator was not dwarfed by contrast with any. In the discharge of the practical duties of his Department he is still remembered by official veterans yet lingering there for his untiring devotion and intelligent application to that business of the Government which comes to the knowledge and touches the daily accommodations of more persons than that of any or all other of the Executive Departments. By his report it appears that the excess of the revenues of the General Post Office over the expenditures in 1849 was $400,000, but soon after it ceased to be even self-sustaining, presenting annual deficits until the present year. While Postmaster General he organized a division in his Department to attend to all foreign mails, foreign postal arrangements, and ocean steamship lines. The existing postal treaty with Great Britain, at his entrance, just agreed upon, was carried out by him, and all the details for that purpose perfected. The various subsequent international postal arrangements show the wisdom of such treaties, and they are still executed in the Department according to the original plan. The administration of the office while in the hands of Mr. COLLAMER met with no complaint, which is the highest compliment this extended and ever-extending Department can achieve.

While in the Senate he commanded the confidence of all its members, and the measures he introduced were not only easily carried in the committees of which he was chairman, but when they were brought into the Senate nearly always passed without even a division. He participated in all the important debates, bringing those acceptable offerings which aid in the solution of subjects under discussion; and, without making any dazzling display, or aspiring to any domination, justly wielded a large influence over his fellow-members. If he was not their Mentor, there was no other Senator whose counsel upon all subjects was more frequently sought, or more generously appreciated.

Nature had dealt liberally with him, having given to him a fine figure as well as a full and well-poised mind; and in his youth the graces of his person bespoke favor. In his age he not only spoke like a Senator, but with the mastery of a piercing eye, that "spoke audience ere the tongue," looked like one, and, as such, his words were accepted as wise among wise men. In his conversation he led, when he led at all, with useful topics for discussion, and then pursued them with unflinching animation, not monopolizing all the time, but ever and anon showing himself an engaged and gentle listener, as ready to be pleased with the wit of others as with his own. An hour with him produced no impression of a sermon or a comedy, but his sense and humor were so commingled that those who enjoyed such intercourse felt that neither the one nor the other could have been more dignified and useful, nor more pleasant and exhilarating. To all his natural advantages, to all his varied experience, he added patient industry and force of character. He decided nothing by intuition—not looking for Jupiter to come to his aid from the clouds—but, helping himself, he always diligently studied subjects as they came up in all their parts and relations; so that his opinions, whether in the social circle, on the bench, or in the Senate, far from being crude or extravagant, were the fruit of wise reflection, and no man reasoned more independently, or was less afraid to stand alone.

Senator COLLAMER was not a wide and desultory reader, though well versed in history and standard literature—including many quaint and rare old books—but he was a very diligent and conscientious student of the books he loved, retaining forever any mastery he had once acquired over them, and among them none were more thoroughly read and inwardly digested than the Bible. A model in the regularity of his habits, modest and republican in his style of living—in his tastes as well as principles—he maintained a character of spotless purity in all the relations of life, public and private, and his own home was made happy by his presence. His piety was unaffected, and he was a regular attendant wherever he dwelt upon divine worship. He was liberal and public spirited in proportion to his means, though an economical manager of his own affairs, as he was of those of his country. In his own State at the time of his decease he was regarded as her foremost man, and his loss will be mourned by the nation as the loss of one of its great men.

I believe he desired to be regarded as a Christian statesman, and any terms added to these he would have considered as terms of diminution. He preferred to be quietly right rather than to be conspicuous and wrong. He sought to convince, not to be eloquent. He was impressive rather than impulsive. He appealed to the reason of men, and did not aim to excite their temper. He tried to make his audience understand the weight of the argument, not to please them with the beatitudes of rhetoric. The truths to which he gave utterance were calculated in their naked simplicity, sometimes in their puritanic, gritty homeliness of phrase, to stand the tests of all time, but he took no care to embalm his works with the ornaments of the schools, or the spoils of literature in order to win that fame which style often secures even to shallow thinkers. It was breadth of view and not felicity of diction he aimed at. He borrowed little from others. His intellectual structures were built of timber he had freshly cut and hewn on his own domains, redolent of the perfume of the forest, and were not piled up from dead drift-wood quotations which float on the surface of learning, so tempting to merely literary wreckers. Though always bravely in earnest and self-conscious of his power, he had no hot blood, teeming with a luxuriant progeny of hyperbole and fancy, but his unembellished words always kept on a level with his argument, clear, cogent, and inspiring the hearer with the idea that the speaker was wiser, freighted with more thought upon the subject, than himself. Knowing that the human mind wearies with long-continued attention, he was accustomed to enliven his speech with an occasional apposite anecdote, of which he possessed a wonderful opulence, but they were always chaste and never delayed the argument. They were single flashes of wit which shed light over the subject in hand, while the speaker and hearer were a long way further on in their journey. Though it was obvious that he had a keen relish for wit, he more worshiped the light which shines forever than the momentary brilliancy of the meteor, and was more truly great in the irresistible logic with which he was wont to intrench himself and bid defiance to opponents.

He scrutinized novelties, and was slow to exchange a present inheritance for future prospects. But, if he was not an innovator, he was ready to sustain and defend any well-considered and substantial improvement. Conservative from natural temperament, as well as age and experience, he yet never was unwilling to strike at any tangible evil or governmental abuse.

The Constitution of his country he had read with profound attention, and upholding it in all its parts, mainly in accordance with the school of Madison, he strove to be the guardian of the natural rights of the people as well as the just authority of the Government. He loved liberty and revered law. Loving his own State dearly, and watchful of all her rights, he never hesitated to subordinate her sovereignty to that of the nation. His merits in the Senate, as a constitutional lawyer of ample learning and uncommon sagacity, were cheerfully acknowledged there; and his fame, if it did not leap over, extended as wide as the boundaries of our country.

Though his views were usually in harmony with those of the people of his own State, the transcendent regard they had for him and his exalted character permitted him to differ with them upon some questions, as they felt, whatever differences there might be, that they were the result of patriotic and independent opinions of a full-grown man.

He abhorred war considered as a trade or profession, was jealous of the superseding of laws by military rule, and had serious forebodings as to its influence on public morals; but he had large faith in the American people, in their intelligence and traditions; and, in responding to the wager of battle by a wicked and rebellious people, he was for the energetic and full exercise of the military power of the country. Chary of legislative weapons, he had no doubt at all of the efficiency of martial resources.

In the Senate others may have excelled him in learning, in genius, in sarcasm, in oratory, but no one surpassed him in stores of knowledge, in admirable clearness of statement, in lofty purpose, in direct and vigorous argument, nor in that combination of sound opinions which make the intelligent statesman.

Such a life—with no words his friends could wish to blot; with no acts that do not contribute to his praise, closing with his country's plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," triumphantly closing with the Christian's hope in the resurrection—appeals to us by the force of its illustrious example, that we may so make up our final record, that those who survive us may be able to say, as we do now, "Behold, with no remembered sins of youth, here are the splendors of an age, a long age of good works."

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States has received with the deepest sensibility the intelligence of the death of JACOB COLLAMER, late a Senator in Congress from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the members and officers of this House, as a proper mark of respect for the personal character and long and faithful services of Hon. JACOB COLLAMER, will go into mourning by wearing crape upon the left arm for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect for the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, after the remarks of my distinguished colleague, who has so justly analyzed the character of the late Judge COLLAMER, it will not be appropriate for me to detain the House longer than to pay the tribute of love to the memory of my departed friend.

Judge COLLAMER was for many years a leading lawyer in Vermont. He looked upon law as the perfection of human reason, and studied it as the highest and most perfect science. Hence he spurned the garbage of the outer courts. He never touched the offals of the sacrifice, but worshipped at the inner shrine of the temple whose architectural proportions are just; whose parts are orderly and harmonious; where justice is found married to law, and controversy guided by the spirit of truth, rather than the spirit of victory. By well-directed study he became one of the finest judicial scholars of the age, and when called from the bar to the bench sustained an equal rank with the scholarly and accomplished Prentiss, the metaphysical Williams, and the distinguished Phelps, whose legal powers were as measureless as those of Daniel Webster.

As a judge Mr. COLLAMER was without fear and without reproach; and his opinions are models for their elegance and simplicity of diction, their unerring logic, and their freedom from any of that party bias which sometimes soils the ermine of the bench.

His career as a Senator is known to the whole country. In the most distinguished body of the nation he had no rival in spotless integrity and purity of character, and no superior in debate. It has never been my fortune to know a man who could state a proposition more clearly, and enforce it with more unerring and unanswerable logic than Judge COLLAMER; and when he made an argument every Senator knew that he spoke the honest convictions of his own enlightened judgment. In the great struggle through which we have passed, he calmly waited the logic of events, or more properly speaking the indications of God, and then fearlessly urged the policy which he deemed to be right.

As a lawyer, as a judge, as a Representative in Congress, as Postmaster General, as Senator, he was always unswerving by private or party interests, and preserved a reputation as spotless as a child.

The crowning glory of Judge COLLAMER's character was after all best exhibited at home. You all recollect the sweetness of his face. He seemed, as Sydney Smith said of Horner, to have the ten commandments written there. He was a devoted husband and father, a kind and generous neighbor, and in the highest sense of the word a Christian gentleman.

And now that he has gone across the silent gulf which separates the living from the dead, the pleadings of his life are heard. It is for us to reverently listen. Let us imitate his virtues; so that when we are called to join our fathers it may be said of us, as it can be safely said of our lamented friend, the world is better that he has lived.

Mr. RAYMOND. I regret to say, sir, that I am entirely unprepared to commemorate in any fitting terms the character and services of the eminent Senator whose demise has been announced. Indeed, after what has been so well and fully said of his life and public services by those from his own State who knew him so thoroughly and loved him so well, I should feel that any extended remarks from me were simply beside the proprieties of the occasion. But I trust the House will bear with me while, in a few words, I comply with the request of those of his own State upon this floor, that I will at least express my own sympathy with them in their loss, and my concurrence in their estimate of his character.

It was my good fortune to know the late Senator COLLAMER for many years last past. It was one of the most pleasing incidents of the annual festival of our university commencement, to those of us who were then in college, that he was to be present, as he was always present when commencement day came round, to rehearse to us the history of the troubles through which he had to pass to achieve the education to which he attributed his success in life, and to give to us, as no one could do so well, those counsels and suggestions of which we all stood so much in need. I learned then to admire his character and to love him for his kind consideration toward us, so much his juniors, so eager, so ready always to profit by his example and to learn from his counsels. It was not my fortune in after life to know him intimately. I used to see him only as we see each other in the casual meetings of public life. The more I saw him the more I honored him, the more profoundly I respected the great gifts he brought to the public service, and the high moral considerations by which his public actions were always guided.

His mind was clear, acute, and strong. He never failed to discriminate accurately between all the views of every subject he discussed. His logic was clear, and strong as the English language could frame. There was nothing in his discharge of public duty that ever was low or narrow. He always rose to the level of every subject, and he did it without an effort, for the highest subjects were only upon the level upon which his mind constantly moved. He was entirely free from the small ambitions and smaller jealousies that too often encroach upon the large generousities that alone give dignity to the details of a public life. In everything that he did he consulted the dictates of his conscience. He acted in public as in private with a view to what he believed to be justice and truth, and the highest good of those in whose behalf he spoke or acted.

Senator COLLAMER was not given merely to theorising on public affairs; I think, if I have not mistaken the tendency, drift, and principle of his public action, that he looked upon Governments and the offices of Government as experimental in their nature; and the question which guided his conduct was not what ought to be done on the highest theory we can frame, "What would I do if I could have my own way in everything?" but "What is the best thing on the whole, which, under the present circumstances, it is competent to accomplish?"

He was, therefore, as far removed as possible from that class of public men whom the French were accustomed to designate doctrinaires. He was a practical, direct, straightforward statesman in the largest and best sense of that great and noble word.

I think Senator COLLAMER, moreover, showed largely, perhaps was to a certain extent the cause of, that moderation, that steady conservatism in tone and temper, which has always characterized the noble State from which he came. It has always seemed to me that Vermont, more thoroughly and more truly even than any other State of the Union, presents a perfect model of a republican commonwealth. I know of no State certainly—and my acquaintance with it has been somewhat intimate—where I believe the great principles of social equality obtain a more thorough foothold than in that Green Mountain State. I know of none in which the personal and civil rights of every human being obtain a more prompt, a more thorough, a more cordial recognition.

And I should state, equally to the honor of that noble State, that she is always steady in the judgment of public affairs; and Senator COLLAMER shared her steadiness of judgment and action, never carried away by mere caprice or gusts of public temper. He was still always profoundly respectful and deferential to that settled and permanent tendency and conviction of the public mind which, perhaps, is the surest test of political truth to which any person in public or private life can possibly refer.

Vermont, Mr. Speaker, has been fortunate in the character of her public men, from a time beyond which my memory does not reach in her history. She has always had in her public councils men who conferred luster upon her, and gathered honor to themselves by the manner in which they met every duty which devolved upon them. Some of their names in various departments of the public service have been cited by the honorable gentlemen whose words preceded me. They are names that will live in history. They are names that reflect honor upon the professions with which they were connected; and Vermont still has in the public service in both Houses in this Congress, in the diplomatic service of the country, in the press, and everywhere else where public action can promote the public good, men whose names will be remembered for the good thus done the world.

But among them all she has no name—and it would be the highest wish I could wish her that in some future day she might have some name, though I feel how vain that wish is—that will occupy a higher place in the respect of all who knew him, and a more profound position in the love and esteem of those who are immediately acquainted with him, than that of JACOB COLLAMER.

Mr. GRIDER. I take pleasure in bearing some tribute of respect to the distinguished Senator who has lately departed from this life. I had the honor at an early day, in this Hall, to be associated with JACOB COLLAMER. I had the honor of a personal acquaintance with him, and living with him in the same mess. I had opportunities at least of becoming acquainted personally with his temper, with his qualifications, and with his private and individual feelings, as well as with his public convictions in the position he then occupied, and I felt that it was due to Judge COLLAMER to bear some testimony to that high appreciation which we always entertained as to his qualifications in every position in which the country placed him.

Judge COLLAMER was not a man of display. He needs no eulogy from any individual upon this floor. He has marked his character upon the records of his country. Long in public life, he proved himself competent and true and faithful in every position to which he was appointed. But I need not speak of his record. It is before the country. It is recognized with delight and pleasure, not only in his own neighborhood, but well understood and gratefully appreciated in the West.

Mr. Speaker, you have already heard delineated the variety of position which he occupied; and well may his friends appeal to the public records, and to the conflicts which have occurred in political life, and ask where Judge COLLAMER has been derelict, and when there was ever imputed to him any feeling but one of patriotic devotion to his country, and devotion to the highest interests of humanity.

Gentlemen who were familiar with him all know that he was not a man of rhetoric and poetry. He was a man of logic, of argument, of discrimination, of integrity, and of firmness. He studied what he said, said what he thought, and executed his purposes with regard, not to the approbation of men upon the right hand or upon the left, but with regard to that approbation which is better and higher than all—the approbation of his own conscience, in view of that eternal responsibility that awaits us all beyond the grave.

Sir, I loved JACOB COLLAMER. I have seen him in the social circle. I have seen him in the highest circles of this Government. I had the honor to be a messmate of his when Taney and McLean and Story and a host of other distinguished men formed, as it were, a family circle. I heard their interchange of thought and conversation. I had an opportunity to contrast and determine the quality of Judge COLLAMER'S mind and his attainments; and they were prominent and distinguished. He was always ready, always quick to discern, to discriminate, to enounce, to illustrate; he was peculiarly favored in the quality of his mind for pointed, clear illustration.

But, gentlemen, as I have said, his history is upon the record. Let me make one remark as to his personal qualities. He was gentle and kind and affable to all around him—to the humble and poor as well as others. Judge COLLAMER had a hand of congratulation to give to every man whom he believed to be an honest man; and yet, while he was thus condescending and affable, he felt that he himself was a man in attainments, in consideration, and in importance, equal to the highest.

In the social circle no one was so interesting, so illustrative, with such a fund of anecdote and instruction, and so full of kindness and gentleness. Not an angry word did I ever hear fall from him. But, gentlemen, allow me to say that, according to my convictions, we ought to estimate his character more from other considerations which have not, on my part, at least, been mentioned. He was not only a man of integrity and morality, but he was a Christian man and a Christian gentleman, and in this fact I trust his friends, and especially the home circle, may find the power of submission and the power of being cheered and consoled. A Christian gentleman, as he was, his death, although it may be to his country and his family a bereavement and a loss, to him it was a great gain.

I may be excused for stating a fact, for facts are illustrative of character more than words. When I had the honor to be in Congress—in the House—with Judge COLLAMER, we had a congressional prayer meeting. I remember distinctly that Judge COLLAMER, as a Christian gentleman, was uniformly there and participated in the devotional exercises. They were of frequent occurrence, and he used to attend, and Judge McLean, and a circle of the distinguished men of the bench and Legislature of that day. I have, therefore, the right to hope and to infer, and to cheer the disconsolate and the bereaved with the enunciation, that though he has left us, and his services are no longer ours, or his kind cheer for his family circle, yet to him it was but a glorious exchange, and in that exchange we may find the highest consolation, not only here in this Hall, but everywhere throughout the country, and more peculiarly in the family circle, where, I hope, his wife and his friends may be cheered with the bright prospect that they shall, according to Christian principles, meet him again and recognize him as a purified angel—no more amidst the conflict and labors of human existence, but pure and holy and blest as the angels of God.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my cordial concurrence in the resolutions now under consideration, and before the question is put I wish to add a few words to what has already been said in honor of the memory of the distinguished Senator whose decease has been announced.

To those of us who have listened, as many of us have so often, to his words of eloquence and wisdom at the other end of the Capitol, nothing which I can say can add anything to their appreciation of his great attainments, vast resources, practical wisdom, high character, and eminent usefulness. But to those who did not know him so well it may not be unimportant to hear in addition to the fitting tributes already spoken something more of the characteristics which so distinguished the able Senator and patriot whose death we so deeply mourn, from another whose good fortune it was to know him somewhat intimately. It happened to me upon my first entrance into Congress to be placed upon a committee of this House, upon which I have served several years since, corresponding in name and duties with one in the other branch of Congress, of which Judge COLLAMER was the head. It gave me a most excellent opportunity, as well as great pleasure to witness, sometimes in counsel with others, but more frequently in private consultation, his excellent sense, sound judgment, practical wisdom, and incorruptible integrity. Few men comprehended so easily, in fact I have scarcely met one, that could elucidate so clearly and fully the most abstruse and difficult propositions. His simple and clear statement of any subject, was in itself almost a demonstration. The clearness of his perceptions was indeed truly remarkable. Without ostentation or display, he communicated his stores of knowledge and wisdom most cheerfully, to willing and grateful listeners.

I have heard some of his associates in the Senate, and scores of others remark, that he was the wisest man in that august body. And all who knew him will agree that he was, at least, among the very best and greatest of those eminent men; and who could desire for his fame higher praise than this! But it was not as a Senator merely, or the wisdom which he displayed as a legislator, which constituted his only or chief claim to high distinction. He had the reputation, as has already been stated, of being a great lawyer in no ordinary sense—for he was not only learned in the principles and technicalities of the law, but it is admitted that he understood and comprehended the true spirit of the law better, and in greater degree, than many of the most distinguished lawyers of the land. To say that one is a great lawyer, in the highest sense, as was justly said of him, is to say that he was a great man. I know that it is not unfrequent, upon such an occasion as this, for partial friends to indulge in exaggerated praise, and high-wrought eulogium, but it is but simple justice to say of the late Senator from Vermont, that he was wise, pure, and patriotic in as eminent degree as any of the public men now upon the stage of action. And to a nice sense of justice, he added a mature judgment in the consideration of all subjects, formed upon careful examination and reflection. He was amiable in temper, and that, together with an originating mind, stored so full as it was by study and culture, made him a great favorite of all with whom he came in contact. He attained great influence, not by frequent and much speaking, but by solid reasoning and dispassionate argument. He never relied upon anything for success but legitimate and argumentative appeals to the understanding alone.

Such was JACOB COLLAMER: the wise Senator, the able statesman, the great lawyer. But he is gone, and we shall never behold him again on earth. How melancholy the reflection, that one so learned, so able, and so useful, and withal so beloved, should be thus removed from this great field of usefulness and honor, to be seen no more forever! Such lessons teach us, how little of lasting enjoyment is to be found in struggles and toils for honor and fame, except the purpose of such efforts is to secure noble ends. Ambition for place and power, when inspired by a desire to accomplish the greatest good to mankind, is not unworthy the highest aspirations of the great and good. But how suggestive the thought and the truth, that—

"When fame's loud trump hath blown its noblest blast,

Though loud the sound, the echo sleeps at last;
And glory, like the phoenix midst the fires,
Exhales her odors, blazes, and expires."

The frequent recurrence of such scenes as these admonish us how slight is our grasp upon life, and that we, too, must soon be called from the labors and struggles of earth to render an account of our stewardship while here; and well shall it be with us if we shall be able to present as good a record, "when time with us shall be no more," for faithfulness and duty well performed, as fell to the lot of our departed friend.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am unwilling that the West should be unheard on this occasion; and I have no other apology to offer for my remarks now except that I regret that some abler man from the West had not deemed that the privilege devolved upon him.

I entered Congress at the same time with Judge COLLAMER in 1843, and I had not long been associated with him before I marked him as a man of signal ability, and destined to take that high rank which has been so unanimously accorded him. I concur in all the noble traits of character which the gentlemen who have so eloquently preceded me have enlarged upon. But there are some points which they have overlooked that I deem too prominent to be omitted and do justice to so great a man. He distinguished himself for his kindness and fatherly care of the new States. While he scrupulously canvassed all our measures and opposed those which he deemed extravagant, yet he may have been considered a very liberal man to us, and I could mention many works of western improvement that stand out as monuments of his justice and foresight.

Judge COLLAMER was an economical man, and carefully investigated every claim that was brought before Congress, and those of his fellow-members who had not examined them never had any fears in following him if he only assured them that he had carefully examined the matter. He looked as I do upon economy, as one of the best safeguards of our Government, and as one of the essential requisites of a statesman. He thought that no man should be more liberal of the public money than he was of his own. He viewed economy in public affairs as nothing more nor less than strict honesty. The same sterling economy which characterized him in the legislative department he practiced in the executive department. As Postmaster General he tolerated no extravagance, and when I have said this, I need not say his Department was tainted with no corruption. And if the history of the Post Office Department is ever written, his administration will be noted as economical, cheap, and honest, and he will stand equal to, if not ahead in this respect, of the purest men who have ever adorned the national Post Office.

As to his ability I have only to quote my own case to show what effect he was capable of producing upon minds that were even prejudiced against his views. I was here during the last inauguration ceremonies, and when I came here I had not the views that I now have with reference to the reconstruction of the States. I had a conversation with one of the ablest men in this country upon that subject, and I might add, with a gentleman now occupying what I consider the highest position in this Republic. His views and mine at parting did not exactly coincide. His last words were, "I would like to have you read the late speech of Senator COLLAMER, if you have not done so." As I had not, he took particular pains to send to his own library and got for me the only copy he had, which he prized very highly, and trusted to his good fortune to get another. To that speech I owe the convictions which have dictated the votes which I have cast upon this floor. That speech convinced me, and I know no other way for a public man to vote than in accordance with his convictions, leaving the consequences, not to the dictation of selfish organizers of political parties, but to that Creator to whom a man is as much responsible for his official as for his private acts.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] has told us that Judge COLLAMER was conservative. Until those words, I had not made up my mind to address the House on this occasion. I deemed it my duty then to define Judge COLLAMER's conservatism. He was for preserving his Government, and he was for destroying everything that stood in the way of commending that Government to the protection and blessing of divine Providence. He was a conservative of the right and a radical destructive of the wrong. The gentleman from New York might have said of him that he was a radical conservative. He knew no expediency, he knew no policy, as against the equality of all mankind before the law; and that is the sense in which an immense majority of this House can be called conservatives.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GRIDER] spoke of Mr. COLLAMER as a conscientiously religious man, and he might have added that his religion was of that kind which made him believe and carry into actual practice the belief that men should be as equal before the bar of his country as they were before the bar of God. Judge COLLAMER met the black man on earth as he knew he would meet him in heaven:

The resolutions of Mr. MORRELL were then adopted.

And the House (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) adjourned until twelve m. on Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 18, 1865.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDGAR H. GRAY. The Journal of Thursday last was read and approved.

Hon. JOHN B. HENDERSON, of Missouri, appeared in his seat to-day.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. RAMSEY presented the petition of officers and men of the United States transport Union, praying for compensation for losses of clothing while in the active service of the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. GRIMES presented the petition of Commander George Henry Preble, of the United States Navy, praying that Congress may pass a law directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow him the same compensation that would have been allowed him if the order discharging him from the naval service had never been made; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented the petition of P. A. Wheeler, acting captain and assistant quartermaster of the United States volunteers, alleging that, without any omission of duty on his part, he was robbed of $2,240 and all his commissary and quartermaster papers for July and August, 1865, and praying that a bill may be passed for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Brevel Brigadier General William S. Tilton, and other volunteer officers of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, praying Congress to repeal the first section of the act approved March 3, 1865, prohibiting persons from receiving pensions who are receiving full salary from any office under the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Charles Fosdick Fletcher, praying for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific on the southern route; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Alpheus Fobes, United States pension agent in New York, praying for the passage of an act to refund money stolen from him; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of Major Elisha W. Dunn, paymaster in the United States Navy, alleging that he was stationed at the naval depot at Mound City, and lost all his papers, vouchers, &c., by fire, and praying that he may be settled with in the usual manner on equitable terms by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of citizens of New York, praying for a uniform system of general organization for invalid officers and soldiers of the war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of Philip Fraser, judge of the district court for the northern district of Florida, praying for additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented the petition of Samuel Graves, late a private in the ninth regiment Rhode Island volunteers, praying for an invalid pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I present also the petition of David Baker, Mowry & Steere, Samuel

True, and Nathaniel Crowell, owners of the brig Sabao, praying for remuneration for the loss of their vessel destroyed by the rebels. This case occurred in 1862. The Government chartered a vessel for the transportation of supplies from Maine to Fortress Monroe. The vessel reported to and was considered under the direction of the military authorities. While in that position, the rebel steamer Merrimac so called, with the steamship Jamestown, made a raid and destroyed the vessel and cargo. While the military and the Treasury Department of the Government are paying enormous claims in the rebel States, it seems to me Congress should take care of the claims of loyal citizens of the loyal States. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of G. B. Smith, and many other citizens of Maine, praying that soldiers who obtained pensions in consequence of injuries received in the war of 1812, may be allowed back pay from the date of their discharge to the date of their pension certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Sarah L. Spring and Harriet Spring, praying for the half pay to which William Barker was entitled under the resolve of Congress of the 21st of October, 1780, granting half pay to the surviving officers of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a law equalizing the bounties of soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the petition of Frank H. Evans, a pensioner who has lost his right arm, praying for an increase of pension to enlisted men who have lost an arm or leg in the service, from eight to fifteen dollars per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of Bridget Stone, of Shrewsbury, in Massachusetts, the widow of a revolutionary soldier, representing that on applying for a pension she has been denied on the ground that there is a certain failure of evidence in her case, but the papers show that she clearly comes within the equity of the statute. The case is one of singular interest; the papers are full; and I ask respectfully the attention of the committee to it. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to present certain exhibits, papers, and statements connected with a bill which was referred at the last meeting to the Committee on Military Affairs—a bill for the reimbursement of the State of Missouri for certain moneys expended in paying for her militia troops. In connection with these papers is a very brief statement of the facts, of the origin of the claim, the amount, and the exhibits on which it is predicated. I ask that the statement may be printed; the exhibits it is not necessary to publish. It will facilitate very much the action of the committee and of members of the Senate. It is very brief.

The motion to print was agreed to; and the papers were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

PAY TO NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. GRIMES. I present a memorial signed by Vice Admiral David G. Farragut and about eleven hundred other commissioned officers of the United States Navy—all, I believe, or nearly all now in the country—who represent that their pay was established free from tax at a period when the currency was gold and silver; that even at that time it was not more than sufficient to meet their necessary expenses, and left them without the prospect of providing for old age or misfortune; that since that period the cost of the necessaries of life has more than doubled in many instances; that this increase of cost has been provided for in civil employments by a corresponding increase of salary, while the memorialists, compelled by the discipline of the Navy to preserve the appearance of officers at whatever cost, have been forced in many instances to incur debts or to suffer family privations which they have endeavored to conceal from the public during the rebellion, with the hope that after its suppression either the cost of the necessaries of life would be reduced to the former amount, or that Congress, in a sense of justice and humanity, would make such an addition to their pay as would enable them to maintain that appearance before their fellow-citizens and the representatives of foreign countries which the universal sentiment requires of our officers. They therefore pray that Congress will increase their compensation. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 35) making appropriation for refurnishing and repairing the President's House; and

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a concurrent resolution proposing an adjournment of Congress from Wednesday, December 20, 1865, until Tuesday, January 9, 1866.

A bill (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia."

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print one thousand copies of the report of the Quartermaster General for the use of his department, reported it back without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That one thousand copies of the report of the Quartermaster General be printed for the use of the quartermaster's department.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print two hundred and fifty additional copies of the annual reports of the superintendents of the Insane Asylum and of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf and Dumb, for the use of those officers, reported it back without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That two hundred and fifty additional copies of the annual reports of the superintendents of the Insane Asylum and of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf and Dumb be printed for the use of those officers respectively.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution to pay to the widow of Hon. Jacob Collamer the amount of compensation due him at the time of his death, reported it back without amendment, and, by unanimous consent, it was read the second time, considered as in Committee of the Whole, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be and he is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Mary N. Collamer, widow of Hon. Jacob Collamer, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Vermont, the amount of compensation due the deceased at the time of his death.

DESTITUTE INDIANS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred Senate joint resolution No. 6, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report it back, with a recommendation that it pass with amendments; and have also desired me to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to put the resolution on its passage at the present time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence and clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes. The resolution authorizes the President of the United States to cause to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for immediate subsistence and clothing of destitute Indians and Indian tribes, and for agricultural implements and seeds, a sum not exceeding $1,000,000 of the unexpended balance in the Treasury of appropriations heretofore made to enable the President of the United States to carry into effect the act of March 3, 1819, and any other acts now in force "for the suppression of the slave trade," and the accounts of such expenditure are to be laid before Congress during its present session.

The first amendment of the committee was in line eleven, after the word "tribes," to insert the words "within the southern superintendency."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fourteen, to strike out "one million," and insert "five hundred thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the joint resolution the following proviso:

And provided also, That all articles to be furnished to said destitute Indians and Indian tribes shall be delivered to them on or before the 1st day of July next.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will state to the Senate in a word the object of this resolution. As chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I have received a communication from the Secretary of the Interior urgently recommending the immediate action of Congress on this subject. Accompanying his letter of recommendation is also a letter of recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and with that is also a letter from the superintendent of the southern superintendency. From these letters I will read two or three extracts to the Senate. Mr. Sell, the superintendent, writes as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 8, 1865.

Sir: I desire to present for your consideration the destitution of the Indians in the southern superintendency, and the imperative necessity for providing immediate means for supplying the loyal, as well as those who have been disloyal, with the necessaries of life sufficient to prevent starvation and suffering.

Your department is fully advised as to the destitution of the Indians referred to, both as to clothing and subsistence, and unless means are provided to meet pressing necessities great suffering must be the result.

The utter helplessness of said Indians is consequent upon a state of war, during which they have been robbed of all available means to help themselves. They are now returning to a desolate country with assurances that the Government will aid them until they can provide the means for helping themselves.

There are of loyal refugee Indians that have been and are being fed, 19,070, which require for subsistence during the approaching winter, the fourth quarter 1865, and first quarter 1866, not far from fifteen cents per head, being less than one half Army rations, amounting to.....$520,611
For clothing for 20,570 loyal refugee Indians, at $14 each, which includes 1,509 Indians who have the means of subsistence, but unable to obtain clothing..... 287,980

Total.....$808,591

For the disloyal portion—6,000 Cherokees, 4,000

Creeks, 700 Seminoles, 1,000 Reserve Indians, in all 11,700, at ten cents per head for rations— $212,940
Will amount to 163,880
Clothing at $14 each. 336,740

Total. $376,740

Hon. D. N. COOLEY,

Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The whole estimates are $1,185,000. Mr. President, we have here the urgent recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the appropriation of the sum of $1,000,000 for this purpose; we have the urgent recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, not precisely specifying any particular amount, but urging the necessity of our immediate action on the subject. The committee in taking up the subject, without fixing upon the precise amount that would or might be necessary, took into consideration the fact that we are now in the beginning of a long session, and at the beginning of winter, and determined to recommend the appropriation of the use of $500,000 only at the present time, hoping that by the proper administration of that sum, these Indians may be saved from starvation, and if it should become necessary, before the close of this long session we can make another appropriation.

I ought to say a word in relation to the fund out of which it is proposed to appropriate this sum. There is $1,200,000 appropriated, and now under the control of the Interior Department, for the purpose specified in the resolution, the suppression of the slave trade, and the Secretary of the Interior was of opinion, and after hearing him the committee were of opinion, that it would be better for us to appropriate $500,000 of that sum for the support of these destitute Indians, as it might prove less embarrassing to the Treasury than a direct appropriation of an additional sum of $500,000.

Mr. President, I have stated, in short, the case. I have no doubt that it is meritorious and ought to receive the immediate action of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. FOOT. The joint committee appointed to consider and report by what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express the deep sensibility of the nation to the event of the decease of their late President, Abraham Lincoln, report the following resolutions; and as I presume they will give rise neither to debate nor objection, I ask for their present consideration:

Whereas the melancholy event of the violent and tragic death of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, having occurred during the recess of Congress, and the two Houses sharing in the general grief and desiring to manifest their sensibility upon the occasion of the public bereavement: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the two Houses of Congress will assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Monday, the 12th day of February next, that being his anniversary birthday, at the hour of twelve meridian, and that, in the presence of the two Houses there assembled, an address upon the life and character of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, be pronounced by Hon. Edwin M. Stanton; and that the President of the Senate pro tempore and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to invite the President of the United States, the heads of the several Departments, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the representatives of foreign Governments near this Government, and such officers of the Army and Navy as have received the thanks of Congress who may then be at the seat of Government, to be present on the occasion.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to Mrs. Lincoln, and to assure her of the profound sympathy of the two Houses of Congress for her deep personal affliction, and of their sincere condolence for the late national bereavement.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to nem. con.

GENERAL GRANT'S REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution: which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That ten thousand extra copies of the report of Lieutenant General Grant be printed for the use of the Senate.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That three thousand copies of the Navy Register of the United States for the year 1865 be printed for the use of the Senate.

TRANSFERS OF NATIONALITY OF VESSELS.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into and report upon the manner in which American vessels, transferred during the rebellion to British owners, are now being refurnished with American registers, and, if the same be not in accordance with law, what legislation, if any, is necessary to prevent such transactions.

APPOINTMENT OF PENSION AGENTS.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire as to the expediency of providing by law for the appointment of pension agents by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate; to report by bill or otherwise.

ADDRESSES ON MR. COLLAMER'S DEATH.

Mr. FOOT submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be published, in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, six thousand copies of the addresses made by the members of the Senate and members of the House of Representatives upon the occasion of the announcement of the death of Hon. Jacob Collamer.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 33) in relation to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOOLITTLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 34) in relation to the qualification of jurors and to writs of error in certain cases; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This bill is substantially a substitute for a bill which I offered on a former occasion, with an additional provision. That bill had reference to the qualifications of jurors in criminal cases in the courts of the United States, providing for obtaining jurors in those cases of great publicity where it is now almost impossible under the rulings of the courts to obtain a jury. The old law of the jury called men because they knew all about the transaction, but latterly such men have been entirely excluded, and therefore the most intelligent persons are often excluded from sitting on a jury. But this bill contains an additional provision giving a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of a trial for treason. I desire that this bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I call the attention of my honorable friend, the chairman of that committee, to the bill and to the statement I make, that it is intended rather as a substitute for the bill heretofore introduced by me and referred to that committee.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 35) to grant one million acres of public lands for the benefit of public schools in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 36) quieting doubts in relation to the validity of certain locations of lands in the State of Missouri, made by virtue of certificates issued under the act of Congress of February 17, 1815; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 37) making a grant of lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction and extension of the Iron Mountain railroad from Pilot Knob, in the State of Missouri, to Helena, in Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 38) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri, and at the city of East St. Louis, State of Illinois; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. MORGAN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NYE, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 40) to adjust the boundary lines between California, Nevada, Oregon, and Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 41) explanatory of certain joint resolutions therein named, giving bounties to persons enlisting in the regular or volunteer service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 43) to prescribe the mode of settling the accounts of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REORGANIZATION OF THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of instituting boards of examination, to be composed of distinguished officers of the regular and volunteer forces, with the view of retiring any officers of the regular Army who have not rendered meritorious service during the late war, or shall be found in any way incompetent or inefficient in the discharge of their duties, and of filling the vacancies so created by careful selection from officers of the regular Army, the Veteran Reserve Corps, and the volunteer forces, most distinguished for services in the field or elsewhere during the war, whose grade shall be determined without regard to present rank or arm of service, but with sole regard to qualifications and meritorious services.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply state that this is merely a resolution of reference to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was understood during the war that at its close the Army would be reorganized, and that distinguished volunteer officers would have a fair opportunity to go into the regular Army. We have been through the greatest school of this century; we have a great number of capital officers both in the regular Army and in the volunteers, and it seems to me the nation ought to avail itself of this trained talent. We have certainly many officers in the regular Army that have not been heard of during the war; and as things now stand, many of the most distinguished generals who have commanded divisions and corps must go back to their lineal rank in the Army, and be under the command of men who outrank them who have rendered no service during the war, or none to speak of. Again, the volunteer officers, no matter how much they may have done for the country—and there are thousands of most accomplished officers who have served during the war and made historic names—must go into the regular Army, if they enter it, as second lieutenants, at the foot of the list, behind men many of whom have not heard a gun fired during the war. I do not commit myself to any positive action, but I think the subject ought to be looked into carefully, and therefore I offer this resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HENDRICKS. While the Senator is upon this subject, I wish to make an inquiry of him. Some days since the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution requesting the President to take no action prejudicial to the Veteran Reserve corps until the pleasure of Congress in regard to that corps should be made known. That resolution was referred to the Military Committee of this body. I wish to ask the Senator whether it is probable that committee will make a report before the recess. I do not know whether it is possible that the Administration will take any action after the House of Representatives has expressed so decidedly its desire on the subject; but still as that resolution is a mere request, I think it ought not to remain very long in committee; I cannot see a necessity for that.

While I am up, I beg leave to say that I am sure the country feels great interest in the fortunes of that corps as the only portion of the volunteer service that is likely to find its way as a body into the regular Army. It is impossible now to say, as Congress will have to consider that question, what number of that corps can be retained. That will depend, no doubt, upon the decision of Congress in respect to the size of the regular Army, but I am anxious to see the House resolution passed before the recess. A few days since I received a letter from a very gallant officer in the State of Indiana, who is a member of that corps, in which he says:

"I am selected by the officers from Indiana who are represented in the Veteran Reserve corps, to ask your assistance in our behalf in Congress. It is our desire to be retained in the Army, and think we are entitled to some consideration and help from the powers that be, as we are the wounded and maimed officers of the volunteer army, who from the circumstances of war have been rendered many of us unfit for the active duties of life.

"The fate of our cause will soon be presented to you members of Congress to determine whether you will retain or turn us out upon the world, objects of charity."

This letter thus far, I think, expresses the feeling of a large body of that corps, if not the entire official force, and I appreciate the sentiment of these gallant men that they prefer a support from the Government for the discharge of a duty rather than to depend upon a pension.

Mr. WILSON. In reply to the Senator from Indiana, I will say that the committee have had that subject under consideration, and have sent to the War Department for information in regard to the number of officers, their rank, and condition, the number of men, and such other matters as are necessary to guide intelligent action, and we shall probably have the information in a very short time. I will say further that there are many meritorious officers in the Veteran Reserve corps, and I have no doubt the feeling of the country and of Congress is kindly toward them, but there are thousands of officers that have served in the field during the war and been wounded who must not be overlooked, and the question is one requiring a great deal of care and examination.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask that the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the papers in the case of Francis A. Gibbons and F. X. Kelly, may be discharged from their further consideration, and that the parties may be allowed to withdraw their papers. The parties desire to withdraw the papers from the consideration of the Senate. They are now in the hands of the Committee on Claims. On a motion which I made some days ago the papers were referred to that committee. I think there was some mistake about it. They now want to withdraw their papers.

The motion was agreed to. The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the papers, and leave was granted to the parties to withdraw them.

On motion of Mr. WILLEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers of the heirs of Major Andrew Russell, of the revolutionary war, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in the cases of Jean Hudri's heirs, Ana de Roblas y Robaldo, and Thomas Laurent, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in the case of Ephraim Hunt be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. CLARK, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in the case of the Ameskeag Manufacturing Company, praying compensation for three regimental cook wagons furnished by order of Major General Fremont, commanding the Western department, and the petition and other papers of Frank Pugsley, praying compensation for services rendered the United States Government, as a soldier, from October 17, 1861, to October 24, 1862, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. RAMSEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Joshua D. Todd, late of the United States Navy, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the President pro tempore be authorized to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CRESWELL to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Commerce, and Mr. WILSON to fill that upon the Committee on Public Lands.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. No. 86) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PRESIDENT'S HOUSE.

The bill (H. R. No. 35) making appropriation for refurnishing and repairing the President's House, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask that the bill be taken up and acted on now; it is very easily understood, and there is an urgent necessity for making the appropriation, in order that the work of repair and refurnishing may go on. The President's House is in a very bad condition, and it should be attended to at once. I make the suggestion after consulting with several members of the Committee on Finance.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $30,000, or so much of that sum as may be necessary, for refurnishing and repairing the President's House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, information in relation to persons in the employment of the Government under the War Department who have not taken the oath prescribed by law, and to persons appointed to offices not authorized by law; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the resolution from the House of Representatives in regard to an adjournment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no objection to its being taken up, but I shall interpose an objection to its second reading to-day.

Mr. WILSON. There is no object in taking it up if it cannot be read a second time to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it had better be taken up and read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That will not advance it at all.

Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As there is an occasion for an executive session, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the calling of committees for reports, to go upon the Calendar, and not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

W. J. MORRIS.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee of Claims, presented an adverse report upon the petition of W. J. Morris, of Benton, Illinois, praying for remuneration for losses and services while acting as a scout and spy during the late war.

The petition and accompanying papers were laid upon the table.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the petitioner have leave to withdraw the petition and accompanying papers, on filing copies of them.

The motion was agreed to.

The call of committees having been concluded,

The SPEAKER announced as the next business in order, the calling of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Iowa, and proceeding in inverted order.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. SMITH. I rise to a privileged question, and present the credentials of James M. Johnson, claiming to have been elected as a member of Congress from the third district of the State of Arkansas. I ask that they be referred to the select committee on reconstruction. In connection with these papers I introduce a resolution, on which I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The credentials will be referred to the select committee on reconstruction. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SMITH] submits, also, as a question of privilege, a resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That James M. Johnson, a member-elect to the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the third district of the State of Arkansas, be admitted to the privileges of the floor of the House during the pendency of his claim as a member thereof.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I object to that. The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that this is not a question of privilege.

Mr. SMITH. I offered it in conjunction with the credentials.

The SPEAKER. That, however, did not make it a question of privilege. Persons claiming seats here cannot have the privileges of the floor granted to them as a question of privilege. It is a question of privilege to present credentials.

Mr. SMITH. Then I ask unanimous consent to introduce the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent cannot be asked during the morning hour on Monday.

ASSUMPTION OF REBEL DEBT, ETC.

The SPEAKER proceeded with the call of States for resolutions, beginning with the State of Iowa; when

Mr. PRICE submitted the following resolution:

Whereas policy, propriety, and duty, all require that the Representatives of a free and loyal constituency should, at the opening of the first Congress after the suppression of the rebellion, see that, in the reorganization and readmission of the States recently in arms against the Government, no possible safeguard be left unprovided which will prevent in the future a recurrence of the troubles of the past; and whereas an attempt to assume the rebel debt in some shape, and also to repudiate the national debt in some manner, are among the possibilities of the future; and whereas the most effectual way of preventing either or all of these would be so to amend the Constitution of the United States as to preclude for all time to come any chance of either of these results: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That, in the opinion of this House, the Constitution of the United States should be so amended, and that no State which has recently been in rebellion against the General Government ought to be entitled to a representation in Congress until such State, by its Legislature or other properly constituted authority, has adopted said amendment.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the resolution of the House, this resolution will be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction without debate.

INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, introduced a bill to provide for the consolidation of the Indian tribes, and to establish civil governments in the Indian territories; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill to amend section sixteen of an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency," &c.; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Resolved, That the select committee on freedmen be instructed to inquire into the expediency of some immediate legislation securing to the freedmen and the colored citizens of the States recently in rebellion the political and civil rights of other citizens of the United States; and have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LOAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVEY OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BLOW submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of a survey of the Mississippi river and its tributaries, with a view to the future systematic improvement of the same as navigable streams; also to ascertain whether the United States Coast Survey cannot expeditiously and economically make such survey; and report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

NAVY-YARD ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BLOW also submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

CLASS RULE.

Mr. BAKER introduced the following preamble and resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas class rule and aristocratic principles of government have burdened well nigh all Europe with enormous public debts and standing armies, which press as a grievous incubus on the people, absorbing their substance, impeding their culture, and impairing their happiness; and whereas the class rule and aristocratic element of slaveholding which found a place in our Republic has proved itself, in like manner, hurtful to our people, by degrading labor and prohibiting popular education in a large section of the country; by striving to rend our Union in fragments; by causing the blood of hundreds of thousands of patriots to flow, and by compelling the people to impose on themselves a debt of European magnitude in defense of liberty, nationality, and civilization on this continent: Therefore,

Resolved, (as the sense of this House,) That once for all we should have done with class rule and aristocracy as a privileged power before the law in this nation; no matter where or in what form they may appear; and that, in restoring the normal relations of the States lately in rebellion, it is the high and sacred duty of the Representatives of the people to proceed upon the true, as distinguished from the false, democratic principle, and to realize and secure the largest attainable liberty to the whole people of the Republic, irrespective of class or race.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether this resolution includes the codfish aristocracy? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate, and is not in order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a question of order. I believe this resolution refers to the reconstruction of the States lately in rebellion, and therefore must go to the joint committee of fifteen.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The resolution adopted by the House is that all papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called confederate States, or either of them, shall be referred to that committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a point of order. It is, that if this resolution includes the codfish aristocracy, it should not go to the joint committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Laughter.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. J. HUMPHREY. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The motion to lay on the table was not understood here. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw the motion to lay on the table. My colleague [Mr. BAKER] is a new member, and I hope no advantage will be taken of that, and that he may be allowed a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is too late to withdraw the motion.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was not agreed to.

The motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BAKER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 103, not voting 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aneona, Bergen, Boyer, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hoggan, Johnson, Kerr, Marshall, McCullough, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, Radford, Samuel J. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Samuel Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Ketcham, Le Blond, McIndoe, Morris, Myers, Newell, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Sloan, Smith, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—41.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BEAMAN. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

No quorum voting on a division.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. BEAMAN and Mr. BAKER.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if the vote by which the main question was ordered is reconsidered, it will then be in order to move to refer the resolution to the joint committee of fifteen.

The SPEAKER. It will be.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I hope it will be reconsidered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. If it is not reconsidered, will it be in order to adopt the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It will be.

The tellers took their places, and the House having divided, the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 24.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and being put, the House refused to second the demand.

Mr. CONKLING moved that the resolution be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction, and on that motion demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and being put, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS ARMS.

Mr. INGERSOLL submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Militia are hereby instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by law, for the equitable distribution of the surplus arms of the United States among the several States which have never been in rebellion.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

TRIAL OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. MOULTON submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That if it is not incompatible with the public interest, the President be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to communicate to this House why Jefferson Davis, who is said to be confined at Fortress Monroe, has not been tried for his treason against the Government, and, if any, what obstacles are in the way of a speedy trial of this great criminal.

The SPEAKER. This resolution being a call for executive information, requires unanimous consent for its consideration on this day.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The resolution goes over under the rule.

JUDGMENT LIENS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the law of Congress in relation to judgment liens as that judgment in the circuit courts of the United States shall not become liens upon real estate until such judgments are filed for record in the county wherein such real estate may lie.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

REPEAL OF THE FISHING BOUNTIES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to repeal the fishing bounties; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT CAIRO.

Mr. KUYKENDALL submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of building a custom-house and post office building in the city of Cairo, in the State of Illinois, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution declaring the railroad bridge and ferry over the Mississippi river to be a post route and national highway of commerce; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

RICHARD A. SMITH.

Mr. FARNSWORTH, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to make certain credits to Richard A. Smith; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

SUFFRAGE IN THE STATES.

Mr. THORNTON submitted the following preamble and resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Whereas, at the first movement toward independence, the Congress of the United States instructed the several States to institute governments of their own, and left each State to decide for itself the conditions for the enjoyment of the elective franchise; and whereas during the period of the Confederacy there continued to exist a very great diversity in the qualifications of electors in the several States; and whereas the Constitution of the United States recognizes these diversities when it enjoins that in the choice of members of the House of Representatives, the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for the electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature; and whereas, after the formation of the Constitution, it remained, as before, the uniform usage of each State to enlarge the body of its electors according to its own judgment; and whereas so fixed was the reservation in the habits of the people, and so unquestioned has been the interpretation of the Constitution, that during the civil war the late President never harbored the purpose, certainly never avowed the purpose of disregarding it; Therefore,

Resolved, That any extension of the elective franchise to persons in the States, either by act of the President or Congress, would be an assumption of power which nothing in the Constitution of the United States would warrant, and that to avoid every danger of conflict, the settlement of this question should be referred to the several States.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of order. It is that under the resolution of the House that resolution belongs to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The resolution which directed the appointment of the joint committee reads, "All papers that may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called confederate States," &c. This resolution refers to the elective franchise, and not to representation.

Mr. CONKLING. If the previous question is not seconded, will a motion be in order to refer the resolution to the joint committee on reconstruction?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is not seconded, the resolution would go over under the rule, if any member shall rise to debate it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. DRIGGS. I desire to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to rise to debate the resolution pending a call for the previous question.

The question was on the motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, to lay the preamble and resolution on the table.

Mr. ANCONA called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 111, nays 46, not voting 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. So the preamble and resolution were laid on the table.

MEXICO.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House any correspondence or other information in possession of the executive department in regard to the steps taken at any time by the so-called Emperor of Mexico, or by any European Power, to obtain from the Government of the United States a recognition of the so-called empire of Mexico; also, what action, if any, has been taken, or what correspondence, if any, has been had in the premises by the Government of the United States.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the resolution; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting accounts of Indian agents; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statements of disbursements of the contingent fund in the various offices of that Department during the year ending June 30, 1865, as required by act of Congress of August 26, 1842; which was referred to the Committee on the Expenditures of the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

LAWS OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a copy of the laws of Dakota Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. KERR introduced a bill to amend the fifth section of the act entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," approved July 2, 1862, so as to extend the time within which the provisions of said act shall be accepted and such colleges established; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. KERR also introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STILLWELL submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were referred, under the rule, to the joint committee on reconstruction:

Whereas the war for the preservation of the Union and the Constitution is now over, the absurd doctrine of secession, and its counterpart insurrection and rebellion, have been put down by the strong arm of the Government, peace and union being the object, and that having been obtained: Therefore,

Resolved, That the people who have been in rebellion against the Government, and who have submitted to the laws of the United States, adopted a republican form of government, repealed the ordinance of secession, passed the constitutional amendment forever prohibiting slavery, repudiated the rebel war debt, and passed laws protecting the freedmen in his liberty, the representatives of that people elected to Congress having received their certificates of election from their respective Governors should be received as members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress, when they shall take the oath prescribed by Congress, known as the test oath, without any unnecessary delay.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. DUMONT submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Expenditures of the Interior Department be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I must object to that. That committee has never had a clerk, according to my recollection.

Mr. STEVENS. It seems to me that that committee has no need for a clerk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution giving rise to debate, it goes over under the rules.

CLERKS OF FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. DUMONT submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that no person shall be appointed a clerk of a district or circuit court of the United States who is of kin, or related by blood or marriage, to the judge thereof.

Mr. DUMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENFORCEMENT OF TEST OATH.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the act of July 2, 1862, prescribing an oath to be taken and subscribed by persons elected or appointed to office under the Government of the United States, before entering upon the duties of such office, is of binding force and effect on all departments of the public service, and should in no instance be dispensed with.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were, on a division—ayes 60, noes 30; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. HILL and Brooks. The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes ninety-eight, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded. The main question was ordered, which was on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. FINCK. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 32, nays 125, not voting 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Brooks, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hogan, Edwin H. Hubbell, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, Marshall, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Nott, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Shunklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, and Trimble—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson,

James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brownell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Combs, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, DeForest, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Jewkendall, Lakin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Mercut, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Smith, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, William F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—125.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Dolos R. Ashley, Blaine, Cobb, Culver, Donnelly, Eckley, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Chester D. Hubbard, James M. Humphrey, Jones, Le Blond, Morris, Moulton, Pomeroy, Radford, Sloan, Taylor, Francis Thomas, Voorhees, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—25.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the resolution, on which the main question had been ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote on agreeing to the resolution; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message, so that the different subjects embraced in that document may be distributed among the various committees.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to yield to me for a moment, that I may submit a resolution from the special committee on the reimbursement of the loyal States.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the gentleman.

STATE CONTRIBUTIONS OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I am instructed by the committee on the reimbursement of loyal States, to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish, for the information of the House, a statement of the number of men furnished by each State since April 1, 1861, on the different calls for men for the military service, who were required for periods of three months or more, stating the number furnished by each State for each period; also the number of men accreditd to each State upon the basis of three years' service as a standard of computation.

The SPEAKER. This being a resolution of inquiry addressed to one of the Executive Departments, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration at the present time.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

JUDICIAL EXPENSES.

Mr. DAWSON introduced a supplement to the act of August 16, 1856, regulating the fees, costs, and other judicial expenses of the Government in the States, Territories, and District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENT BILL.

Mr. ELIOT submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting to the House a general bill providing appropriations for necessary improvements and repairs of harbors upon the sea and lake coast and in navigable rivers.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a concurrent resolution relative to the death of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, and a joint resolution (S. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence, clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; and also that that body had passed House bill No. 35, making appropriation for refurbishing and repairing the President's House.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That one thousand copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the accompanying documents, and one hundred and fifty of the estimates of appropriations be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES.

Mr. BIDWELL introduced a bill to quiet the title to certain lands ceded by the United States to the States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the House take up the message from the Senate relative to the death of the late President.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES. December 18, 1865.

Whereas the melancholy event of the violent and tragic death of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, having occurred during the recess of Congress, and the two Houses sharing in the general grief, and desiring to manifest their sensibility upon the occasion of the public bereavement: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress will assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 12th day of February next, that being his anniversary birthday, at the hour of twelve meridian; and that in the presence of the two Houses then assembled, an address upon the life and character of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, be pronounced by Hon. Edwin M. Stanton; and that the President of the Senate pro tempore, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to invite the President of the United States, the heads of the several Departments, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the representatives of foreign Governments near this Government, and such officers of the Army and Navy as have received the thanks of Congress who may then be at the seat of Government, to be present on the occasion.

And be it further resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to transmit a copy of those resolutions to Mrs. Lincoln, and to assure her of the profound sympathy of the two Houses of Congress for her deep personal affliction, and of their sincere condolence for the late national bereavement.

Attest: JOHN W. FORNEY, Secretary.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved that the resolutions be concurred in.

The resolutions were unanimously concurred in.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I am directed by the joint committee on the subject, to report back the following resolution, and to move that it be laid upon the table:

Resolved, That the committee be appointed under the resolution pending for the appointment of a joint committee of one from each State to take into consideration "what token of respect and affection it may be proper for the Congress of the United States to express concerning the event of the decease of the late President, Abraham Lincoln," and directed to take into consideration the expediency of providing for the completion of the Washington monument, with a view to the dedication of said monument to the commemoration of the virtues and patriotism of those great and good men, George Washington and Abraham Lincoln.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY LINCOLN.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 14, for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States, with an amendment.

The bill provides that there shall be appropriated — dollars for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, the widow of the late President of the United States, in full for his salary, and in consideration of the circumstances under which he came to his death.

The amendment of the committee was as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That the Secretary of the Treasury pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, or in the event of her death before payment, then to the legal representatives of the said Abraham Lincoln, the sum of $25,000: Provided always, That any sum of money which shall have been paid to the present representatives of the said Abraham Lincoln since his death on account of his salary as President, shall be deducted from the said sum of $25,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I only desire to state that the amendment follows precisely the precedent in the case of Mrs. Harrison. I will ask the previous question if no gentleman desires the floor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The facts of this case are so well known to every member of the House, that it is unnecessary for me to argue the motion which I shall present to the House. The people of these United States elected Mr. Lincoln for four years. An assassin—the last of the great rebellion—prevented him from receiving those four years' salary. The members of this House are as well prepared to vote upon my amendment now as they would be after I had made a speech, for I am wholly inadequate to do justice to the subject. I therefore move that there be substituted for the sum of $25,000 the amount which the people of the United States voted to the late President—$100,000.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I now renew the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof the amendment to the amendment was rejected, and the amendment to the bill was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS obtained the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to make a report.

Mr. STEVENS. I will if there is no objection.

No objection was made.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill extending the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I move to suspend the rules. I will say it is not my intention to put this bill upon its passage now, but, in pursuance of the instructions of the committee to me, to ask that it be set down for consideration at some future day.

The bill, which was read for information, provides that from all laws and parts of laws prescribing the qualification of electors for any office in the District of Columbia, the word "white" shall be stricken out; also, that from and after the passage of the bill no person shall be disqualified from voting at any election held in the District of Columbia on account of color; also, that all acts of Congress, and all laws of the State of Maryland in force in the District of Columbia, and all ordinances of the cities of Washington and Georgetown inconsistent with the provisions of the bill, shall be repealed and annulled.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa what time he proposes to set down for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I propose, in pursuance of the instructions of the committee to me, to ask the House to set this bill down as a special order for Wednesday, the 10th of January.

Mr. JOHNSON. Gentlemen on this side of the House would like to know what opportunity will be afforded for debate at that time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. So far as I am concerned I will allow liberal opportunity for debate on both sides of the House. I have no disposition to stifle discussion.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that I shall ask the privilege of debate for myself, but I have no doubt gentlemen on this side of the House will ask a reasonable time for discussion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. So far as I am concerned I shall not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the committee reporting the bill?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to suspend the rules.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, thereupon reported the bill, and it was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the bill be made the special order for Wednesday, the 10th of January, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the bill be printed.

No objection being made, the bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. I must now insist on my motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the

Mr. STEVENS. There has been one thing omitted. I move to amend the resolutions by adding the following:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message and accompanying documents as relates to the subject of reconstruction be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The question was taken, and the amendment adopted.

The resolutions as amended were then agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEVENS. A candid examination of the power and proper principles of reconstruction can be offensive to no one, and may possibly be profitable by exciting inquiry. One of the suggestions of the message which we are now considering has special reference to this. Perhaps it is the principle most interesting to the people at this time. The President assumes, what no one doubts, that the late rebel States have lost their constitutional relations to the Union, and are incapable of representation in Congress, except by permission of the Government. It matters but little, with this admission, whether you call them States out of the Union, and now conquered territories, or assert that because the Constitution forbids them to do what they did do, that they are therefore only dead as to all national and political action, and will remain so until the Government shall breathe into them the breath of life anew and permit them to occupy their former position. In other words, that they are not out of the Union, but are only dead carcasses lying within the Union. In either case, it is very plain that it requires the action of Congress to enable them to form a State government and send representatives to Congress. Nobody, I believe, pretends that with their old constitutions and frames of government they can be permitted to claim their old rights under the Constitution. They have torn their constitutional States into atoms, and built on their foundations fabrics of a totally different character. Dead men cannot raise themselves. Dead States cannot restore their own existence "as it was." Whose especial duty is it to do it? In whom does the Constitution place the power? Not in the judicial branch of Government, for it only adjudicates and does not prescribe laws. Not in the Executive, for he only executes and cannot make laws. Not in the Commander-in-Chief of the armies, for he can only hold them under military rule until the sovereign legislative power of the conqueror shall give them law.

There is fortunately no difficulty in solving the question. There are two provisions in the Constitution, under one of which the case must fall. The fourth article says:

"New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union."

In my judgment this is the controlling provision in this case. Unless the law of nations is a dead letter, the late war between two acknowledged belligerents severed their original compacts, and broke all the ties that bound them together. The future condition of the conquered power depends on the will of the conqueror. They must come in as new States or remain as conquered provinces. Congress—the Senate and House of Representatives, with the concurrence of the President—is the only power that can act in the matter. But suppose, as some dreaming theorists imagine, that these States have never been out of the Union, but have only destroyed their State governments so as to be incapable of political action; then the fourth section of the fourth article applies, which says:

"The United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government."

Who is the United States? Not the judiciary; not the President; but the sovereign power of the people, exercised through their representatives in Congress, with the concurrence of the Executive. It means the political Government—the concurrent action of both branches of Congress and the Executive. The separate action of each amounts to nothing, either in admitting new States or guarantying republican governments to lapsed or outlawed States. Whence springs the preposterous idea that either the President, or the Senate, or the House of Representatives, acting separately, can determine the right of States to send members or Senators to the Congress of the Union?

To prove that they are and for four years have been out of the Union for all legal purposes, and being now conquered, subject to the absolute disposal of Congress, I will suggest a few ideas and adduce a few authorities. If the so-called "confederate States of America" were an independent belligerent, and were so acknowledged by the United States and by Europe, or had assumed and maintained an attitude which entitled them to be considered and treated as a belligerent, then, during such time, they were precisely in the condition of a foreign nation with whom we were at war; nor need their independence as a nation be acknowledged by us to produce that effect. In the able opinion delivered by that accomplished and loyal jurist, Mr. Justice Grier, in the prize cases, all the law on these points is collected and clearly stated. (2 Black, page 66.) Speaking of civil wars, and following Vattel, he says:

"When the party in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory; have declared their independence; have cast off their allegiance; have organized armies; have commenced hostilities against their former sovereign, the world acknowledges them as belligerents, and the contest a war."

And

"The parties belligerent in a public war are independent nations. But it is not necessary, to constitute war, that both parties should be acknowledged as independent nations or foreign States. A war may exist where one of the belligerents claims sovereign rights as against the other."

The idea that the States could not and did not make war because the Constitution forbids it, and that this must be treated as a war of individuals, is a very injurious and groundless fallacy.

Individuals cannot make war. They may commit murder, but that is no war. Communities, societies, States, make war. Phillimore says, (volume three, page 68:)

"War between private individuals who are members of a society cannot exist. The use of force in such a case is trespass and not war."

But why appeal to reason to prove that the seceded States made war as States, when the conclusive opinion of the Supreme Court is at hand? In the prize cases already cited, the Supreme Court say:

"Hence, in organizing this rebellion, they have acted as States claiming to be sovereign over all persons and property within their respective limits, and asserting a right to absolve their citizens from their allegiance to the Federal Government. Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign State. Their right to do so is now being decided by wagers of battle. The ports and territory of each of these States are held in hostility to the General Government. It is no loose, unorganized insurrection, having no defined boundary or possession. It has a boundary marked by lines of bayonets, and which can be crossed only by force. South of this line is enemies' territory, because it is claimed and held in possession by an organized hostile and belligerent power."

Again, the court say, what I have been astonished that any one should doubt:

"The proclamation of blockade is itself official and conclusive evidence to the court that a state of war existed."

Now, what was the legal result of such war?

"The conventions, the treaties, made with a nation are broken or annulled by a war arising between the contracting parties."—Vattel, 372; Halleck, 371, section 23.

If gentlemen suppose that this doctrine applies only to national and not to civil wars, I beg leave to refer them to Vattel, page 423. He says:

"A civil war breaks the bands of society and government, or at least suspends their force and effect; it produces in the nation two independent parties, who consider each other as enemies, and acknowledge no common judge. These two parties must therefore be considered as thenceforward constituting, at least for a time, two separate bodies; two distinct societies. They stand, therefore, in precisely the same predicament as two nations who engage in a contest, and being unable to come to an agreement, have recourse to arms."

"And when a nation becomes divided into two parties absolutely independent, and no longer acknowledge a common superior, the State is dissolved, and the war between the two parties stands on the same ground, in every respect, as a public war between two different nations."

But must the belligerent be acknowledged as an independent nation, as some contend? That is answered in the case referred to in 2 Black, as follows:

"It is not the less a civil war, with belligerent parties in hostile array, because it may be called an 'insurrection' by one side, and the insurgents be considered as rebels or traitors. It is not necessary that the independence of the revolted province or State be acknowledged in order to constitute it a party belligerent in a war, according to the law of nations."

This doctrine, so clearly established by publicists, and so distinctly stated by Mr. Justice Grier, has been frequently reiterated since by the Supreme Court of the United States. In Mr. Alexander's case (2 Wallace, 419) the present able Chief Justice, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"We must be governed by the principle of public law so often announced from this bench as applicable to civil and international wars, that all the people of each State or district in insurrection against the United States must be regarded as enemies until by the action of the Legislature and Executive, or otherwise, that relation is thoroughly and permanently changed."

After such clear and repeated decisions it is something worse than ridiculous to hear men of respectable standing attempting to nullify the law of nations, and declare the Supreme Court of the United States in error, because, as the Constitution forbids it, the States could not go out of the Union in fact. A respectable gentleman was lately reciting this argument, when he suddenly stopped and said, "Did you hear of that atrocious murder committed in our town? A rebel deliberately murdered a Government official." The person addressed said, "I think you are mistaken." "How so? I saw it myself." "You are wrong, no murder was or could be committed, for the law forbids it."

The theory that the rebel States, for four years a separate power and without representation in Congress, were all the time here in the Union, is a good deal less ingenious and respectable than the metaphysics of Berkeley, which proved that neither the world nor any human being was in existence. If this theory were simply ridiculous it could be forgiven; but its effect is deeply injurious to the stability of the nation. I cannot doubt that the late confederate States are out of the Union to all intents and purposes for which the conqueror may choose so to consider them.

But on the ground of estoppel, the United States have the clear right to elect to adjudge them out of the Union. They are estopped both by matter of record and matter in pais. One of the first resolutions passed by seceded South Carolina in January, 1861, is as follows:

"Resolved, unanimously, That the separation of South Carolina from the Federal Union is final, and she has no further interest in the Constitution of the United States; and that the only appropriate negotiations between her and the Federal Government are as to their mutual relations as foreign States."

Similar resolutions appear upon all their State and confederate government records. The speeches of their members of congress, their generals and executive officers, and the answers of their government to our shameful sueings for peace, went upon the defiant ground that no terms would be offered or received except upon the prior acknowledgment of the entire and permanent independence of the confederate States. After this, to deny that we have a right to treat them as a conquered belligerent, severed from the Union in fact, is not argument but mockery. Whether it be our interest to do so is the only question hereafter and more deliberately to be considered.

But suppose these powerful but now subdued belligerents, instead of being out of the Union, are merely destroyed, and are now lying about, a dead corpse, or with animation so suspended as to be incapable of action, and wholly unable to heal themselves by any unaided movements of their own. Then they may fall under the provision of the Constitution which says "the United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government." Under that power can the judiciary, or the President, or the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, or the Senate or House of Representatives, acting separately, restore them to life and readmit them into the Union? I insist that if each acted separately, though the action of each was identical with all the others, it would amount to nothing. Nothing but the joint action of the two Houses of Congress and the concurrence of the President could do it. If the Senate admitted their Senators, and the House their members, it would have no effect on the future action of Congress. The Fortieth Congress might reject both. Such is the ragged record of Congress for the last four years.

In Luther vs. Borden (7 Howard, 1-42) the Supreme Court say:

"Under this article of the Constitution [the one above cited] it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State. For as the United States guaranty to each State a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the State before it can determine whether it is republican or not."

Congress alone can do it. But Congress does not mean the Senate, or the House of Representatives, and President, all acting severally. Their joint action constitutes Congress. Hence a law of Congress must be passed before any new State can be admitted; or any dead ones revived. Until then no member can be lawfully admitted into either House. Hence it appears with how little knowledge of constitutional law each branch is urged to admit members separately from these destroyed States. The provision that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members," has not the most distant bearing on this question. Congress must create States and declare when they are entitled to be represented. Then each House must judge whether the members presenting themselves from a recognized State possess the requisite qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship; and whether the election and returns are according to law. The Houses, separately, can judge of nothing else. It seems amazing that any man of legal education could give it any larger meaning.

It is obvious from all this that the first duty of Congress is to pass a law declaring the condition of these outside or defunct States, and providing proper civil governments for them. Since the conquest they have been governed by martial law. Military rule is necessarily despotic, and ought not to exist longer than is absolutely necessary. As there are no symptoms that the people of these provinces will be prepared to participate in constitutional government for some years, I know of no arrangement so proper for them as territorial governments. There they can learn the principles of freedom and eat the fruit of foul rebellion. Under such governments, while electing members to the Territorial Legislatures, they will necessarily mingle with those to whom Congress shall extend the right of suffrage. In Territories Congress fixes the qualifications of electors; and I know of no better place nor better occasion for the conquered rebels and the conqueror to practice justice to all men, and accustom themselves to make and to obey equal laws.

As these fallen rebels cannot at their option reënter the heaven which they have disturbed, the garden of Eden which they have deserted, and flaming swords are set at the gates to secure their exclusion, it becomes important to the welfare of the nation to inquire when the doors shall be reopened for their admission.

According to my judgment they ought never to be recognized as capable of acting in the Union, or of being counted as valid States, until the Constitution shall have been so amended as to make it what its framers intended; and so as to secure perpetual ascendancy to the party of the Union; and so as to render our republican Government firm and stable forever. The first of those amendments is to change the basis of representation among the States from Federal numbers to actual voters. Now all the colored freemen in the slave States, and three fifths of the slaves, are represented, though none of them have votes. The States have nineteen representatives of colored slaves. If the slaves are now free then they can add, for the other two fifths, thirteen more, making the slave representation thirty-two. I suppose the free blacks in those States will give at least five more, making the representation of non-voting people of color about thirty-seven. The whole number of representatives now from the slave States is seventy. Add the other two fifths and it will be eighty-three.

If the amendment prevails, and those States withhold the right of suffrage from persons of color, it will deduct about thirty-seven, leaving them but forty-six. With the basis unchanged, the eighty-three southern members, with the Democrats that will in the best times be elected from the North, will always give them a majority in Congress and in the Electoral College. They will at the very first election take possession of the White House and the halls of Congress. I need not depict the ruin that would follow. Assumption of the rebel debt or repudiation of the Federal debt would be sure to follow. The oppression of the freedmen; the reamendment of their State constitutions, and the reestablishment of slavery would be the inevitable result. That they would scorn and disregard their present constitutions, forced upon them in the midst of martial law, would be both natural and just. No one who has any regard for freedom of elections can look upon those governments, forced upon them in duress, with any favor. If they should grant the right of suffrage to persons of color, I think there would always be Union white men enough in the South, aided by the blacks, to divide the representation, and thus continue the Republican ascendancy. If they should refuse to thus alter their election laws it would reduce the representatives of the late slave States to about forty-five and render them powerless for evil.

It is plain that this amendment must be consummated before the defunct States are admitted to be capable of State action, or it never can be.

The proposed amendment to allow Congress to lay a duty on exports is precisely in the same situation. Its importance cannot well be overstated. It is very obvious that for many years the South will not pay much under our internal revenue laws. The only article on which we can raise any considerable amount is cotton. It will be grown largely at once. With ten cents a pound export duty it would be furnished cheaper to foreign markets than they could obtain it from any other part of the world. The late war has shown that. Two million bales exported, at five hundred pounds to the bale, would yield $100,000,000. This seems to be the chief revenue we shall ever derive from the South. Besides, it would be a protection to that amount to our domestic manufactures. Other proposed amendments—to make all laws uniform; to prohibit the assumption of the rebel debt—are of vital importance, and the only thing that can prevent the combined forces of copperheads and secessionists from legislating against the interests of the Union whenever they may obtain an accidental majority.

But this is not all that we ought to do before these inveterate rebels are invited to participate in our legislation. We have turned, or are about to turn, loose four million slaves without a hut to shelter them or a cent in their pockets. The infernal laws of slavery have prevented them from acquiring an education, understanding the commonest laws of contract, or of managing the ordinary business of life. This Congress is bound to provide for them until they can take care of themselves. If we do not furnish them with homesteads, and hedge them around with protective laws; if we leave them to the legislation of their late masters, we had better have left them in bondage. Their condition would be worse than that of our prisoners at Andersonville. If we fail in this great duty now, when we have the power, we shall deserve and receive the execration of history and of all future ages.

Two things are of vital importance.

1. So to establish a principle that none of the rebel States shall be counted in any of the amendments of the Constitution until they are duly admitted into the family of States by the law-making power of their conqueror. For more than six months the amendment of the Constitution abolishing slavery has been ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the States that acted on its passage by Congress, and which had Legislatures, or which were States capable of acting, or required to act, on the question.

I take no account of the aggregation of white-washed rebels, who without any legal authority have assembled in the capitals of the late rebel States and simulated legislative bodies. Nor do I regard with any respect the cunning by-play into which they deluded the Secretary of State by frequent telegraphic announcements that "South Carolina had adopted the amendment;" "Alabama has adopted the amendment, being the twenty-seventh State," &c. This was intended to delude the people, and accustom Congress to hear repeated the names of these extinct States as if they were alive; when, in truth, they have now no more existence than the revolted cities of Latium, two thirds of whose people were colonized and their property confiscated, and their right of citizenship withdrawn by conquering and avenging Rome.

2. It is equally important to the stability of this Republic that it should now be solemnly decided what power can revive, recreate, and reinstate these provinces into the family of States, and invest them with the rights of American citizens. It is time that Congress should assert its sovereignty, and assume something of the dignity of a Roman senate. It is fortunate that the President invites Congress to take this manly attitude. After stating with great frankness in his able message his theory, which, however, is found to be impracticable, and which I believe very few now consider tenable, he refers the whole matter to the judgment of Congress. If Congress should fail firmly and wisely to discharge that high duty it is not the fault of the President.

This Congress owes it to its own character to set the seal of reprobation upon a doctrine which is becoming too fashionable, and unless rebuked will be the recognized principle of our Government. Governor Perry and other provisional governors and orators proclaim that "this is the white man's Government." The whole copperhead party, pandering to the lowest prejudices of the ignorant, repeat the cuckoo cry, "This is the white man's Government." Demagogues of all parties, even some high in authority, gravely shout, "This is the white man's Government." What is implied by this? That one race of men are to have the exclusive right forever to rule this nation, and to exercise all acts of sovereignty, while all other races and nations and colors are to be their subjects, and have no voice in making the laws and choosing the rulers by whom they are to be governed. Wherein does this differ from slavery except in degree? Does not this contradict all the distinctive principles of the Declaration of Independence? When the great and good men promulgated that instrument, and pledged their lives and sacred honors to defend it, it was supposed to form an epoch in civil government. Before that time it was held that the right to rule was vested in families, dynasties, or races, not because of superior intelligence or virtue, but because of a divine right to enjoy exclusive privileges.

Our fathers repudiated the whole doctrine of the legal superiority of families or races, and proclaimed the equality of men before the law. Upon that they created a revolution and built the Republic. They were prevented by slavery from perfecting the superstructure whose foundation they had thus broadly laid. For the sake of the Union they consented to wait, but never relinquished the idea of its final completion. The time to which they looked forward with anxiety has come. It is our duty to complete their work. If this Republic is not now made to stand on their great principles, it has no honest foundation, and the Father of all men will still shake it to its center. If we have not yet been sufficiently scourged for our national sin to teach us to do justice to all God's creatures, without distinction of race or color, we must expect the still more heavy vengeance of an offended Father, still increasing his inflictions as he increased the severity of the plagues of Egypt until the tyrant consented to do justice. And when that tyrant repented of his reluctant consent, and attempted to re-enslave the people, as our southern tyrants are attempting to do now, he filled the Red sea with broken chariots and drowned horses, and strewed the shores with dead carcasses.

Mr. Chairman, I trust the Republican party will not be alarmed at what I am saying. I do not profess to speak their sentiments, nor must they be held responsible for them. I speak for myself, and take the responsibility, and will settle with my intelligent constituents.

This is not a "white man's Government," in the exclusive sense in which it is used. To say so is political blasphemy, for it violates the fundamental principles of our gospel of liberty. This is man's Government; the Government of all men alike; not that all men will have equal power and sway within it. Accidental circumstances, natural and acquired endowment and ability, will vary their fortunes. But equal rights to all the privileges of the Government is innate in every immortal being, no matter what the shape or color of the tabernacle which it inhabits.

If equal privileges were granted to all, I should not expect any but white men to be elected to office for long ages to come. The prejudice engendered by slavery would not soon permit merit to be preferred to color. But it would still be beneficial to the weaker races. In a country where political divisions will always exist, their power, joined with just white men, would greatly modify, if it did not entirely prevent, the injustice of majorities. Without the right of suffrage in the late slave States, (I do not speak of the free States,) I believe the slaves had far better been left in bondage. I see it stated that very distinguished advocates of the right of suffrage lately declared in this city that they do not expect to obtain it by congressional legislation, but only by administrative action, because, as one gallant gentleman said, the States had not been out of the Union. Then they will never get it. The President is far sounder than they. He sees that administrative action has nothing to do with it. If it ever is to come, it must be constitutional amendments or congressional action in the Territories, and in enabling acts.

How shameful that men of influence should mislead and miseducate the public mind! They proclaim, "This is the white man's Government," and the whole coil of copperheads echo the same sentiment, and upstart, jealous Republicans join the cry. Is it any wonder ignorant foreigners and illiterate natives should learn this doctrine, and be led to despise and maltreat a whole race of their fellow-men?

Sir, this doctrine of a white man's Government is as atrocious as the infamous sentiment that damned the late Chief Justice to everlasting fame; and, I fear, to everlasting fire.

Mr. FINCK moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. ROBERT JOHNSON, his Private Secretary, informed the House that he had this day approved and signed the following bills:

An act (H. R. No. 23) to prevent the spread of foreign diseases among the cattle of the United States; and

An act (H. R. No. 24) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the selection of jurors to serve in the several courts of the District of Columbia."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FINCK asked leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. LE BLOND, for the remainder of this week.

Leave was granted accordingly.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit; and we hereby pledge cooperative action to this end as speedily as practicable.

Mr. SMITH objected.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to suspend the rules in order to allow me to introduce the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes seventy-six.

Mr. SMITH called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ALLEY and SMITH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 3.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. ALLEY. I now demand the previous question upon agreeing to the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BROOKS. If the House adjourns now, when will this resolution again come up?

The SPEAKER. The rules having been suspended, the resolution introduced, and the main question ordered, the resolution would come up for consideration to-morrow morning, immediately after reading the Journal.

Mr. BROOKS. We may as well dispose of it now.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the resolution of Mr. ALLEY, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 144, nays 6, not voting 32; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to enable the loyal citizens of the United States residing in States whose constitutional governments were usurped or overthrown by the recent rebellion, after accepting certain conditions prescribed by the United States in Congress assembled, to form a constitution and State government for each of said States preparatory to resuming as States their constitutional relations to the national Government; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the joint committee on reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHLEY also presented a memorial from sundry citizens of the United States, in relation to reconstruction; which was referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

SUBSISTENCE OF DESTITUTE INDIANS.

On motion of Mr. McINDOE, Senate joint resolution No. 6, authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence, clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes, was taken from the table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REGISTRY OF FOREIGN-BUILT VESSELS.

Mr. SPALDING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the registering and enrolling of vessels built in foreign countries but wholly owned in the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SUFFRAGE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SPALDING, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill to regulate the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

NAVAL DEPOT AT CLEVELAND.

Mr. SPALDING, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill to provide for a naval depot at Cleveland or some other point on the southern shore of Lake Erie; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed five thousand copies of the Navy Register for the use of the members of this House.

SUPPRESSION OF POLYGAMY.

Mr. BROOMALL. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. WARD. I move to suspend the rules to allow me to introduce the following resolution:

Whereas certain inhabitants of the Territory of Utah, in violation of the laws of the United States, have been and still are sustaining the abominable system of polygamy, and the numbers who practice it, and the crime and demoralization consequent thereon, are largely on the increase; and whereas for reasons not understood, the law against polygamy has not been enforced; and, in the judgment of this House, this great and remaining barbarism of our age and country should be swept, like its twin system, slavery, from the Territories of the Republic; and means adequate to that end should be adopted: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire and ascertain what means, civil or military, may lawfully be resorted to to effectually eradicate this evil from the land, and what legislation is needed, if any, to effect that object, and what reasons exist why the laws against polygamy have not been executed; and also to ascertain whether the United States officials in said Territory are seeking to enforce the laws, and to inquire into their conduct generally, so far as relates to the discharge of their public duties in relation to this system; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 19, 1865.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. LANE, of Kansas, to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Pensions, and Mr. SAULSBURY to fill that upon the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGES.

Several messages were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. ROBERT JOHNSON, his Secretary. Many of them were of an executive nature.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the accounts of Indian agents, Harlan and Snow, of the southern superintendency, for the first quarter of 1865, as required by the act of June 25, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORRILL presented a memorial of the European and North American Railway Company, praying for aid in constructing a military railroad from Bangor, in the State of Maine, to the St. John river, in the Province of New Brunswick; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore submitted a communication from the Governor of the State of Indiana, transmitting a joint resolution of the General Assembly of that State adopting the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States on the subject of slavery; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. WILSON presented the memorial of Benjamin F. Butler, chairman of a committee of the corporators of a National Military and Naval Asylum for the relief of totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States, praying for a modification of the act of incorporation, and particularly the repeal of the sixth section, which provides that "no site for said asylum, or plan of buildings, shall be adopted or agreed upon until after $500,000 shall have been first subscribed or donated, and paid into the treasury of the corporation;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. COWAN presented a petition of soldiers of the late war, praying for an equalization of the bounties of those who first responded to their country's call with those who enlisted near the close of the war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented the memorial of Joseph C. G. Kennedy, Superintendent of the seventh and eighth Censuses, remonstrating against the erasure of his name and the suppression of the printed preface prepared by him for the volume on Manufactures of the eighth census, and the insertion of "certain inappropriate preliminary views" by James M. Edmunds, Commissioner of the General Land Office; which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. RIDDLE presented the memorial of Reynolds Driver, first assistant engineer United States Navy, in behalf of himself and other surviving officers of the United States iron-clad Patapsco, praying for indemnity for losses sustained by them in the sinking of that vessel in Charleston roads, South Carolina, on the 15th of January, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented the memorial of Robert B. Riell, lieutenant in the United States Navy, praying that he may be promoted to the rank and place of commander in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Maine, praying that soldiers who received pensions in consequence of injuries received in the war of 1812, may be allowed back pay from the date of their discharge to the date of their pension certificate, submitted an adverse report thereon, and asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject; which was agreed to.

NAVAL PENSIONS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 24) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 4, 1864," report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for its present consideration; it is simply to supply a defect in the pension law passed at the last session.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section five of the act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 4, 1864," by adding after the word "military" the words "or naval," so that the section shall, as amended, read, "that all persons now by law entitled to a less pension than hereafter specified, who shall have lost both feet in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to a pension of twenty dollars per month; and those who, under the same conditions, have lost both hands, or both eyes, shall be entitled to a pension of twenty-five dollars a month."

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed.

COMMANDERS REYNOLDS AND WOOLSEY.

Mr. GRIMES. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, of the United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list, report it back and recommend its passage. I ask that it be considered now.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the President to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey to the active list of the Navy.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was read the third time.

Mr. GRIMES. In order that the Senate may know exactly the reasons why this proposition has been made, I submit, and ask to have read, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on the subject.

The Secretary read the following communication:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, December 8, 1865.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith the form of a joint resolution for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, United States Navy, to the active list, prepared in conformity to precedent.

These officers, under the act "to promote the efficiency of the Navy," dated 28th February, 1855, were placed on the reserved list solely for physical disability. Since that period the cause has been removed, as attested by several medical surveys held in their cases, and both of them have performed promptly and efficiently their duties at sea during the late rebellion, as the reports of their commanding officers amply show.

The cases of these officers are exceptional ones, and there are no other claims to restoration from that list resting on similar or just grounds.

Very respectfully,

GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JAMES W. GRIMES,
Chairman Naval Committee, United States Senate.

The joint resolution was passed.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print three thousand copies of the Navy Register, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That three thousand copies of the Navy Register of the United States for the year 1865 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to be informed by the chairman of the Committee on Printing as to the necessity of printing three thousand copies of the Navy Register for the use of the Senate. Up to within the last three years there never was any Naval Register printed for the use of the Senate. I think I was here three years before any was ordered to be printed. We always received one copy from the Department, and I apprehend that that was about as large a number of copies as Senators had any use for, and about as many as they will have any use for in the future. I confess that I have no use for the number that are allotted to me. I have two or three years' stock on hand now, I think.

Mr. CLARK. Move to strike out three thousand and insert one thousand.

Mr. GRIMES. I will say, furthermore, that it is a rule of the Navy Department to send one copy of the Naval Register to every naval officer. During this year it is possible that the copies may not have reached each naval officer, but there are enough printed by the Department to supply all the copies that are needed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for each naval officer, and leave some surplus, without any action of the Senate. I move to amend the resolution by striking out three thousand and inserting five hundred.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am quite indifferent whether the Senate amend the resolution as proposed by the Senator from Iowa, or whether any extra numbers at all are printed. This document has been printed ever since the commencement of the war, and this is the last that will be issued containing the names of the officers who have served in the war.

Mr. GRIMES. The Naval Register that will be printed now will contain the names of the officers in service on the 1st day of January next, but will not contain the names of the volunteer officers and men who have been in the war, a large proportion of whom have gone out of the service.

Mr. ANTHONY. This will be the last record of the personnel of the Navy during the war. The Naval Register has been printed every year during the war. The Senate have always printed it, and the same reason why it was printed before (which I think was a good one) prevails now. The Department prints enough of the document to supply copies to the regular officers of the Navy, but does not print enough to supply the volunteer officers of the Navy with copies. They all like to have this Register. It is an honorable thing for a man who has served in the Navy to preserve and hand down to his children. The expense of printing it, the type being already set, will be very moderate. I think the cost of printing the Naval Register will be but five or six hundred dollars. These are the reasons which induced the committee to recommend the printing of it, the same as it has always been recommended, and as the Senate has always agreed to before. I am in favor of a larger number than five hundred certainly. If the Senator from Iowa proposes fifteen hundred I shall make no objection to that.

Mr. CLARK. Say one thousand.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say whatever the Senate choose.

Mr. GRIMES. I am willing to modify my amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. To what?

Mr. GRIMES. To one thousand.

Mr. ANTHONY. Say fifteen hundred. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa proposes fifteen hundred, and I agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa as modifying his amendment? The motion is to amend the resolution by striking out "three thousand" and inserting "five hundred."

Mr. ANTHONY. Fifteen hundred was the amendment. The Senator from Iowa modified his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the Senator from Iowa whether he so modified his amendment, but did not get any response, and supposed, therefore, that it was not modified. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa as modifying his amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I spoke to the Senator from Iowa, and he agreed to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the number proposed by the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Three thousand.

Mr. JOHNSON. And it is now proposed to make it fifteen hundred?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to amend is to strike out "three thousand" and insert "five hundred."

Mr. ANTHONY. Fifteen hundred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand the motion.

Mr. GRIMES. I agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa to so modify his motion?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; at the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to amend the resolution by striking out "three thousand" and inserting "fifteen hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers of Selina Barclay be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers of Henry Roy de La Reintre be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S.

No. 46) for the relief of Henry M. Whittlesey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 47) to amend an act supplementary to the act approved July 1, 1864, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property in the public domain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILLEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 48) amending the act of Congress entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermasters' stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 49) more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. DOOLITTLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 50) in relation to the Freedmen's Bureau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 51) to incorporate the Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 52) to provide for the defense of the northeastern frontier; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BOND OF PRINTING SUPERINTENDENT.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 7) for increasing the bond of the Superintendent of Public Printing; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is a joint resolution, to which, I presume, there will be no objection, and it is important to the convenience of the transaction of public business that it should be passed as soon as possible; and if the Senate is willing, I should like to have it put on its passage now. A word of explanation, I presume, will satisfy them that it ought to pass. If any Senator objects, I shall not press it now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. As the amount of money which can be advanced to the Superintendent of Public Printing under existing law is not sufficient to enable him to meet the current expenditures of his office, the resolution provides that he shall be required to furnish a new bond in the penal sum of $80,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. The law now requires that the amount of money furnished the Superintendent of Public Printing shall be only two thirds of his bond. His bond is $40,000, and that enables him to have only $20,000 at a time, which is found to be insufficient for carrying on the public business conveniently, and he has been compelled to borrow money from time to time upon his own responsibility, which of course he has had no trouble in doing as it was for the public service. This resolution doubles his bond, which will allow $52,000, two thirds the amount of the bond, to be placed at his disposal, and the security is the same as before.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I offer the following concurrent resolution, and if there be no objection, I ask to have it considered now:

Resolved, by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the joint committee of the two Houses appointed under a joint resolution at the last session of Congress to investigate Indian affairs, have liberty to make their report at any time during the present session of Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin, whether the committee has not that leave without passing this resolution authorizing it to report. I suppose their report will be received at any time they think proper to make it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It may be that that is the rule, that we have leave to report at any time during the session, but I have some doubts about it. The committee suppose that their power as a committee has ceased. It was a joint committee appointed under a resolution of the last Congress, and I suppose their power ceased at the beginning of this Congress. That is the reason why I offer this resolution, allowing them this session in which to make their report. The committee have been scattered all over the country, and have been unable to get together to make any report.

The resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolutions reported by the joint committee appointed to consider and report by what token of respect it may be proper for Congress to express the deep sensibility of the nation on the occasion of the death of the late President, Abraham Lincoln.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 35) making appropriation for refurnishing and repairing the President's House; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

SECURITY OF FREEDMEN.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow, or on some early day thereafter, ask leave to introduce a bill to enlarge the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau so as to secure freedom to all persons within the United States, and protect every individual in the full enjoyment of the rights of person and property and furnish him with means for their vindication. In giving this notice I desire to say that it is given in view of the adoption of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery. Whatever diversity of opinion there may be as to the actual adoption of that amendment at this time in consequence of the abnormal condition of the Legislatures in some of the States which have ratified it, there can be no question that it will soon receive the ratification of a sufficient number of States, and probably before there will be time to take action on this bill, to place its validity beyond question. I have never doubted that, on the adoption of that amendment, it would be competent for Congress to protect every person in the United States in all the rights of person and property belonging to a free citizen; and to secure these rights is the object of the bill which I propose to introduce. I think it important that action should be taken on this subject at an early day for the purpose of quieting apprehensions in the minds of many friends of freedom lest by local legislation or a prevailing public sentiment in some of the States persons of the African race should continue to be oppressed and in fact deprived of their freedom, and for the purpose also of showing to those among whom slavery has heretofore existed that unless by local legislation they provide for the real freedom of their former slaves the Federal Government will, by virtue of its own authority, see that they are fully protected.

The bill which I desire to introduce is intended to accomplish these objects. I hope there may be no necessity for enforcing such a bill in any part of the Union; but I consider that under the constitutional amendment Congress is bound to see that freedom is in fact secured to every person throughout the land; he must be fully protected in all his rights of person and of property; and any legislation or any public sentiment which deprives any human being in the land of those great rights of liberty will be in defiance of the Constitution, and if the States and local authorities, by legislation or otherwise, deny these rights, it is incumbent on us to see that they are secured.

NUMBERS OF THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report for the information of the Senate what number of men are now in service in the regular Army, what number of officers are holding commissions, where said officers are stationed, and what duty they are performing; said report to include the cavalry, artillery, and infantry regiments, and to set forth the number of men and officers in each company, battery, and regiment.

NUMBER OF VOLUNTEER GENERALS.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to state for the information of the Senate how many major generals and brigadier generals of volunteers are now in service, where they are stationed, and what duties they are performing.

DISLOYAL CITIZENS IN MEXICO.

Mr. CONNESS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to the Senate any information in possession of the State Department or any other Department of the Government, in regard to any plans to induce into the so-called Mexican empire all dissatisfied citizens of the United States with a view to organize them to create disturbances in the United States, and especially information in regard to the plans of Dr. William M. Gwin and M. F. Maury, lately citizens of the United States, and in regard to the action taken by the Government to prevent the success of such schemes.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to take up for consideration the resolution of the House of Representatives proposing an adjournment over the holidays.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday the 20th instant, they adjourn to meet on Tuesday the 9th of January next.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose that to meet the views of the Senate some modification of that resolution will be necessary, and it is important that it should be settled one way or the other this morning. I move to amend it by substituting the 21st instant as the day of adjournment instead of the 20th, and the 3d of January as the day of reassembling instead of the 9th.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to the first change proposed, but I have to the last, and I move to amend the amendment by substituting the 5th of January for the 3d, as the day of reassembling. The adjournment over is for such a length of time that many of us from the West may desire to go home, and if we remain over New Year's day it will be impossible to get back here again on the 3d of January. I do not want to start back again on New Year's day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be agreed to. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cragin, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Stockton, Van Winkle, and Willey—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Connors, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Grimes, Nesmith, Norton, Sumner, Wright, and Yates—8.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. ANTHONY was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was concurred in, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on the 21st instant, they adjourn to meet on the 3d of January next.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the members on the part of the Senate of the joint committee to consider the condition of the States lately in rebellion be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now offer the following resolution, and I ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered, all papers presented to the Senate relating to the condition and title to representation of the so-called confederate States, shall be referred to the joint committee upon that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the present consideration of the resolution objected to?

Mr. COWAN. It is.

Mr. THE PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie over under the rules.

CONDITION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. COWAN. I understand that the reply of the President of the United States to a resolution of this body passed on the 12th instant, is now on the table. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the message referred to; and it will be read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:
To the Senate of the United States:

In reply to the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 12th instant, I have the honor to state that the rebellion waged by a portion of the people against the properly-constituted authorities of the Government of the United States has been suppressed; that the United States are in possession of every State in which the insurrection existed; and that, as far as could be done, the courts of the United States have been restored, post offices reestablished, and steps taken to put into effective operation the revenue laws of the country.

As the result of the measures instituted by the Executive, with the view of inducing a resumption of the functions of the States comprehended in the inquiry of the Senate, the people in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Tennessee, have reorganized their respective State governments, and "are yielding obedience to the laws and Government of the United States" with more willingness and greater promptitude than under the circumstances could reasonably have been anticipated. The proposed amendment to the Constitution, providing for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of the country, has been ratified by each one of those States, with the exception of Mississippi, from which no official information has yet been received; and in nearly all of them measures have been adopted or are now pending, to confer upon freedmen rights and privileges which are essential to their comfort, protection, and security. In Florida and Texas the people are making commendable progress in restoring their State governments, and no doubt is entertained that they will at an early period be in a condition to resume all of their practical relations to the Federal Government.

In "that portion of the Union lately in rebellion" the aspect of affairs is more promising than, in view of all the circumstances, could well have been expected. The people throughout the entire South evince a laudable desire to renew their allegiance to the Government, and to repair the devastations of war by a prompt and cheerful return to peaceful pursuits. An abiding faith is entertained that their actions will conform to their professions, and that, in acknowledging the supremacy of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, their loyalty will be unreservedly given to the Government, whose leniency they cannot fail to appreciate, and whose fostering care will soon restore them to a condition of prosperity.

It is true that in some of the States the demoralizing effects of war are to be seen in occasional disorders; but these are local in character, not frequent in occurrence, and are rapidly disappearing as the authority of civil law is extended and sustained. Perplexing questions were naturally to be expected from the great and sudden change in the relations between the two races; but systems are gradually developing themselves under which the freedman will receive the protection to which he is justly entitled, and by means of his labor make himself a useful and independent member of the community in which he has his home. From all the information in my possession, and from that which I have recently derived from the most reliable authority, I am induced to cherish the belief that sectional animosity is surely and rapidly merging itself into a spirit of nationality, and that representation, connected with a properly-adjusted system of taxation, will result in a harmonious restoration of the relations of the States to the national Union.

The report of Carl Schurz is herewith transmitted, as requested by the Senate. No reports from Hon. John Covode have been received by the President. The attention of the Senate is invited to the accompanying report of Lieutenant General Grant, who recently made a tour of inspection through several of the States whose inhabitants participated in the rebellion.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1865.

Mr. COWAN. I ask that the report of General Grant be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that report will be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1865.

STR: In reply to your note of the 16th instant, requesting a report from me giving such information as I may be possessed of, coming within the scope of the inquiries made by the Senate of the United States in their resolution of the 12th instant, I have the honor to submit the following:

With your approval, and also that of the honorable Secretary of War, I left Washington city on the 27th of last month for the purpose of making a tour of inspection through some of the southern States, or States lately in rebellion, and to see what changes were necessary to be made in the disposition of the military forces of the country; how these forces could be reduced and expenses curtailed, &c., and to learn, as far as possible, the feelings and intentions of the citizens of those States toward the General Government.

The State of Virginia being so accessible to Washington city, and information from this quarter therefore being readily obtained, I hastened through the State without conversing or meeting with any of its citizens. In Raleigh, North Carolina, I spent one day; in Charleston, South Carolina, two days; Savannah and Augusta, Georgia, each one day. Both in traveling and while stopping, I saw much and conversed freely with the citizens of those States, as well as with officers of the Army who have been stationed among them. The following are the conclusions come to by me:

I am satisfied that the mass of thinking men of the South accept the present situation of affairs in good faith. The questions which have heretofore divided the sentiments of the people of the two sections—slavery and States rights, or the right of a State to secede from the Union—they regard as having been settled forever by the highest tribunal, arms, that man can resort to. I was pleased to learn from the leading men whom I met, that they not only accepted the decision arrived at as final, but that now, when the smoke of battle has cleared away and time has been given for reflection, this decision has been a fortunate one for the whole country, they receiving like benefits from it with those who opposed them in the field and in council.

Four years of war, during which law was executed only at the point of the bayonet throughout the States in rebellion, have left the people possibly in a condition not to yield that ready obedience to civil authority the American people have generally been in the habit of yielding. This would render the presence of small garrisons throughout those States necessary until such time as labor returns to its proper channels, and civil authority is fully established. I did not meet any one, either those holding places under the Government or citizens of the southern States, who think it practicable to withdraw the military from the South at present. The white and the black mutually require the protection of the General Government.

There is such universal acquiescence in the authority of the General Government throughout the portions of country visited by me, that the mere presence of a military force, without regard to numbers, is sufficient to maintain order. The good of the country and economy require that the force kept in the interior where there are many freedmen (elsewhere in the southern States than at forts upon the seacoast no force is necessary) should all be white troops. The reasons for this are obvious without mentioning many of them. The presence of black troops, lately slaves, demoralizes labor both by their advice and by furnishing in their camps a resort for the freedmen for long distances around. White troops generally excite no opposition, and therefore a small number of them can maintain order in a given district. Colored troops must be kept in bodies sufficient to defend themselves. It is not the thinking men who would use violence toward any class of troops sent among them by the General Government, but the ignorant in some cases might, and the late slave seems to be imbued with the idea that the property of his late masters should by right belong to him, or at least should have no protection from the colored soldier. There is danger of collisions being brought on by such causes.

My observations lead me to the conclusion that the citizens of the southern States are anxious to return to self-government within the Union as soon as possible; that while reconstructing they want and require protection from the Government; that they are in earnest in wishing to do what they think is required by the Government, not humiliating to them as citizens, and that if such a course was pointed out they would pursue it in good faith. It is to be regretted that there cannot be a greater commingling at this time between the citizens of the two sections, and particularly of those intrusted with the law-making power.

I did not give the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau that attention I would have done if more time had been at my disposal. Conversations on the subject, however, with officers connected with the bureau lead me to think that in some of the States its affairs have not been conducted with good judgment or economy, and that the belief, widely spread among the freedmen of the southern States, that the lands of their former owners will, at least in part, be divided among them, has come from the agents of this bureau. This belief is seriously interfering with the willingness of the freedmen to make contracts for the coming year. In some form the Freedmen's Bureau is an absolute necessity until civil law is established and enforced, securing to the freedmen their rights and full protection. At present, however, it is independent of the military establishment of the country, and seems to be operated by the different agents of the bureau according to their individual notions. Everywhere General Howard, the able head of the bureau, made friends by the just and fair instructions and advice he gave; but the complaint in South Carolina was that when he left, things went on as before. Many, perhaps the majority, of the agents of the Freedmen's Bureau advise the freedmen that by their own industry they must expect to live. To this end they endeavor to secure employment for them, and to see that both contracting parties comply with their engagements. In some instances, I am sorry to say, the freedman's mind does not seem to be disabused of the idea that a freedman has the right to live without care or provision for the future. The effect of the belief in division of lands is idleness and accumulation in camps, towns, and cities. In such cases I think it will be found that vice and disease will tend to the extermination, or great reduction of the colored race. It cannot be expected that the opinions held by men at the South for years can be changed in a day, and therefore the freedmen require for a few years not only laws to protect them, but the fostering care of those who will give them good counsel and in whom they can rely.

The Freedmen's Bureau, being separated from the military establishment of the country, requires all the expense of a separate organization. One does not necessarily know what the other is doing, or what orders they are acting under. It seems to me this could be corrected by regarding every officer on duty with troops in the southern States as agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, and then have all orders from the head of the bureau sent through department commanders. This would create a responsibility that would secure uniformity of action throughout all the South; would insure the orders and instructions from the head of the bureau being carried out, and would relieve from duty and pay a large number of employees of the Government.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

His Excellency A. JOHNSON,
President of the United States.

Mr. WADE. I desire to offer a resolution.
Mr. SUMNER. Before the proposition of the Senator is put, I have a question to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has the floor, and offers a resolution.

Mr. WADE. It is a resolution to which there will be no objection, merely calling for information from a Department.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that; but I wish to make one remark in reference to the business before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio give way to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to know whether the report of Major General Carl Schurz is annexed to the message of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is so stated in the message.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not understand that it was so stated. If it is there, I think it had better be read.

Several SENATORS. It is very long.

Mr. SUMNER. At any rate we can begin it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report of General Carl Schurz is called for. It will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to the reading of the report; I should like to hear it; but the reading will take a good while, and it can all be printed in a day or two.

Mr. SUMNER. Let the reading be begun.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit to the Senator from Massachusetts that the printing of it, perhaps, will answer every purpose. It is a very long report, I see; at least it seems to be so. I have, personally, not the slightest objection to its being read.

Mr. SUMNER. It is a very important document. The Senate will remember that when the report was made on the condition of things in Kansas, every word of it was read at the desk. Now the question before the country is infinitely more important than that of Kansas. We have a message from the President which is like the whitewashing message of Franklin Pierce with regard to the enormities in Kansas. That is its parallel. I think that the Senate had better at least listen to the opening of Major General Schurz's report.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection, if the Senate think they have time to listen to it; but I did not expect to hear any assault, direct or indirect, upon the President at this time.

Mr. SUMNER. No assault at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is entitled to the floor unless he yields it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have seen nothing in the message which would warrant a reflection that any improper purpose had actuated the President in sending it here. He does not mean, as I suppose, to whitewash anybody who has offended. His opinions upon the state of the country are fairly stated, clearly stated, with an absence of all passion, and I think commend themselves to the attention of the Senate. But I arose, Mr. President, for no such purpose as that of involving ourselves in a debate in relation to the Executive. I only suggested that perhaps it would be as well that this report should be printed, instead of being read now, as the Senate has a good deal of business before it; but I withdraw the objection if the Senate desire to hear it.

The Secretary proceeded to read the introductory paragraphs of General Schurz's report, in which he states through what portion of the South he traveled, the points at which he stopped, his facilities for obtaining information, and the order in which the results of his observation would be detailed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would much prefer to read this document in print; and I move to dispense with its further reading, and that it be printed with the message and the other papers. I cannot very well hear the reading while conversation is going on in the Chamber.

Mr. SUMNER. I shall not object to that if the Senator from Ohio thinks that it is proper that we should, on this important occasion, dispense with the reading of this paper. I think that the Senate could not listen to anything of more importance than this accurate, authentic, most authoritative report with regard to the actual condition of things in those States. Here is an eminent citizen, lately a major general in the Army of the United States, sent on a special mission by the President to visit those States, and to report upon their condition. He has made his visit, not a hasty one like that of General Grant, for instance, or of some other officers or citizens, but a visit occupying time, extending through different States, and he has recorded the results in an elaborate document. Now, sir, if the question were trivial, if it were a transitory question, I should think the Senator from Ohio was right; but if he persists in his motion I shall not oppose it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt whatever that the report of General Schurz is a very able, elaborate, and excellent document; I have no doubt we shall all be advised and informed when we read it; but I would much prefer to read that document when I can understand what is in it, than to hear it read now amid the confusion and hum of the Senate Chamber. I will say also that it is unusual to read documents in this way. No document is usually read except a message of the President of the United States. Even the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, containing his views upon the finances of the country, is not read in open Senate; and none of the elaborate reports of the heads of Departments are read, and therefore to read this document is unusual. If the practice were to prevail among us, our time would be occupied in putting upon the Clerk the labor of reading these documents when we do not hear or listen to them. I hope it will be printed so that we may have an opportunity to read and understand it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, one remark, a short time ago, fell from the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, that it seems to me he ought, in justice to himself, to qualify at least, if not altogether retract. Speaking of the message just received from the President of the United States, he said that it was like the whitewashing message of Franklin Pierce to cover up the transactions in Kansas, and that the affairs in these southern States sought to be covered up or whitewashed by the message of the President—I so inferred from what he said—were much worse, infinitely worse, than the affairs in Kansas. Now, Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts must have let fall that expression without due consideration. I cannot believe that that Senator, occupying the high position he does, representing the great State he does, wishes to be understood as stating, here in the Senate and to the country, that this message just received from the President of the United States is a whitewashing message, seeking to cover up or conceal transactions and a state of things infinitely worse than the transactions of Kansas—that terrible affair which was the beginning of all our woes, a civil war in itself, and the prelude to all that great war from which we have just emerged. I believe, sir—certainly I think I ought to believe—that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts will at least modify, or qualify, if he does not wholly retract, this strong expression.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I have nothing to modify, nothing to qualify, nothing to retract. In former days there was one Kansas that suffered under illegal power; there are now eleven Kansases suffering only as one; therefore as eleven is more than one, so is the enormity of the present time more than the enormity in the day of Franklin Pierce.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts says that the enormities in the States lately in rebellion are greater at this time than those formerly taking place in Kansas. Now, sir, I beg leave to remind him, that that was not precisely the question raised, if any question was raised by the Senator from Wisconsin. There is no question here at this moment as to the misconduct of anybody in Kansas or in the southern States; but a charge has been directly made here by the Senator that the President has sent in a whitewashing report with regard to these enormities, in reply to our resolution of inquiry. I cannot pass that in silence so far as I am concerned. What is a "whitewashing report" or a "whitewashing message?" What is the charge brought? A "whitewashing report" is a report intended to cover up and conceal by falsehood and misstatement certain facts. That is a "whitewashing report." Now, sir, I wish the charge to be distinctly understood; I have no comment to make upon it; but when such a charge as that is brought in the Senate, I think it calls for some notice, and I take the liberty, with all my respect for the Senator from Massachusetts, to deny that there is anything in that report of a whitewashing character. I believe it to be true in its statements. Of course I cannot know the facts personally; but I confide in the statements of the President; and I cannot, as a friend of the President, allow such a charge to go unnoticed. I claim no particular friendship for the President; I sustain his position, not because it is the President's position, but because I believe it to be right; and believing him to be right, I think it my duty to enter at least a protest against a charge of that kind.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, whether the President's policy be right or not, the charge of the Senator from Massachusetts does not go to that question at all. If the Senator from Massachusetts differs from him, believes him to be wrong, that is one thing: it is perfectly right that he should do so. But he goes further; he charges upon the President falsehood, in substance, by saying that his message is a "whitewashing" message; he charges him with a want of truth, with a want of patriotism. What else can be inferred? It was that which pained me; I was not pained because the honorable Senator differed from the President; I knew he differed from the President on this question; but I was pained and I confess very much disappointed to hear that Senator, as I should be to hear any other Senator on the floor of the Senate, question the truth, the integrity, or the patriotism of the President, however much he might disagree with me in opinion. I had supposed that every member of this body and of Congress had full faith in the good intentions of the President, in his integrity, his love of the truth; and if he has any quality, if he has displayed during this struggle any character, it is that uncompromising love of the truth and love of the country and love of the Union which has made him sacrifice and endure all that he did during the contest in the South, and which has always characterized him as a man; and it was not that the honorable Senator questioned the propriety of the policy recommended by him, but because he made use of that remark that it was a whitewashing message, seeking to cover up some infamy behind, that I was pained, as I confess I was exceedingly; and I was none the less pained, after having called the honorable Senator's attention to it, that he should rise in the Senate and say that he had nothing to modify, nothing to qualify, nothing to retract.

Sir, I have said all, perhaps more than I ought to have said; and I shall not go into any discussion of these matters.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I am sorry that I have given pain to honorable friends. I certainly did not intend it. They suggest that a question has been raised as to the policy of the President. I have raised no such question, and have now expressed no opinion in regard to it. The Senator from Wisconsin dwells on that point and reminds the Senate that the policy of the President was not in question. I know it was not in question, and therefore I expressed no opinion upon it, for when I speak in this body, I try to speak directly to the question in hand. There was then no question directly before the Senate on the policy of the President. Had there been I should have been ready to meet it. At the proper time I shall meet it fully, plainly, unequivocally, I trust, as becomes a member of this body. The only question then was on the character of the document that had been read; and that I characterized, compendiously, as a whitewashing document, and then my honorable friends rise one after the other, and like two lexicographers proceed to give a definition of the word "whitewash." I do not accept their definition. I intended no such thing as either the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Wisconsin attempted to impute. I have no reflection to make on the patriotism or the truth of the President of the United States. Never in public or in private have I made any such reflection, and I do not begin now. When I spoke, I spoke of the document that had been read at the desk. I characterized it as I thought I ought to characterize it. My memory goes back in this Chamber further than that of many that I see about me. I remember that other scene when a whitewashing message did come into this body from Franklin Pierce. We all at that time called it whitewashing, and I am not aware that any one even on the other side undertook to play the part that my honorable friends from Wisconsin and from Connecticut now undertake to perform. The message was so called because we all felt that it was a whitewashing document; and I undertook at once to-day, on listening to the document that had been read at the desk, to characterize it in the very way in which the patriotic party of 1856 characterized the message of Franklin Pierce.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the disclaimer of the Senator from Massachusetts, so far as it is a disclaimer. If he says he meant by the word "whitewashing" nothing disrespectful, nothing offensive, nothing disagreeable, I am perfectly willing to take his definition of the word. I understood it differently, and I understood it, the Senator will allow me to remind him, differently, because he coupled it with another document, the Kansas message of President Pierce, which he now says was odious to the patriotic members of the Senate and to the people. That, he says, was a whitewashing document. He told us that this was like it. He said that this was like the Kansas whitewashing message, and was of similar character, and afterward said he had nothing to retract or modify.

If the Senator had said in reply to the Senator from Wisconsin that he did not intend his remarks in an offensive tone, but considered "whitewashing" a polite and proper word to apply to the message of the President, I, knowing that his knowledge of lexicography is greater than mine, should have accepted his explanation of his language.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I rise merely to express the hope that this unprofitable debate may cease. It is not my province to criticize or remark upon the expressions of opinion which Senators may think proper to employ, but it really does seem to me that the controversy which has arisen here between Senators is not calculated to promote the public interests. At a time like this, when great questions are before us, when we have not had the document about which the controversy has arisen printed, when it is not understood by us, surely it is very hasty to enter upon a debate of this kind, and I trust either that we may take the vote on the question of printing, or adjourn; and I make the motion that the Senate do now adjourn. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want a short executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I withdraw the motion if there is any other business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a mere matter of definitions, and it ought to be referred to some maker of dictionaries.

Mr. SUMNER. Let this be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to dispense with the further reading of this report, and to print the message of the President with the accompanying documents.

Mr. CONNESS. Permit me to suggest that if I understand the resolution offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] and not yet read, it calls for the report also of the Superintendent or head of the Freedmen's Bureau, General Howard; and if the Senate should call for that document, I think it would be well to let the present documents lie over, so that all may be printed together. ["No, no."] Very well.

Mr. SUMNER. I had intended to make a call for the other.

The motion of Mr. SHERMAN was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU REPORT.

Mr. WADE. I now offer my resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public service, the report of General Howard of his observations of the condition of the seceded States and the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau therein.

The Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the resolution.

Mr. WILSON. The report of General Howard was made some time ago, and has, as I learn, been in the hands of the President, and is now in the hands of the Secretary of War. The Committee on Military Affairs the other day sent to the Secretary of War for the report, and the answer received was that he would send it in at the earliest possible day, and that he intended to make some suggestions upon General Howard's report which would be sent in with it. A day or two ago I learned that the Secretary of War had left the city and gone to see his mother in Ohio. I suppose he will be back in a few days, and the report may possibly come in by the last day of our session this week.

Mr. WADE. It seems to me that there can be no harm whatever in calling for the report. If the Secretary of War wishes to make any comments upon it, he can do so after it is printed and in our hands. It has been hitherto withheld, and I know it is the wish of General Howard, as it is my earnest desire, that the document shall be communicated to the Senate. I hope it will be done.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I presume every one wishes to see the report. I happen to know incidentally that it was the intention to send in the report, and I presume it will be here very soon; but there can be no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. There can be no harm in making the call.

Mr. WADE. If the proper authorities intend to send it to us, this resolution will not prevent their sending it.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF THOMAS CORWIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to give notice that the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, citizens of Ohio, and friends of the late Hon. Thomas Corwin, are invited to meet in the reception room of the Senate Chamber this day at three o'clock p. m.

MRS. LINCOLN.

The bill (H. R. No. 4) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CLARK. I move that that bill be put on its passage. There will be probably no objection to it when it is read.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. It requires amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest that it be passed over until to-morrow, a Senator suggesting that it requires amendment. ["Agreed."]

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. COWAN. I now withdraw the objection I interposed to the consideration of the motion offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection to the resolution offered by me, and I hope it will now be taken up and put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection to the consideration of the resolution being withdrawn, it will be considered, by common consent, as before the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the resolution? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered all papers presented to the Senate relating to the condition and title to representation of the so-called confederate States shall be referred to the joint committee upon that subject.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to the present consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over under the rules.

TAX ON DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Manufactures of the respective Houses inquire if the tax from the internal revenue act upon the products of domestic manufacture is greater than the duty, premium on gold, expenses of exchange, and transportation upon similar products imported, and if thereby the foreign product is entered for consumption upon more favorable terms than the domestic product, to report a remedy by bill or otherwise.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island whether it would not be better to strike out the words "of the respective Houses," and confine the inquiry to the committee of the Senate. We cannot pass an order affecting the other House at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a concurrent resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not so understand it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes, sir, it is. I desire that this subject shall receive the attention of the Committee on Manufactures of the other House. It is a matter that is not generally understood, and this resolution is intended merely to direct the attention of the two committees to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The better way would be to pass the resolution here, confined to the Senate committee alone, and then let a similar one be passed in the House of Representatives. I did not observe that it was in the form of a concurrent resolution. Is it not in the ordinary form?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is concurrent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator had better confine it to this body, and then let the other House pass a similar resolution for themselves, if they wish to do so.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have no particular objection to that, but I should prefer that the matter should be brought to the attention of the other House in the manner that I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is in the power of the Senator who offers it to modify as he pleases, the Senate having taken no action upon it. No modification being proposed, the question is on the resolution. The resolution was adopted.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the requirement of the third section of an act approved March 3, 1865, a communication from the Secretary of War with the accompanying report and estimates of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands; which, on motion of Mr. POMEROY, was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 19, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON, in the following words:

O God, our Father, who openest Thy hand to supply our daily wants, we come to Thee for Thy morning benediction. Thou hast commanded us to ask for daily bread; much more should we ask Thee for supplies of daily wisdom. We thank Thee for the continuance of our lives. By the sudden death of one who was once an honored member of the national Legislature Thou hast taught us that we cannot lengthen out the span of our days. To the family circle, plunged into mourning by this sudden bereavement, administer, we pray Thee, in Thy bountiful mercy, the balm of consolation. And teach us to realize the great uncertainty of human life, that we may apply our minds unto wisdom and perform our daily duties with a view to the momentous issues of eternity.

O God, we stand to-day on the soil of a nation which is, not alone by inference or report, but by the solemn announcement of the constituted authorities, declared free in every part and parcel of its territory. Blessed be Thy name, O God, for Thy wonderful ending of this terrible conflict! We pray Thee to bless the President of the United States, his Cabinet officers, the legislators in both Houses of Congress, and give unto all who have any influence in this matter, the wisdom, the strength, the courage, the determination, and the perseverance to carry out to the glorious end what has been thus begun. And thine shall be all the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 35) making appropriation for refurbishing and repairing the President's House; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States by Mr. JOHNSON, his Private Secretary.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House credentials signed by J. Madison Wells, Governor of the State of Louisiana; and a certificate of James E. Towson, clerk of the Stafford county court, in favor of the claim of B. Johnson Barbour to a seat from the third congressional district of Virginia; which were referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

MISSOURI CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. KELSO. I rise to a question of privilege. I will make a brief statement of facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. KELSO. I ask for an extension of time to take supplementary testimony in the case of my seat contested by Judge Boyd. I will require but a few moments to state the facts. During the time allowed by law for taking testimony I was absent in the service of my country; I was in the Army, and could not obtain leave of absence in order to attend to the matter. I employed an attorney to attend to the business, but he was called away on other business toward the close of the day. The notices that were to be left with my wife failed to reach her on account of the want of mail facilities. They did not reach us in time, and the consequence was that neither myself nor my attorney knew any depositions were taken until the time to take rebutting testimony had passed. This was without any fault on my part, but was owing to the fact that I was beyond mail communication—guerrillas being upon the roads, and only strong parties of military men being able to get dispatches through. My wife, who was confined to a sick-bed, had no opportunity to communicate with me in time.

I have tried to be a good soldier and to do service to my country; and I hope, under these circumstances, the House will grant me sixty days, or such time as they may think proper, so that I may be able to take such evidence as will do justice to myself and my constituents.

Mr. DAWES. Has the gentleman submitted a resolution?

The SPEAKER. He has; a resolution to grant him sixty days in which to take testimony.

Mr. DAWES. Both sides, or only one?

The SPEAKER. Both sides.

Mr. DAWES. I should think that this should be referred to the Committee of Elections. The law prescribes a certain time in which this testimony shall be taken, and it has been the uniform practice of the House, with one or two exceptions, to adhere to that rule. I do not doubt that for good reasons the House may be induced to extend the time, but it is a question upon which both sides should be heard. There may be reasons why the House should not be disposed to extend the time; and that could be better understood if both parties could present their views on the point to some committee, and that committee could report on it. Besides, the committee would be under the necessity of introducing some resolution prescribing the mode in which this testimony shall be taken and the person before whom it shall be taken, if the House should be of the opinion that this extension should be granted.

I do not desire to express an opinion for or against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. I only desire that the House may conform, as much as possible, to the precedent, and that is, that this should come ultimately from the Committee of Elections, if at all. I therefore make the motion that it be referred to the Committee of Elections, and demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee of Elections; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the third section of the act approved March 3, 1865, a communication from the Secretary of War, with accompanying report of estimates of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that so much of the President's communication as relates to estimates be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that the remainder be referred to the select committee on freedmen, and that the message be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN G. HARRIS.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask the Clerk to read a preamble and resolution which I send up, and upon its adoption I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that Benjamin G. Harris, a Representative in this House from the fifth district of the State of Maryland, was in the month of May last, before a very respectable and intelligent court-martial, tried, and by said court convicted, upon charges and specifications, to wit, "violation of the fifty-sixth Article of War," by giving aid and comfort to the public enemy, and inciting them to continue to make war against the United States, declaring his sympathy with the enemy, and his opposition to the Government of the United States in its efforts to suppress the rebellion; and whereas it was proved at such trial (as is alleged) that the said Harris expressed his regret that the assassination of President Lincoln came too late to be of any use to the rebels, and at the same time declared that Jeff. Davis was a great and good man: all of which acts on the part of said Harris are inconsistent with the oath which he has taken as a member of this House; and whereas the said court-martial sentenced the said Harris (among other things) to be forever disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States, which sentence was approved by the President; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Elections be directed to inquire into the facts of the case, and that they report the same to the House, together with such action as said committee shall recommend; and in making their investigations said committee to have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order. It is that this is not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On the ground that it does not relate to the organization of the House nor to the seat of a member.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a question of privilege, and one of the very highest kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. On what ground?

The SPEAKER. It involves the right of a member to his seat.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the previous question. I think it proper that this resolution should direct the Committee on the Judiciary to make this inquiry.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will withdraw it for the purpose of moving that amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I make that motion.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I will accept that amendment, and renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the resolution is in proper shape now. It involves a question of fact, and not of law, and it should properly be investigated by the Committee of Elections.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. On consideration I will insist upon the resolution in the original form, and demand the previous question.

Mr. FINCK. I do not wish to make any extended remarks, but merely to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HARRIS] is not in his seat.

Mr. BROOKS. I call for tellers on seconding the previous question. I want to give the gentleman from Maryland an opportunity to come into the House before the vote is taken.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Brooks and Mr. FARNSWORTH were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 103, noes 17.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the previous question has been seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 138, nays 21, not voting 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broom, Backland, Bundy, Reader W. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Chanler, Culver, Davis, Goodyear, Griswold, Harris, Hogan, James M. Humphrey, Jones, Kerr, Le Blond, Morris, Niblack, Noell, Phelps, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—23.

So the resolution was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. JOHNSON said: Mr. HARRIS, against whom the proceeding is had, without any notice, is absent; I therefore, with others, vote "no."

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the preamble, and, being put, the preamble was agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That twenty-five hundred copies of the Navy Register be printed for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY AND NAVAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs be respectively instructed to consider and report if any change in the system of education at the Military School at West Point, or the Naval School at Annapolis be expedient or necessary; and also to consider and report upon the expediency of establishing or aiding in the establishment of schools for instruction in military and naval science in each of the several States of the Union, with the view and for the purpose of providing a more effective means of national defense without enlarging the class of citizens whose lives are especially devoted to those duties; and that the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs be invested with full jurisdiction of so much of the subject of this resolution as properly belongs under the rules to the business of those committees.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call the committees for reports.

INTER-STATE COMMUNICATION.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 11, to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States.

The bill authorizes every railroad company in the United States, whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, to carry upon and over its road, connections, boats, bridges, and ferries, all passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, freight, and property on their way from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I propose to call the previous question, but I will yield for a moment to my colleague upon the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. O'NEILL.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to ask my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, if he will not withdraw his call for the previous question for the present. I ask him to allow me, before I sit down, to make a motion to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I do it because it involves many legal questions of great magnitude and importance to the country, and the members of the House, perhaps, would be better satisfied to have those gentlemen who have been selected for their legal ability to constitute that committee, to pass upon it.

Without referring at all to the questions which may be involved, to what railroad companies may be interested, or how it may affect this State or that, I think we should hesitate in passing a bill which has not been before us this session, which has not been printed and upon our files, and which raises questions of constitutional law and State action requiring grave consideration, and especially demanding careful and not hasty legislation.

I do not wish to enter into the details of this question; I do not wish to make an argument for or against the bill; but I do ask the House and my colleague on the Committee on Commerce, its distinguished chairman, to permit me to make the motion indicated, so that the judicial organ of this body may report upon it; and I ask it without reference to any railroad corporation, but simply that we may know from the Judiciary Committee whether we are not infringing upon rights, privileges, and franchises which we should not do without a full understanding and proper investigation. The questions involved seem to me to belong rather to the Judiciary Committee than to the Committee on Commerce. I do not desire this reference for purposes of delay. I am not trying to subvert the interests of any corporation. I have always been in favor of developing all sections of our country by railroad and other enterprises, and would not, for a day even, retard the completion of those which, from want of means, may be struggling for existence against the power of wealthier monopolies. I hope that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will give me an opportunity of moving that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that he will not call the previous question. If he cannot consent to do this, I will be constrained to vote against any further progress in the bill to-day.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I was instructed by the Committee on Commerce, of which my friend from Philadelphia is a distinguished member, to report this bill and ask the action of the House upon it this morning. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires, as he says, if the previous question shall be withdrawn, to offer a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, that that committee may consider it.

Now, sir, I am a little surprised that my friend on the Committee on Commerce should distrust the legal ability which is on that committee, and should desire to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am aware that the Committee on the Judiciary had this bill, or a bill precisely like this, before them during the last Congress, and that they reported the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Commerce this morning, word for word, and that this House on the 12th of May, 1864, passed this precise bill.

The gentleman has spoken of various railroads that may be interested. Sir, I know of no railroad and of no interest which can control me, or which, I believe, will control the judgment of this House in a matter of this kind. It is a question whether Congress has not the right, and whether it will not exercise that right, to secure free intercourse between the States. It was the judgment of a large majority of this House, in the last Congress, that this bill ought to pass, and it was passed; and I think that part of the President's message which referred to this subject of the restrictions put by one State upon the commerce of other States has met with, perhaps, as much approbation from the country as any portion of that message, and I trust, as this question has been fully considered in the minds of gentlemen, the House will be willing now, at this early period of the session, to pass this bill and let it go to the Senate, so that they may take action upon it, because it will be remembered that although this bill was passed by the House as early as the 12th of May during the last long session of Congress, it was never reached in the Senate to be finally disposed of, but was, in the very last hours of the Senate, talked to death.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] reminds me of the fact that this bill was passed twice during the last Congress. And with every desire to accommodate my distinguished friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. O'NEILL] in his wish to have this matter referred, I must carry out the instructions of the committee in asking for the action of the House at this time upon this bill. If the House desire to have discussion upon it, if they wish to consider it more fully, they can vote down the demand for the previous question, and the whole subject will then be before the House for discussion.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who introduced the bill has asked me to yield to him for a moment for explanation. I will do so, retaining my right to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I introduced this bill at an early day in the session, in hopes that it might become a law, and not be killed as it was last winter by being delayed from time to time on various pretexts at the special personal request of individuals in this House and in the other branch of the national Legislature. The bill is very brief and easy of comprehension. It is a plain declaration of the right of Congress to regulate commerce between the States, and strikes a blow at those hateful monopolies which have so long been preying upon the body of American industry. The subject is so well understood by this House that it hardly needs debate.

If, however, gentlemen desire to debate this bill, I am as ready to debate it now as I was last winter; but I will not consent, so far as my vote will go, that it shall again be postponed until killed by time. I will consent to nothing more than a postponement to a day certain. But I hope the House has already sufficient intelligence upon the subject to act upon it now.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I will ask my colleague on the Committee on Commerce [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] to allow me to make a single statement.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is but fair that I should yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. J. L. THOMAS] for a moment. He is a member of the Committee on Commerce, and was opposed to this bill. I yield the floor to him.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I desire to say simply that I rise here not for the purpose of advocating the interest of any railroad in the State of Maryland or elsewhere. I voted in committee against reporting this bill to the House this morning, for the reason so well stated by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL,] that I consider that this is a question not proper to be laid before the Committee on Commerce; and I do hope that before the House passes upon a bill of this magnitude, with these constitutional questions and questions of law involved in it, they will not only first refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, but that they will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and name a certain day for the consideration of this question, when any gentleman who desires to give his reasons for or against the adoption of this measure may have an opportunity to be heard.

I am opposed to the calling of the previous question on these important measures, for it stifles all freedom of speech. I have as much right to be heard in this House, on this and other questions, as any other gentleman. This is a question touching the rights and interests of my own State. Although the bill does not, on its face, purport to embrace any particular railroad, it does embrace the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, and whether I am the advocate of that railroad or not, I do come here for the purpose of endeavoring to protect the interests of my State, and for that purpose I have a right to be heard; and I do hope that for these considerations the House will postpone the consideration of this bill, and make it the special order for, say, the 11th of January.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I insist upon the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] withdraw that call for a moment?

Mr. ROGERS. I would ask the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question, to allow me to make a few remarks.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. ROGERS. For explanation.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I will yield for a few moments.

Mr. ROGERS. This question was before the House at its last session in this same shape. It was debated here, and it was a very serious question indeed, not only in regard to the constitutional power of Congress to interfere with the legislation of the States, or the railroads of the States, but the policy of Congress in so doing. So much influence had that consideration that upon a division of this House there was only six majority given in favor of that bill. After having had it discussed here for a long time, after those great questions had been argued, when the vote came to be taken the majority given in this House in favor of the bill was only six, and it was passed in ample time to go to the Senate and receive the approval of the Senate if it met their approval. But it was postponed from time to time in the Senate, simply upon the ground that the Senate were opposed to passing the bill. And it was put off in that way, until the constitutional period of the session of the Senate had expired; and in that manner it was defeated.

Since that bill was before the House last winter, several persons who were not members of the House then have become members of this House. There are many here who do not understand the character and nature of this bill as it has been introduced into this House. It is well known to members here that the main object of this bill is to strike at the State of Maryland and the State of New Jersey; to deprive a chartered company of my State of a great privilege granted to it by the Legislature, by a solemn compact made years ago. The main object of the bill is to strike at that State for the purpose of annoying this railroad, which runs from Camden to New York by way of the coast, and to violate a charter which was given to them by the State of New Jersey, compelling and binding them only to carry freight and passengers in the State.

This is a matter, it strikes me, about which there may be a very great difference of opinion. It is a question of grave importance. The proposition embraced in this bill strikes at the very foundation of the rights of the States. No constitutional question which has been or can be raised in this House demands more consideration than the question which is now presented. I hope that the majority in this House will not press this bill at this early period of the session without giving members a chance to deliberate upon it, that we may, in our action on a question of this grave character, be satisfied that we have acted within the intent and spirit of the Constitution, and according to the best policy and interest of the country.

All I ask is that we may have an opportunity to debate this question, that it may be understood by the members, that we may arrive at a conclusion that will be reasonable. I stand here, not as the advocate of any particular railroad company, but as the advocate of the rights of my own State, which has recently come into the Union by proclaiming herself now to be loyal, [laughter;] and I ask that no infringements upon her constitutional rights shall be countenanced by the Congress of the United States. There is no reason now existing why New Jersey—loyal New Jersey, as demonstrated in the late election—should have her rights trampled upon.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether New Jersey has come into the Union with his consent.

Mr. ROGERS. The decision of the people, as rendered at the election, was without my consent.

Now, sir, it does seem to me fair and proper that this House should allow sufficient opportunity for due consideration and discussion on this question. I have no idea that a majority of the members of this House will force this question upon us now.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That can be settled very quickly. I will demand the previous question; and let the House determine whether it will pass this bill now, or whether the Camden and Amboy and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Companies shall continue to have the privilege of imposing on every person passing over their roads an unjust tax of fifteen or twenty cents or a dollar every trip.

Mr. ROGERS. It is in order that we may have the opportunity to disprove just such charges as that—charges which are untrue, although, of course, the gentleman does not intend to state anything but what he seriously believes to be true—that we want to have this subject properly discussed before the House, so that the State of New Jersey and the State of Maryland may be exhibited in their true attitude, and that it may be shown that those States are not disposed to interfere with the just rights of any one or to tax anybody illegally.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. There is nothing in the terms of this bill in regard to New Jersey or Maryland. It is a general enactment, which will apply everywhere. I think the people of this country have suffered long enough from the evils which the bill proposes to remedy. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for one moment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. For what purpose?

Mr. ROGERS. For the purpose of saying this: that the first bill introduced into this House on this subject was a bill which proposed, in direct terms, to authorize the Delaware and Raritan and the Camden and Atlantic Railroad Companies to carry freight and passengers between the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New York; and because of the objection raised here that that bill was intended to apply to that particular purpose, that bill was abandoned, and the identical bill which is now introduced here was brought up to accomplish the same object.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The bill the gentleman refers to, a much better bill than the first, met the approval of the House, and would have received the concurrence of the Senate if a vote had been had. I demand the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I cannot yield further.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move a postponement of this subject to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The previous question was seconded, there being, on a division—ayes 73, noes 58.

The main question was ordered, which was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the bill be laid on the table, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. JOHNSON was not agreed to. Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he will not, at some time before this bill is passed, permit me to explain to him the error under which he labors—

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I submit that the gentleman is out of order, as the main question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

On ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 51, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barlow, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Kuykendall, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClure, McIndoe, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moorehead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, William J. Randall, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Stevens, Taylor, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baldwin, Bergson, Boyer, Brooks, Broomall, Chanler, Dawson, Deftoes, Denison, Driggs, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Chester D. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Whaley, Williams, and Woodbridge—51.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Delos R. Ashley, Blaine, Blow, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Donnelly, Farguhar, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Hulbard, James M. Humphrey, Jones, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Morris, Noel, Pike, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Stillwell, Taber, Burt Van Horn, Voorhees, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—38.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WRIGHT said, when voting, that it was an invasion, and he would vote "no."

Mr. MARSHALL asked leave to explain his vote.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, objected.

Mr. MARSHALL stated that he had had no opportunity to consider the bill, and would therefore vote in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill being engrossed and read the third time,

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the House of Representatives the present condition of the harbors of the United States where public works have been built, or directed to be built, and what appropriations are required for their preservation or repair, and inform this House what other harbors upon the sea coast, on the lake coast, and upon the navigable rivers, require appropriations for their preservation or needful repair.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I am instructed by the committee on the rules to report as follows:

Strike out, in line one, rule 74, "thirty-one," and insert "thirty-two," so that it will read, "thirty-two standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress," &c. Insert before "a Committee on Patents" the words "a Committee on Mines and Mining;" and add after the last rule: "It shall be the duty of the Committee on Mines and Mining to consider all subjects relative to mines and mining which may be referred to them, and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relative thereto as may seem to them expedient."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notified the House that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 24) to amend section five of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 4, 1864;"

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 2) for the restoration of Commanders William Reynolds and Melancton B. Woolsey, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 7) for increasing the bond of the Superintendent of Public Printing.

The message also notified the House that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the House providing for a temporary adjournment of Congress, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As a question of privilege, I call up the resolution just sent in from the Senate in reference to adjournment over the holidays.

The resolution as it passed the House was read, as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday the 20th instant, they adjourn to meet on Tuesday the 9th of January next.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

First. Strike out "Wednesday," and insert in lieu thereof "Thursday."
Second. Strike out "20th," and insert in lieu thereof "21st."
Third. Strike out "Tuesday," and insert in lieu thereof "Wednesday."
Fourth. Strike out "9th," and insert in lieu thereof "3d."

The resolution, as amended, would read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Thursday the 21st instant, they adjourn to meet on Wednesday the 3d of January next.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think a committee of conference could agree upon something more satisfactory to both Houses, and therefore I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and ask a committee of conference.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope the House will concur.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is it not in order to move a concurrence in the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The usage has been that motions that bring the two Houses together can be received even in spite of the previous question.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. If the previous question shall not be seconded, then the question will be upon concurring.

The SPEAKER. That question arises, and it takes precedence of the motion to non-concur.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the House will non-concur, and have a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be upon concurrence.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

On the question of concurring there being, on a division—ayes 55, noes 76,

Mr. FARNSWORTH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendments were not concurred in.

The motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and ask a committee of conference, was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. WRIGHT, members of such committee on the part of the House.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. DAWSON, from the committee on rules, reported the following amendment to the rules, and upon it demanded the previous question:

Add at the end of the rules the following:

The allowance of stationery to each Member and Delegate shall be of the value of seventy-five dollars for the long session, and forty-five dollars for the short session of Congress.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I do not believe the Committee of Ways and Means, under its former organization, including what are now three committees, ever found the least difficulty about the amount of stationery. I think the present amount is enough. I know I always have had some over at the end of the session.

Mr. DAWSON. This matter is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CONKLING called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment to the rules was adopted.

Mr. DAWSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the rules was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBEL DEBT.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back joint resolution of the House No. 9, to amend the Constitution of the United States, with an amendment.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, (the Senate concurring.) That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same hereby is, proposed to the Legislatures of the several States for ratification, namely:

ARTICLE — No tax, duty, or impost shall be laid, nor shall any appropriation of money be made, by either the United States, or any one of the States thereof, for the purpose of paying, either in whole or in part, any debt, contract, or liability whatsoever, incurred, made, or suffered by any one or more of the States, or the people thereof, for the purpose of aiding rebellion against the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The amendment reported by the committee is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, (two thirds of both Houses concurring.) That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE — No tax, duty, or impost shall be laid, nor shall any appropriation of money be made, by either the United States, or any one of the States thereof, for the purpose of paying, either in whole or in part, any debt, contract, or liability whatsoever, incurred, made, or suffered by any one or more of the States, or the people thereof, for the purpose of aiding rebellion against the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary is on the preliminary portion of the resolution, providing for the submission of the proposed amendment of the Constitution to the Legislatures of the States. As originally drafted, the resolution did not follow the precedents established in regard to amendments of the Constitution in other cases, and the amendment is simply to conform the resolution to the precedents heretofore established. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This proposition is so generally concurred in that I do not think it necessary to occupy the time of the House in discussing it. I believe that every member of the House is anxious to prevent the occurrence of any possibility by which the people of the country may be made liable for the payment of the debts contracted by the late so-called confederate States, or either of them, in the prosecution of the late war against the Government of the United States, and unless some members desire some further explanation than can be had from the reading of the joint resolution itself, I propose to move the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ROGERS. I would ask the gentleman when this matter was brought up in the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. At a regular meeting of the committee. I believe the gentleman was not present, but I think every other member of the committee was present.

Mr. ROGERS. I was under a misapprehension as to when the committee met. I supposed that when the House was not in session, the committee did not meet. If I understand that resolution it is a proposition to prevent the people of the rebel States from paying debts contracted during the rebellion by the States. I would like to have it read again.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. ROGERS. If I had been present at the meeting of the committee I would have been willing to agree to part of that resolution, but part of it I cannot subscribe to. That part of it which prevents the United States from assuming the debts of the rebel States I agree to; but that part which undertakes to bind the people of the States in saying what debts they shall pay and what they shall not I entirely disagree to.

It strikes me that three fourths of the States have no right by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to undertake to dictate to the States what debts they shall pay, or anything whatever in relation to their domestic affairs of any kind or character. My understanding of the Constitution of the United States is that it contains no powers except those delegated to the Federal Government by the States, and that every power that was reserved by the States at the time they entered into the Federal Government is still held by the States, and that neither three fourths of the States nor even all of them but on have any right through an amendment of the Constitution, or in any other way, to deprive an individual State of any right that that State never gave up to the Federal Government at the time it entered into the formation of the American Union.

It is upon the broad ground that the States of this country have some rights, and that three quarters of the States have no right, merely because they call it an amendment to the Constitution, to deprive the other quarter of the States of the rights and privileges which were guaranteed to them after the Revolution, which they held in themselves, and which they never handed over to the Federal Government, or over which they never gave that Government, as their agent, any authority or control. If the Constitution of the United States can be amended by three fourths of the States and two thirds of each House of Congress, so as to deprive the people of a State of the right to pay any particular kind of debt, or to carry on any particular kind of transaction, the right to do which was reserved to the States, and which never became a part of the delegated powers of the Federal Government, then an amendment to the Constitution may deprive the other fourth of the States of every sovereign power which was reserved to the States at the time they entered into and made the American Union. If, I say, Congress and three fourths of the States, by an amendment to the Constitution, have a right to deprive the States of a power which they have in their inherent right, which they claimed and owned before they entered into the Federal Union, and can control their domestic concerns in that manner, then an amendment to the Constitution might deprive a State of a Governor, and a court, and every single domestic institution and policy which existed in the State.

Now, I have not yet learned to believe, from the wisdom which I have seen exercised by those who have gone before me, and from reading the Constitution of the United States, that the men who made and framed the Constitution ever intended that an amendment should be made to it so as to deprive any portion of the States of any rights which those States did not give up to the Federal Government, which they did not hand over to the Federal Government, which they did not give the Federal Government the power and authority to act upon. In other words, the right to hold a court, the right to elect a Governor, the right to elect and hold a Legislature, all rights which were reserved to the States, are rights which were never delegated to the Federal Government, over which the Federal Government, neither by an amendment of the Constitution, nor in any other manner, has any right of interference. If those rights cannot be interfered with, if a State has a right to hold its own courts, elect its own Legislature and its own Governor, if it has a right to control its own domestic resources, then by an amendment of the Constitution of the United States can the right which the people of a State in some future time may see fit to exercise, to pay a debt which they may consider themselves under a moral obligation to pay, be interfered with in this manner?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Rogers] hold that the framers of the Constitution intended to give a State the right to tax its people, the loyal people of the State, if there are any, to pay a debt incurred in a rebellion against the Constitution and Government of the United States?

Mr. ROGERS. That is not the point. They gave the people the right through their Legislatures to tax themselves to pay any debt they may see fit to pay, and whether that debt was contracted in a righteous or an unrighteous, a just or an unjust cause, makes no difference in regard to the right of the State. The great question is, did the States, when they entered into the American Union, give up the right to control, by their own Legislatures, what debts shall be paid by them?

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman state what is the use of the power of amending the Constitution unless that gives the power to change the condition of the States as well as the laws of the nation?

Mr. ROGERS. The use of it is this: the framers of the Constitution gave to Congress and three fourths of the States the right to amend the Constitution in everything that comes within the spirit of the Constitution, in everything that lay at its foundation. They have no right to change the whole Government by an amendment of the Constitution. You have no right to make of this Government a monarchy, to change the attitude of the President.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is one of the reserved rights of a State to break up the Government?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I do not contend for any such thing. But it was a right of a State to pay its own debts in its own way, in its own manner, and at its own time, and three fourths of the States have no right, by an amendment of the Constitution, to say that the other fourth of the States shall not pay any debt they may see fit to pay. I am not here arguing in favor of paying the rebel debt, or in favor of the rebellion, for I denounce it; but I am here to stand up for the rights of civil liberty, the rights of the States not to be invaded by a majority of this House, taking away from them reserved rights which they had fought for and wrested from the tyranny and despotism of King George, and which they supposed they had firmly implanted in themselves, and had never given away or turned over to the authority and control of the Federal Government.

Can the Constitution of the United States be amended in every respect and in every way? Unless it can be, unless there is supreme, unlimited, controlling power in two thirds of both Houses of Congress, and three fourths of the States, to take away all the rights of the individual States, then there is no power, under the spirit and reason of the organic law, to take away from a State any right which that State reserved at the time of the adoption of the Constitution—which it never intended to place under the control of the Federal Government, but of which it expected to retain the exclusive control within its own domain, and under its own sovereign authority, without any right of interference on the part of any other State or of the General Government.

I know that the Constitution of the United States provides that two thirds of both Houses of Congress may propose amendments which shall be valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof; and the only express limitations of this power are that no amendment made prior to 1808 shall affect the provision with reference to the importation of slaves, and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal voice in the Senate. It has been argued that, as these are the only exceptions or limitations specified, there resides with two thirds of both Houses of Congress and three fourths of the States an unlimited power to amend the Constitution in every other particular.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for one moment, I desire to inquire whether, in his opinion, it is competent so to amend the Constitution of the United States as to prohibit a State from rebelling; and if it is, then why is it not competent to provide by amendment that a State may not pay the expenses of carrying on a rebellion?

Mr. ROGERS. It would be competent to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to provide that a State shall be forbidden to rebel. By the Constitution, as it now stands, the States are forbidden to rebel. Although it is not written in the Constitution in express words that no State may rebel, that no State may secede, that no State may withdraw from the Union, yet the spirit of the Constitution, the foundation stone which lies at the base of our whole structure of government, denies the right of any State to withdraw from the compact into which it entered when it, with the other States, formed the American Union.

But that is not the question now before the House. A rebellion has taken place, a war has been carried on, a debt has been created, money has been loaned by individuals; and my proposition is simply to leave to the States concerned the right to say hereafter whether they will pay that debt or not. It is not the business of New Jersey, of Pennsylvania, of Ohio, or of any other State, to say whether Virginia, through the action of her Legislature or her people, shall pay her own debt, which, though contracted in an unholy cause, may be deemed in after years, according to the judgment of her people or their descendants, necessary to be paid.

I do not wish to be understood as standing here to argue in favor of paying that debt. I am simply contending that there must be some limit to the power to amend the Constitution of the United States. We have now before the Committee on the Judiciary almost numberless propositions to amend the Constitution; and I want to know whether it is in the power of two thirds of both Houses of Congress, with the concurrence of three fourths of the States, to amend that instrument in every particular, and thus rob the individual States of the most sacred rights which they have inherited—rights which they intended should continue as a part of their sovereign power, and which, wisely, and in accordance with the genius of the institutions of this country, they have always been allowed to exercise?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have already yielded to the gentleman from New Jersey more of the time accorded to me by the rules of the House than I intend to occupy myself; and I must therefore decline to yield to him further.

Mr. ROGERS. I shall conclude in a moment. I simply desire to submit one other proposition with reference to this power to amend the Constitution—a proposition which, I think, affords an effective answer to an argument which was presented at the last session, which I was then unable to answer, and which, I believe, was not satisfactorily answered by any one. It was argued at the last session by the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee, [Mr. Wilson, of Iowa,] and by others, that, as the Constitution specifies in express terms but two limitations on the power of amendment, the exceptions prove the rule, and there is therefore an unlimited power of amendment in all other respects, whether the amendments proposed infringe the reserved rights of the States or not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think I now understand the gentleman's proposition, and I therefore decline to yield to him further. Other gentlemen have appealed to me, and the hour before the expiration of which I desire to call the previous question is running rapidly away.

Mr. ROGERS. I would say to the gentleman from Iowa that on questions amending the Constitution of the United States the majority of this House ought not to compel the minority to act upon them under the call for the previous question. We ought not to be compelled to pass on questions of this great magnitude without having an opportunity to consider and debate them. I appeal to the magnanimity of the gentleman from Iowa, as one who would respect the rights of the minority of this House on these constitutional questions, that we shall have the right to be heard.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed, I think, to protect the rights of the minority as much as any man in this House, and I think that I am disposed to protect minorities further than the gentleman from New Jersey. I am in favor of protecting that minority which he now represents in the State of New Jersey.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not represent a minority; I represent a majority.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If any portion of the people of New Jersey desire to remove into the limits of any one of the States that were in rebellion, I desire that that portion of the people thus removing shall not be liable to the payment of part of the debt incurred for the purpose of the destruction of this Government. I am in favor of protecting the minority in another respect, and that is to protect them against the corrupting influences of the immense amount of money involved in the aggregation of the rebel debt—that contracted by the so-called confederate States in their general capacity, and that contracted by the several States as part and parcel of the so-called confederate government.

We had a full discussion of the doctrine of the right of amendment of the Constitution of the United States during the last Congress; and I do not believe at that time there was much difference of opinion on the subject, nor do I believe there is now. I believe that the gentlemen of the House concur with the gentleman from New Jersey in the opinion that when the framers of the Constitution made it they made it so that no State should have the right to secede from the Union. The Government of the United States, in the struggle which has just closed, has reaffirmed by force of arms, sealed with the blood of loyal men, the decree of our forefathers. We propose to so affirm the Constitution by this amendment that not only that determination of the fathers, reaffirmed by the people in this day, shall have effect, but that no part of the people, either in the North or the South, shall be called upon in the future to pay one dollar of the debt thus contracted for the purpose of destroying the Government of the United States. And that is the sole purpose embraced in this proposition.

For the purpose of making it effective, we have proposed by this amendment that the Congress of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all cases arising under this amendment, striking at all debts contracted for the purpose of aiding either that or any other rebellion which may arise in the future, and giving the tax-payer in each and every State the right to carry his case as against the tax-gatherer into the courts of the United States, there to meet with the full protection we desire to give by this amendment. We do not merely desire to prohibit the assumption of this debt, but we provide also for that effective remedy which will make the people secure.

I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House further. I believe that the House is in a temper to adopt the proposed amendment; and unless some other gentleman wants to make a suggestion, I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I do not think that the amendment is broad enough. I think that it ought to prohibit the assumption of any debt contracted by any rebel legislature in the past or in the future.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think that the resolution is broad enough to cover the object desired by the gentleman from New York. It prohibits the assumption of all kinds of debt contracted for the purpose of carrying on the rebellion. The State governments embodied in the so-called confederacy were for the purpose of aiding the rebellion, so that any debt contracted by the so-called confederacy, or any State of it, was contracted in aid of that rebellion, for it was in that way they got the machinery of their government in motion. I think that it is broad enough to cover the object of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I would inquire whether the committee considered the propriety of adding to this amendment to the Constitution the provision that was added to the one abolishing slavery, that Congress shall have power to pass laws to carry this amendment into effect.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I cannot say that the Committee on the Judiciary officially considered the question presented by the gentleman from Ohio; but it will be observed by every member of this House that the proposition contained in this resolution is different from that contained in the amendment to which he alludes; that we lay down the general proposition that slavery shall not exist, and that Congress shall have power to carry that into effect.

In this, however, we not only lay down the means, but we provide the ways and means through which the citizen shall have his remedy in the courts of the United States. Therefore I do not think it necessary to have that added, though I should have no objection myself to have that addition made to the resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment as reported by the committee simply restrains the United States and the States from collecting taxes or appropriating moneys for the payment of any rebel debt. I suggest to the gentleman that it might be well, in order to secure the object intended, to add to the proposed amendment the words, "Nor shall the United States or any State of the Union ever assume or pay any part of such debt or liabilities."

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish first to make a remark or two in reply to the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM.] In my opinion, though I may be in error, the resolution in its present form is broader than it would be if amended as the gentleman from Ohio desires. I think, as the Secretary of State said in his dispatch to the authorities of South Carolina, in relation to the latter clause of the amendment abolishing slavery, that it would be only a limitation. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt that there will not be any opposition from any part of this House to the general scope and purpose of the amendment proposed. I desire to say, so far as I understand gentlemen around me, there is no opposition to the purpose and object expressed and proposed in the passage of this resolution. Exception might possibly be made to the loss of time growing out of the matter, but on no other ground, for how any man can conceive that the debts of a dead State or government are to be paid without an administrator, I do not know.

But, sir, I rose simply to say I do think it is due to the people of the United States and to the dignity of this House that grave questions of this character should be considered with some degree of gravity. I wish in the first instance to state that this amendment, upon which the House is now called to act, is not printed so that members can read it. We have been compelled to sit in our seats and gather now and then a remark of an explanatory character. One gentleman thinks, so far as I can hear, the resolution rather too broad; another says it is not broad enough; and another gets up and assures those around me that it is all right.

I enter my protest against this kind of legislation. It is all wrong. However much gentlemen may believe in their own competence to draw resolutions amendatory of the Constitution of the United States, it is asking a little too much that a whole side of the House should be taken on their own responsibility only. I have great respect for the Committee on the Judiciary, and believe it has been very well constituted; but at the same time I have not so much respect for any committee that I would not take the time to read a bill they proposed for our action.

This is the objection I have to the immediate passage of this bill.

Mr. HIGBY. Though this amendment has been offered by the Committee on the Judiciary, whose ability we do not doubt, yet as so many questions have been raised, would it not be better, in order that this amendment to the Constitution may be so thoroughly perfected as to leave no door of escape, that there should be some little delay for consideration? Would it not be better that some time certain in the future should be fixed for the consideration of this amendment? Some provision of the kind suggested ought to be added to it. The question in my mind is whether the amendment is strong enough as it is.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to suggest, in addition to what has already been said, that this joint resolution should be printed, and opportunity given for offering amendments.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In reply I will say that this proposition has been printed. It was printed when it was first introduced.

Mr. INGERSOLL. It has not been printed and laid on our desks.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman had sent to the document-room he would have found it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. The gentleman did not inform the House that it could be had at the document-room.

I do not believe that this action ought to be forced upon the House with such precipitation. Let every man have an opportunity to consider this question. The more it is considered the better, if by its consideration we can improve the resolution so that the object may be attained most certainly; and that object is the prevention of any State that took part in the rebellion from levying taxes upon its people to pay this debt, when every dollar of taxation levied upon such people should be levied for the purpose of liquidating the national debt that was created in the subjugation of the rebellion rather than that one cent should be raised in any rebel

State for the liquidation of the debt created for the overthrow of the Government. I favor a postponement in order that the resolution may be made to accomplish the purpose desired by the committee. I think it due to the House that the resolution should be printed and placed upon the table of each member, and that time should be given for him to consider it, so as to vote understandingly upon it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman had an opportunity of seeing the resolution the day after it was printed. Under the rules of the House, bills and resolutions are not now distributed and laid on the desks of members.

Mr. INGERSOLL. When the resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed, was any assurance given to the House that it would be reported back without amendment for the action of the House? Not at all; I cannot tell whether the resolution as now reported is in the shape in which it was when it went to the committee and was printed. I do not know how that is, and I ask that it shall be printed, so that we may know.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman will be satisfied with my assurance, I can assure him that so far as the proposed amendment of the Constitution is concerned, it is reported back in the same shape in which it was referred to the committee.

Mr. SLOAN. I think it would be more satisfactory to the House if the gentleman from Iowa would move to make this resolution the special order for some early day, and I would suggest that course to him. We all agree in the object of the resolution, and desire early action upon it; but we desire also to understand the measure proposed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have certainly no disposition to force the House to a vote now if the members of the House generally desire a postponement, and that the resolution be set down as a special order for some future day. I had supposed that this resolution, being reported after due and calm consideration on the part of the Committee on the Judiciary, the House would be ready to act upon it without any considerable delay, but if I am mistaken in that, I have no objection to postpone it for a time in order that the House may have full opportunity to examine the phraseology and details of the proposed amendment.

Mr. NIBLACK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether, as there are so many other propositions now pending, and I suppose before his committee, to amend the Constitution of the United States in many particulars, it would not be better that when any single proposition is reported back, it should be postponed till some future time, and the amendments should all come up at one time and be made the special order from day to day until disposed of? Gentlemen will then have a better opportunity to give the subject attention. The proposed amendments will then all be grouped together so that we can compare them and be better enabled to comprehend their force and the correlative effect one upon the other of the different amendments proposed. In this way we have to consider them disjointedly and in a very unsatisfactory manner.

I suggest, therefore, to the gentleman the propriety of grouping all these proposed amendments together and making them the special order for some time during the session, and then we can devote our time to them until disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This proposition is a very short one, contained in a very few words, and I would suggest that its consideration be postponed until to-morrow. Probably gentlemen will be able, at that time, to act upon it understandingly; they will have an opportunity to examine it and also the other propositions to amend the Constitution which have been submitted. I suggest, therefore, that this resolution be set down as the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. ROGERS. Those on this side of the House would like to have an opportunity to discuss this question, and I hope they will be allowed that opportunity.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am opposed to postponing this subject longer than till to-morrow.

Mr. ROGERS. Will we be allowed an opportunity to-morrow to debate it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If there shall be a general disposition on to-morrow to bring this question to a vote, I shall ask the House to vote on it. If there should be a general disposition, as there seems to be to-day, for a further delay, I shall not ask a vote to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not the purpose of any gentleman on this side of the House, so far as I can learn, to discuss this proposition at any great length. Their object is simply to criticise the language of the proposed amendment, to see the bearing the words have on each other, for we are still in the dark upon that subject. The amendment upon which the House is now called upon to act has not yet been printed. The only objection I have to the consideration of this subject to-morrow is the question whether it can be printed and distributed by that time. We get the Globe about one o'clock, and that is the time we are to be called upon to vote on this question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I propose to give the gentleman twenty-four hours to get light on this subject, by my proposition to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. INGERSOLL. And that it be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have already announced that the resolution has been printed, and the gentleman can get it by sending to the document-room.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Has it been printed as a report from the committee?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is not printed as a report from the committee, but it was printed as it was reported from the committee; that is, the proposed article of the Constitution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wanted to know whether the gentleman from the Judiciary Committee was attempting to pass this joint resolution without first having it printed and submitted to the House for examination, or whether this was the proposition as introduced and printed at the time it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope, when the gentleman reads the copy he has in his hand, he will see that it is printed. Inasmuch as I propose now to postpone this subject until to-morrow, I must ask a vote on that question. I ask that it be made the special order after the morning hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I must decline to yield further.

Mr. SMITH. I rise to a question of order. Can the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] yield any further, the hour to which he was entitled having expired?

The SPEAKER. The hour has not yet expired.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call the previous question on the motion to make this joint resolution a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the Chair whether it is in order to move to make this a special order for some day later than the one indicated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

The SPEAKER. A special order can be made only by unanimous consent on this day, it not being suspension day.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I propose to object to its being made a special order for to-morrow. If, however, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will name a later day he will meet with fair discussion and with but little opposition to his proposition. For one I am not inclined to arrest or prevent this amendment, in so far as it shall relieve the southern people who have been in rebellion from this species of taxation which may lead to a payment of the rebel debt. On the contrary, I desire that all their energies and powers of industry may go to the payment of the national debt.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will withdraw the motion to postpone this joint resolution until to-morrow, and I do it for this reason: inasmuch as the gentleman objects to its being made the special order for to-morrow I ask that a vote may be taken on it to-day. I do so because some Legislatures are now in session, and some of them will probably adjourn before the Senate can act on this subject, unless it is sent there at once. If it needs amendment, it can be amended there. I therefore call the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I must decline. I insist upon my demand for the previous question upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 89, noes 50.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, which was upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. THAYER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. As the Constitution requires a two-thirds vote to pass a constitutional amendment, there is a manifest propriety in taking the vote by yeas and nays, and the Chair will order the vote to be taken in that way in order to ascertain if two thirds vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROGERS. Can the question be divided now?

The SPEAKER. Not upon the question of the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 150, nays 11, not voting 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Dawes, DeFrees, Delano, Dening, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Lean, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McClure, McKee, McKim, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Noell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Unson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Voorhees, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Westworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Wright—150.

NAYS—Messrs. Brooks, Denison, Eldridge, Grider, Aaron Harding, McCullough, Nicholson, Ritter, Rogers, Shanklin, and Trimble—11.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ancona, Delos B. Ashley, Bergen, Blaine, Culver, Davis, Dawson, Glassbrenner, Goodyear, Harris, Edwin N. Hubbell, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Jones, Le Blond, McIndoe, Moorhead, Morris, Pomeroy, Winfield, and Woodbridge—21.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the resolution was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. ANCONA said: I desire to be excused from voting, on the ground that I do not understand the question.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make such a request. Under the rule, applications to be excused from voting must be made before the call of the yeas and nays is commenced.

Mr. JOHNSON. I vote "ay;" but I "go it blind." The bill is not printed; as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. BOYER. I did not vote when my name was first called, because I thought there was not sufficient time given for deliberation on so grave a subject. But believing, (though I am not sure,) that I now understand the scope of the bill, I vote "ay."

The result was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. SHELLABARGER, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to this House, as soon as practicable, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is necessary to enable the courts of the United States to enforce the freedom of the wives and children of soldiers of the United States under the joint resolution of Congress of March 3, 1865, and also to enforce the liberty of all persons under the operation of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery.

Mr. SHELLABARGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFRAGE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, presented, from a minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, a report against the passage of the bill extending the right of suffrage in the District of Columbia; which was laid on the table.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to yield to me that I may make a motion to adjourn, the reason for which I will explain. The members of the Ohio delegation have been invited to attend, at three o'clock this afternoon, a meeting called for the purpose of making arrangements for the funeral ceremonies of the late Hon. Thomas Corwin; as the Ohio delegation embraces nineteen members, we can hardly leave with propriety while the House is in session, and it is now after three o'clock.

Mr. STEVENS. I cheerfully yield to the gentleman for the purpose indicated.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten minutes past three o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 20, 1865.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the Senate inquiring whether any officers of the Government were receiving pay and performing the duties of their respective offices without taking the oaths prescribed by law; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION DUE SENATOR COLLAMER.

Mr. FOOT. I rise to move a reconsideration of a vote adopting a resolution offered by myself directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the widow of the late Senator Collamer the compensation due him at the time of his death. I desire to offer a slight amendment to the resolution, and it becomes necessary, therefore, to move to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the resolution to be engrossed for a third reading.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT. I now move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "contingent" and inserting "compensation," so as to make the amount payable out of the compensation fund instead of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. LINCOLN.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I move to take up the bill in reference to Mrs. Lincoln.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that bill will be considered as before the Senate.

Mr. CRESWELL. May I inquire what the bill is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States.

Mr. WADE. I hope the Senator from Kansas will let that bill lie over until the reports from committees are gone through with.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. This bill will lead to no discussion. I only desire to amend it by inserting three words, so as to carry out the intent of Congress.

Mr. WADE. If it will lead to no discussion I shall not interpose an objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States, or, in the event of her death before payment, to his legal representatives, the sum of $25,000, but any sum of money paid to his legal personal representatives since his death on account of his salary as President of the United States, is to be deducted from this sum of $25,000.

Mr. FOOT. I think an amendment becomes necessary in order to carry out the intent of the bill, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas. The bill is a literal transcript of the act making like compensation to the widow of President Harrison. It will be seen by the proviso that there is to be deducted from the $25,000—the salary for one year, the salary intended for the current year upon which Mr. Lincoln had entered—such sums of money as have been paid since his death to his administrator. A literal interpretation of this language would include moneys that had been paid him, as in fact moneys were paid to the administrator of Mr. Lincoln, on his salary falling due for the months of January and February of the preceding year. I say, a literal interpretation of these words would require a deduction of that money from the $25,000. Such is not the intent, manifestly, of the bill; such is not the intention of Congress; but only to deduct such moneys as may have been paid his administrator for the current year. I move, therefore, to insert after the words "President of the United States," in the proviso, the words, "for the current year," so that the proviso, if amended as proposed, will read as follows:

Provided always, That any sum of money which shall have been paid to the personal representatives of said Abraham Lincoln, since his death, on account of his salary as President of the United States for the current year, shall be deducted from the said sum of $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

A message was afterward received from the House of Representatives announcing its concurrence in the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) to amend the Constitution of the United States.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the resolution of the House proposing an adjournment of the two Houses from the 20th of December to the 9th of January next; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. JAMES F. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. E. R. V. WRIGHT of New Jersey, managers at the same on its part.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADE. I hold in my hand a very able and well-drawn memorial of the society of Friends who met lately in Baltimore, in which they have summed up what they believe to be the hardships and evils under which the freedmen are laboring in divers parts of the Union, and what they conceive to be the remedy, and they pray that Congress may adopt such legislation as will remedy those evils. I move that the memorial be referred to the joint special committee on reconstruction.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying that there be granted to the soldiers and their legal representatives of the last war one hundred and sixty acres of unappropriated lands belonging to the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer a petition from citizens of Massachusetts, and, as I have many similar petitions to offer, I will call the particular attention of the Senate to its prayer. It sets forth very briefly several propositions: first, that the people in the rebellious districts having by their own acts vacated their rights as citizens and as State organizations, and having by act of Congress been declared alien enemies, have as yet no right and are improper persons to be represented in Congress; that the policy of the Executive, in assuming to restore civil authority through military governments without the aid and advice of Congress, is contrary to the spirit of our institutions; that it is the right and duty of Congress, at the earliest possible moment, to assume control over the late rebellious districts, and to provide provisional governments for the same in order that sovereignty may be restored at an early period, and a truly republican form of government be guaranteed to every State; that before recognition of the late rebellious districts as States and their admission to the national councils, a due regard must be had for the rights of the loyal people, and for security for the future, which cannot be obtained by oaths; that while we may renounce indemnity for the past, irreversible guarantees for the future must be insisted upon, and should be obtained before readmitting rebels to equal rights with loyal persons; that the States actually cooperating and supporting the national Government, as represented in Congress and in Legislatures, constitute at all times a constitutional quorum to make laws and to amend the Constitution, any number of ex-States, having no constitutional representatives and Legislatures, notwithstanding; that emancipation is not complete as long as the black codes exist; therefore the petitioners pray Congress to take measures to provide provisional civil governments for the late rebellious districts, and as security for the future, to exact irreversible guarantees, among which should be, first, the unity and sovereignty of the Republic; secondly, enfranchisement and equality before the laws; thirdly, security of the national debt; fourthly, the rejection of the rebel debt; fifthly, compulsory education; and sixthly, national peace and tranquillity by impartial suffrage. I offer this petition from citizens of Massachusetts, and move its reference to the joint committee having the subject of the condition of the rebel States under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER also presented similar petitions from citizens of the States of Missouri, New York, New Jersey, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, and Illinois; which were referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. SUMNER. I also, Mr. President, offer what is called "a petition and memorial of citizens of the United States," proceeding from an assembly in the Puritan church at New York, and signed by the committee to whom, on the occasion of the meeting, was delegated the duty of preparing this petition and memorial, the committee being George B. Cheever, Edward Gilbert, and Parker Pillsbury. In the course of this very elaborate document, the argument for justice to an oppressed race is set forth under several different heads. We have here, for instance, at length the revolutionary opinions and the articles of Government; we have here a discussion of the question of attainder of color or race, which, it is said, is forbidden by the Constitution; also the question of ex post facto laws which are declared to be inconsistent with the Constitution and are applicable to this question; also the guarantee of a republican form of government in the Constitution, under which the petitioners insist there should be equal rights. The petition concludes as follows:

"Your memorialists therefore pray that no State may be admitted into the Union with the proscription of color in its constitution or laws; neither Colorado, nor Tennessee, nor South Carolina, nor any other State now applying for admission.

"Your memorialists pray that equality of all classes before the law, including the right of suffrage, the right of testimony, the right to bear arms, secured and protected for all classes as for the whites, may be required of the States in their constitutions and laws, before any of them are permitted to assume their former independent position in and under the Government of the United States.

"That a renewal of the injustice for which the rebellion was undertaken may be rendered forever impossible, your memorialists pray that an amendment be added to the Constitution of the United States."

I move the reference of this petition and memorial to the joint committee of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition from citizens, colored and white, of the State of Virginia, with a large mass of accompanying papers, in which they ask Congress—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Without interrupting my honorable friend, I understand—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts give way to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understood that the last memorial asked for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I submit to my honorable friend from Massachusetts whether that question had not better go to the Judiciary Committee, as it is a question of amending the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator had listened to the memorial as I read it, he would have found that the memorial was chiefly occupied with topics which are now submitted to a joint committee.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. But the prayer of the memorial is for an amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. He did not listen to the memorial.

The memorial I now have is, I say, from citizens of Virginia in the neighborhood of Norfolk, white and black, with papers accompanying; and they ask, according to the resolutions of a public meeting, that Congress will adopt such legislation as will secure to the lately rebellious States a republican form of government, and the consequent protection of the colored citizens of Virginia in life, liberty, and property, and the granting to the colored citizens of those States the right to testify in courts and to equality of suffrage the same as white citizens. I move that this petition and the accompanying papers go to the joint committee. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE presented the petition of Lieutenant George B. Rodney, of the fourth United States artillery, praying to be relieved from responsibility for the capture of his papers by the rebels at the battle of Chickamauga, while he was acting as assistant quartermaster; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. COWAN presented a petition of soldiers of the late war, praying that the necessary legislation may be had to equalize the bounties of soldiers who enlisted in the beginning of the war with those who enlisted near its close; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 23) giving the consent of Congress to the annexation of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, formerly of the State of Virginia, to the State of West Virginia, reported it with an amendment.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 1) to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President—

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia when he proposes to proceed with the consideration of the very important bill which he has just reported.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall be inclined to call it up at the earliest possible time, but probably not before the contemplated adjournment.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very glad that my excellent friend proposes to proceed with the consideration of that measure at an early day. I believe that the country requires promptitude in that act of justice.

Mr. DAVIS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts give way to the Senator from Kentucky? The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to call the Senator to order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky calls to order.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask, what question is pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Foot.] The Senator from Massachusetts interposed to ask a question of the Senator from Maine who had made a report—a question in regard to when he proposed calling up a bill. There was no distinct question before the Senate; but it is frequently, as the Senator knows, the practice to inquire into a matter of that sort without the Chair interposing. There was no distinct question before the Senate, however.

Mr. DAVIS. But the Senator in his usual disorderly manner was proceeding to make a speech.

Mr. SUMNER. I had only uttered one sentence. The Senator constantly utters many.

Mr. DAVIS. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. FOOT. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

BARNEY CAIN.

Mr. FOOT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Barney Cain, praying that the bounty may be paid him which would have been due his deceased son, Henry N. Cain, a private in the eighth regiment Vermont volunteers, had he lived to be mustered out of the United States service, have had it under consideration, and have directed me to report a bill. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage if there be no objection. It is only for the payment of a bounty of $100.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Barney Cain was read three times. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Barney Cain, of Rutland, Vermont, the sum of $100, that being the bounty to which his son Henry M. Cain, who had enlisted as a private in the eighth regiment Vermont volunteers, for the term of three years, would have been entitled by law, had he lived to have been formally mustered into the United States service, but who sickened and died after his enlistment, and without being mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. FOOT. The case in one word is this: the son of the petitioner enlisted as a volunteer in the military service of the country, for three years, rendezvousing at Rutland for the time, and being drilled in the company to which he was attached for several days; but he was taken sick and died before the regiment to which he was attached was regularly mustered into service. Had he lived until that time, which occurred a few days after, and been regularly mustered in, he would have been entitled to $100 bounty under the act of 1862. The committee have recognized cases similar to this before them as coming within the spirit and equity, though not strictly within the letter, of the law. The father, who is a man in indigent circumstances, and of whom this son was the main support and reliance, asks for the $100 to which his son would have been entitled had he lived a week longer and been in health and been mustered in the United States service. There are several precedents, three or four, that came before the same committee and have been recognized by them, and have passed Congress, as coming within the equity and spirit of the act though not within its letter.

The bill was passed.

ADDRESSES ON MR. COLLAMER'S DEATH.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print the addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives on the occasion of the death of the late Senator Collamer, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be published in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate, six thousand copies of the addresses made by the members of the Senate and members of the House of Representatives, upon the occasion of the announcement of the death of Hon. Jacob Collamer.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island, who reports this resolution, if it is in accordance with former precedents. My impression is that since I became a member of the Senate this matter was discussed at some length, and the Senate came to the conclusion that they would not publish the obituary addresses delivered on the occasion of the death of members of the Senate. I know that was the conclusion at that time. It is a very delicate matter to object to a proposition of this kind; but as the Senator whose decease is commemorated was my friend, and I feel as kindly toward his memory, I am sure, and as high a regard for it as any member of the Senate, and as I listened with great admiration to the eulogies which were pronounced on him, I feel that it is no breach of propriety to call the attention of the Senate to this subject. As I have stated, I recollect a discussion in regard to it in the Senate. I am not aware whether the rule then adopted has been departed from or not, but at that time the Senate came to the conclusion that they would not make such publications.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the case of Governor Hicks, at the last session, it was departed from.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the precedents are contrary to what I supposed, I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. FOOT. The Senator will recollect that in the case of his own colleague, Judge Douglas, a very large edition of the obituary notices was published by order of the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My impression was just the reverse.

Mr. FOOT. In that case a large edition was published, at least five thousand copies.

Mr. ANTHONY. The precedent was established, I believe, before I came into the Senate, upon a test vote, not to publish addresses of this kind. Afterward in the first case where there was a departure from it, on the occasion of the death of Mr. Douglas, the Committee on Printing reported the resolution, if I recollect aright, without any recommendation, not being willing to depart from the precedent which had been established, and yet thinking it was an occasion where the Senate might choose so to depart; and the Senate by a very decided majority voted to print the addresses. Afterward, on the next similar occasion, the Committee on Printing reported in the same way, without any recommendation, leaving it for the Senate to decide whether they would print the addresses or not. The Senate having in both cases decided to print them, the committee thought the precedent was established, so far as the judgment of the Senate was concerned at the time, and have reported this resolution in accordance with what they supposed to be the usage of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I think that during the four years I have been here no obituary notices have been published in a distinct volume separate from their appearance in the Congressional Globe.

Mr. FOOT. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. POMEROY. If I am mistaken I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. FOOT. In the case of Governor Hicks, at the last session, just referred to by the Senator from Maryland, they were printed by order of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I have never had the books; they have not been distributed. Other Senators about me say they have not received them.

Mr. JOHNSON. They were all published.

Mr. POMEROY. I know that in the case of the lamented Baker, the subject was discussed here somewhat, and the obituary addresses were not published. If, however, we ever published them, I should be glad to do it in this case. My own impression was that our precedents have been against it, at least since I have been in the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Twice the committee have reported resolutions of this kind without any recommendation, so as to take the sense of the Senate upon them, and in both cases the Senate passed the resolutions. The committee therefore thought it would be the pleasure of the Senate to do so in this case.

Mr. COWAN. I certainly have no wish to prevent the public promulgation of any mark of respect to the late Judge Collamer; but I think, in view of the financial difficulties of the country at the present time, that it must impress itself upon the minds of all men that we should be economical, and that we should expend no more money than is absolutely necessary; and if we are even to begin a system of retrenchment we ought to begin now and here. Is this expense necessary? Is this one of the necessary publications of this body, or is it one which is simply complimentary? If it were necessary, absolutely necessary, I would agree to the publication; but believing that it is not so, I am here in my place to oppose it.

And, sir, I would go further; I would abolish nine tenths of the printing that is done in both Houses of Congress, because I consider it a mere expenditure without any value received to the country. Nine tenths of the documents that are published here, and distributed to and among the people are little more than waste paper; and I think I only express the universal sentiment of the people when I say that this system has been carried to a length of which they utterly disapprove, and that they look upon it merely as a means by which a representative puts himself in connection with certain favorite constituents of his, and keeps them in mind of their allegiance to him; or in other words, that all these publications are simply electioneering machines. I have no doubt that if there be a publication of which the country desires the distribution, the people would willingly pay for it if it was furnished to them at cost, and I think it is time we should begin to retrench and begin to retrench here, because if we do not, in my judgment, we shall be obliged to do it at a time when it may be much more unpleasant than at present.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the dearth of business, I suppose we may discuss a question of this sort a little as well as any other. I remember very well the history of all this matter. As I have been here a good many years this subject has become quite familiar to me. When I came here the Senate was in the habit, whenever an individual member of the body died while a member, of publishing, in the form of a book, the obituary addresses delivered on the occasion. I do not know with whom the practice began, but my impression is that it began with Mr. Clay, though it might have been before. The books were got up in handsome style and large numbers were distributed. It began with the idea that it would be well to publish in this form obituary notices of very eminent gentlemen whose fame filled the country and the world, but it soon got to be a practice, whenever a member of the body died, to get up a book on the occasion. This came to be considered unnecessary, and at last it created a discussion. I remember taking part in that discussion myself, and very strenuously and decidedly opposing such publications. The result was that the Senate refused to publish such addresses in certain cases, and this refusal was adhered to in several instances. I understand, however, that recently such publications have been made, and they may have passed even within my observation, for the Senate will reflect that a man at last gets tired of fighting these things time after time; they are regularly brought up again and again, and at last perseverance accomplishes the purpose, and the publication is made.

I do not rise now for the sake of opposing or supporting the proposed publication, because while my general opinion has been against them all, I think if there ever was a case in which the individual deserved that honors should be paid to his memory, such as have been paid even to the most eminent and the most distinguished, those honors are due to the memory of our late colleague, Judge Collamer. So feeling, I am not disposed to interpose any objection of my own anew in this individual case, while I retain all my original opinions as to the practice.

A word now, sir, in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN.] He is comparatively a young Senator; and if he would only compare our publications now with those of eight or ten years ago, he would be astonished to find how much we have improved in that particular. It used to be the habit to publish (judging by space) almost acres of large books, adorned with engravings of all sorts and descriptions. That has been put an end to; the Senate has refused of late to have anything to do with publications of that kind. At the present time, I believe, we publish very few books, and those only the President's message and accompanying documents, the Globe, the Agricultural Report, the Treasury Report, and a few others of that description which must be published, and which the community desire to see; and an effort has been made to reduce the expenses even of publishing the message and documents by printing a comparatively small number of the entire documents, and furnishing abstracts instead of the complete volumes which were formerly printed.

There has been a very great improvement in this particular; I hope to see more; but I cannot agree with the Senator that nine tenths of all we publish is utterly useless. There may be some of the matter published that might be dispensed with and the expense of which might be spared; but, as a general rule, I think the Senate and the House of Representatives have now got to a very reasonable state of mind in reference to publications, and I hope it will continue. As to these publications being electioneering documents, I have nothing to say. I have never so used them. If the Senator has derived any benefit from using them in that way, he probably speaks from his own experience. I hope the remark will not be applied to me.

Mr. COWAN. Of course I cannot tell what my honorable friend from Maine does with his public documents. I know very well what I do with mine. I believe I have never kept a list of friends and retainers, as is very common, to whom to send documents. I send them to the persons who write to me desiring to have them; but I have to say with regard to a great many documents which are published, even Patent Office Reports, and Reports on the Commercial Relations of the Country, that so far as I am able to understand the feeling of the people in regard to them, they consider them merely waste paper. If there has been an improvement recently in this matter of publishing books, I have only to say that I do not think they have improved the books, because anciently when scientific works and works upon explorations were published the books were valuable, and valuable to the community generally, but those that are now lumbering every shelf almost in the country are seldom ever opened and looked at.

I have not yet heard what is the argument in favor of publishing this book; nor do I see any necessity for it, because I have no doubt that all the fine things that were said on the occasion referred to have been in the newspapers all over the country; and what the book can be supposed to achieve in the way of enlightening the public I am not able to see. It will cost a certain sum of money, and the public will have to pay it, and one out of every ten thousand of them, perhaps, may get a book—no, not one out of every ten thousand. Taxes are levied upon the people equally, and yet who gets the books? Even the books that are necessary to be published are not distributed among the people equally; they are given to the favorites of those members who have the distribution of them in their hands; and I think that if there has been reform heretofore it would be well that there should be a good deal more, and the country will be the better for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Since calling attention to the resolution under consideration, I have referred to the Senate Journal, and I find that at the last session of Congress two thousand copies of the obituary addresses delivered on the occasion of the death of Thomas Holliday Hicks were ordered to be printed by the Senate; and the former precedent in printing these addresses having been departed from, I think there are none more deserving to be preserved in pamphlet form than those delivered on the occasion of the death of our late friend, and I myself shall interpose no objection to the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. CRESWELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution from the House of Representatives with regard to the adjournment over the holidays. I do so with a view to moving that the Senate recede from its amendments, and I propose afterward to make a motion that the Senate adopt the original resolution of the House of Representatives as it came from that House.

The motion to take up the subject was agreed to, and the message from the House was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 19, 1865.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the Senate's amendments to the above resolution, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Messrs. ELIUT B. WASHBURN of Illinois, J. F. WILSON of Iowa, and E. R. V. WRIGHT of New Jersey, be the managers of the conference on the part of this House.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move that the Senate recede from all its amendments to the original resolution.

Messrs. FESSENDEN and CLARK called for the yeas and nays on that motion, and they were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is it in order to move, instead of the motion made by the Senator from Maryland, that the Senate concur in the request of the House for a committee of conference?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to recede is first in order, and takes precedence of the other motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Stewart, Stockton, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Wilson—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Pomerooy, Salisbury, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, and Williams—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Doolittle, Wright, and Yates—4.

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendments.

Mr. FOOT. I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. How shall the committee be appointed?

Mr. FOOT. By the Chair.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent, and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. TRUMBULL, Mr. CLARK, and Mr. BUCKALEW the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the committee of conference, subsequently submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution "that when the Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday the 20th instant, they adjourn to meet on Tuesday the 9th of January," having met, after full and free conference do recommend to their respective Houses the following as a substitute for the resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Thursday the 21st instant, they adjourn to meet on Friday, January 5, 1866.

ELIUT B. WASHBURN,
JAMES F. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
LYMAN TRUMBULL,
DANIEL CLARK,
C. R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted, and a message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, afterward announced that the House had agreed to the report.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 47) to amend an act supplementary to the act approved July 1, 1864, for the disposal of coal lands and of town property in the public domain be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint assistant assessors of internal revenue; and

A bill (H. R. No. 61) to establish certain post roads.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution of the Senate (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence, clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes.

PROTECTION OF FREEDMEN.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 9) to maintain the freedom of the inhabitants in the States declared in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862.

Mr. SUMNER. When I think of what occurred yesterday in this Chamber; when I call to mind the attempt to whitewash the unhappy condition of the rebel States, and to throw the mantle of official oblivion over sickening and heart-rending outrages, where Human Rights are sacrificed and rebel Barbarism receives a new letter of license, I feel that I ought to speak of nothing else. I stood here years ago, in the days of Kansas, when a small community was surrendered to the machinations of slave-masters. I now stand here again, when, alas! an immense region, with millions of people, has been surrendered to the machinations of slave-masters. Sir, it is the duty of Congress to arrest this fatal fury. Congress must dare to be brave; it must dare to be just. But I shall not be diverted from the question before the Senate, although, in unfolding the necessity of present legislation for the protection of the freedmen, I shall be led necessarily and logically to speak of the condition of the rebel States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and by the rule of the Senate, a motion of that sort does not open the general merits of the question.

Mr. SUMNER. I have always understood in this body that on a general question of reference the whole subject was open. If the question is put as between two committees, then I certainly accept the decision of the Chair; but if the question be one of general reference, I submit that the whole subject is open.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is a motion concerning the order of business. That motion, as the Chair understands the rules, does not open the general merits of the question, but remarks upon that question should be confined to the reasons why it should or should not be referred to the particular committee named.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the Senator from Massachusetts be permitted to proceed in his own way on this subject. There is nothing pressing upon the Senate to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not interrupt the Senator except to state what the question was.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope there will be no objection to his proceeding.

Mr. SUMNER. I come, then, to the precise question.

All must admit that the bill of my colleague is excellent in purpose. It proposes nothing less than to establish Equality before the Law, at least so far as civil rights are concerned, in the rebel States. This is done simply to carry out and maintain the Proclamation of Emancipation, by which this Republic is solemnly pledged to maintain the emancipated slave in his freedom. Such is our pledge: "and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons." This pledge is without any limitation in space or time. It is as extended and as immortal as the Republic itself. Does anybody call it vain words? I trust not. To that pledge we are solemnly bound. Wherever our flag floats as long as time endures we must see that it is sacredly observed.

But the performance of that pledge cannot be entrusted to another; least of all, can it be intrusted to the old slave-masters, embittered against their slaves. It must be performed by the national Government. The power that gave freedom must see that this freedom is maintained. This is according to reason. It is also according to the examples of history. In the British West Indies we find this teaching. Three of England's greatest orators and statesmen, Burke, Canning, and Brougham, at successive periods united in declaring, from the experience in the British West Indies, that whatever the slave-masters undertook to do for their slaves was always "arrant trifling," and that, whatever might be its plausible form, it always wanted "the executive principle." More recently the Emperor of Russia, when ordering Emancipation, declared that all efforts of his predecessors in this direction had failed because they had been left to "the spontaneous initiative of the proprietors." I might say much more on this head, but this is enough. I assume that no such blunder will be made on our part; that we shall not leave to the old proprietors the maintenance of that freedom to which we are pledged, and thus break our own promises and sacrifice a race.

I have already alluded to Emancipation in Russia. But this example is worthy our deepest study, unless we purposely reject history. All know that in 1861 the Emperor, by solemn Proclamation, gave freedom to upward of twenty-three million serfs; but it is not generally known by what supplementary provisions this freedom was secured.

I have in my hands an official copy of this great act, published at St. Petersburg, by which it is declared that the serfs, after an interval of two years, are "entirely enfranchised." Under this Proclamation, a new set of local magistrates was constituted, with "special court" and "justices of the peace" in each district, to superintend the working of the Proclamation and to examine on the spot all questions arising from Emancipation. This provision was not unlike our Bureau of Freedmen, which is thus vindicated by this example.

But the good work did not stop here. The Emperor did not leave the freedmen without protection, handed over to the tender mercies of their former owners. By a careful series of "regulations" accompanying the Proclamation, prepared with infinite care, and divided into chapters and sections, the rights of the freedmen are secured beyond question. I hold a copy of this remarkable document in my hand. Here it is, a model for our imitation.

These "regulations" begin with the formal declaration that the freedmen, by the act of Emancipation, "acquire the rights belonging to free farmers." The language is general. It is "the rights of free farmers," not in certain particulars, but in all particulars; not merely in exemption from the authority of their masters, but in complete enfranchisement. Surely here is an example for us.

The "regulations" then proceed in formal words to fix and assure these rights civil and political. These rights are not left to inference or to future discussion; but they are positively declared with all possible detail.

By one section the freedman is secured in all his rights of family and rights of contract, as follows:

"The articles of the Civil Code on the rights and obligations of the family are extended to the freedmen; consequently they acquire the right, without the authorization of the proprietor, to contract marriage, and to make any arrangement whatever concerning their family affairs; they can equally enter into all agreements and obligations authorized by the laws, as well with the State as with individuals, on the conditions established for free farmers; they can inscribe themselves in the guilds, and exercise their trades in the villages; and they can found and conduct factories and establishments of commerce."

Surely here is an example for us.

By another section the freedman is secured in rights of property. He may acquire and alienate property of all kinds, according to the general law; and, besides, "the possession of the homestead" on which he has lived is guaranteed to him on certain conditions. Surely here is an example for us.

By another section the freedman is secured complete Equality in the courts, as follows:

"He shall have the right of action whether civilly or criminally, to commence process, and to answer personally or by attorney; to make complaint, and to defend his rights by all the means known to the law, and to appear as witness and as bail conformably to the common law."

Mark these words. He may appear "as witness and as bail." Surely here is an example for us.

By other sections the freedman is secured Equality in political rights, according to the measure of such rights in Russia, thus:

"On the organization of the towns, he shall be entitled to take part in the meetings and elections for the towns, and to vote on town affairs, and to exercise divers functions; and he shall also take part in the assemblies for the district, and shall vote on district affairs, and choose the chairman."

From all the provisions on this head, it appears that the freedman enjoys rights to choose the local officers, and to be chosen in turn. Surely here is an example for us.

By still another section the freedman is secured Equality at schools and in Education; thus:

"He may place his children in the establishments for public education, to embrace the career of instruction, or the scientific career, or to take service in the corps of surveyors."

Surely here again is an example for us.

Then, again, for the general protection of the freedman it is provided that he "cannot lose his rights or be restrained in their exercise, except after the judgment of the town according to fixed rules;" and still further, that he "cannot be subjected to any punishment, otherwise than by notice of a judgment, or according to the legal decision of the town to which he belongs." Surely here again is an example to us.

Thus does Russia by careful provisions, supplementary to the act of Emancipation, secure her freedmen in all their rights; first, in the right of family and the right of contract; secondly, in the right of property, including a homestead; thirdly, in complete Equality in the courts; fourthly, in Equality in political rights; fifthly, in Equality at schools and in Education; and, finally, all these safeguards are crowned by declaring that they cannot lose their rights or be punished except after judgment according to fixed rules; thus completely fulfilling that requirement of our fathers, that "government should be a government of laws and not of men."

I trust that this example is none the less worthy of imitation because it is that of an empire, which is not supposed to sympathize with liberal ideas. Surely a republic cannot in this respect lag behind an empire. Besides, all that we hear shows that the experiment has been successful. Clearly an experiment inspired so completely by the spirit of justice cannot fail.

My colleague is clearly right in introducing his bill and pressing it to a vote. The argument for it is irresistible. It is essential to complete Emancipation. Without it Emancipation will be only half done. It is our duty to see that it is wholly done. Slavery must be abolished not in form only, but in substance, so that there shall be no Black Code; but all shall be Equal before the Law.

As to the power of Congress over this question I cannot doubt it. My colleague assumes the power without professing to trace it to any particular source. It may be a military power precisely as the Proclamation of Emancipation, and here the authority is as clear and absolute as in the District of Columbia, or it may be in pursuance of the Constitutional Amendment, which provides that Congress may "enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation;" or it may be to carry out the guarantee of a republican form of government.

There are measures of my own, already introduced by me, now on your table, looking to the same result as the pending bill, which proceed specifically on the two latter grounds.

One of these is entitled "A bill supplying appropriate legislation to enforce the amendment of the Constitution." From this bill I read two sections:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in further enforcement of the provision of the Constitution prohibiting slavery, and in order to remove all relics of this wrong from the States where this constitutional prohibition takes effect, it is hereby declared that all laws or customs in such States establishing any oligarchical privileges and any distinction of rights on account of color or race are hereby annulled, and all persons in such States are recognized as equal before the law; and the penalties provided in the last section are hereby made applicable to any violation of this provision, which is made in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in further enforcement of the provision of the Constitution aforesaid, the courts of the United States in the States aforesaid shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all offenses committed by persons not of African descent upon persons of African descent; also of all offenses committed by persons of African descent; and also of all causes, suits, and demands to which any person of African descent shall be a party; and it is hereby declared that all such cases are to be treated as cases arising under the Constitution of the United States.

This bill, of course, proceeds on the idea that the amendment is now a part of the Constitution to all intents and purposes. And who can doubt this conclusion? It has been already adopted by "the Legislatures of three fourths of the States," in other words by three fourths of the States having Legislatures. The States having no Legislatures at the time of its proposition by Congress are not to be counted. Of what value can be the enforced consent of the disloyal and barbarous bodies that have pretended to act for certain States at the dictation of military power? Military power may govern during the war, but it is impotent to make a republican State or to give assent to an amendment of the Constitution.

Another bill introduced by me, and now on the table, is founded on the guarantee clause. It is brief, and will explain itself:

A bill in part execution of the guarantee of a republican form of government in the Constitution of the United States.

Whereas it is declared in the Constitution that the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government; and whereas certain States have allowed their governments to be subverted by rebellion, so that the duty is now cast upon Congress of executing this guarantee: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all States lately declared to be in rebellion there shall be no oligarchy, invested with peculiar privileges and powers, and there shall be no denial of rights, civil or political, on account of color or race; but all persons shall be equal before the law, whether in the court-room or at the ballot-box. And this statute, made in pursuance of the Constitution, shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any such State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Both these bills are broader even than that of my colleague; for they point to the absolute obliteration of all legal discriminations founded on color, whether in the court-room or at the ballot-box, and to this conclusion we must come at last. But I confess that I feel the dignity, the grandeur, and the substantial value, which would be found in a declaration of Congress that an oligarchical government, which denied rights to a whole race; which undertook to tax without representation; and which discarded the "consent of the governed" as its just foundation, cannot be a "republican form of government."

The most explicit, the most positive, the most mandatory words in the Constitution are, "the United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government." This great duty is thrown not upon any individual branch of the Government, but upon the United States. It is a duty "to guaranty"—which in itself is a strong term—what? A republican form of government. Now, by the lapse of State governments in the rebel States, this duty is cast upon the United States. But the United States are represented in Congress, or rather by an act of Congress, which in itself is the embodied will of both Houses of Congress, and of the President of the United States. Congress must, therefore, determine, what is a republican form of government? Into this question I do not now enter. At the proper time I hope to consider it. I content myself now by saying, that it is absurd to say that a community, which is founded on oligarchical pretensions, and which excludes from all participation in the government any considerable proportion of its tax-paying citizens, and ignores the consent of the governed, can be considered a republican form of government. On this proposition I hope to be heard at an early day. Here is one of the greatest questions of our history.

And now after this brief review of the object proposed to be accomplished, I am brought to consider the practical necessity of such legislation; and here it is my duty to expose the actual condition of the rebel States, especially as regards loyalty and the treatment of the freedmen. On this head I shall adduce evidence in my possession. In the endeavor to bring what I say within reasonable proportions, I shall adduce only a small part of what has passed under my eye; but it will be more than enough. In bringing it forward the difficulty is of selection and abridgment.

I shall begin with something relating to the condition of the rebel States generally, and shall then proceed to consider the different States successively.

And now, first, as to the rebel States generally. I know no testimony which has found its way to the public, with regard to the general condition of the South, which will compare in value with a series of letters by A. Warren Kelsey, a cotton agent of character and intelligence above question, who has traveled through the rebel States. His communications with his employers show singular powers of observation, and are expressed with great clearness. Of course I can only give a few extracts:

"In traveling about as I have, from one section of the country to the other, I have been able to compare opinions, and, as you know, I have had peculiar and favorable opportunities for ascertaining the views they have in common. I have endeavored to trace the motives from which they have acted and which now animate them, and their real purpose for the future, if they have one. In giving you my opinion now, it is proper to say that I have taken no one individual as a criterion of the whole, and have judged them only by the opinions I find they are generally agreed upon; neither have I any one's statement for their thoughts and actions. My opinions, deductions, and conclusions are derived from my own experience and observation among them, and whether they shall be confirmed or denied by others, are, notwithstanding, my honest and sincere convictions."

"While I am able to say that they have made up their minds that emancipation is a fact, and not to be avoided, I am obliged to state my earnest opinion that so far as secession is concerned, that is, the doctrine of State rights, it is more deeply rooted than ever among them. They are perfectly united in the belief that the division of this country is both right from a moral stand-point, and politic as a measure of expediency. They have simply changed their base from the battle-field to the ballot-box, believing, as they very frankly admit, that greater triumphs await them there than they could ever hope for in the field. In almost every house hangs the old, worn confederate uniform, which is displayed with pride and satisfaction to all comers. So far from repenting of the stand they took, they glory in it. They regret the result, and their non-success, it is true, but not one in a thousand will admit they were in the wrong."

"They argue that at least ninety-five in every two hundred votes at the North are sure to be thrown in their favor, and they can now rule the Union by giving up, which is cheaper than to persist in their idea of a separate Government. That idea, however, is only laid aside for a time. Every boy at the South is being educated in the belief that the relations the South to-day sustains toward the North, are the same as those of Hungary or Venetia toward Austria, or of Poland to Russia. They bide their time. They have adopted for their motto 'Patience, and shuffle the cards.' The snake, so far from being killed, is barely 'scotched.' Meantime, they deem it better to rule in the Union than to serve in the confederate army."

"As to their affection for their military leaders, you will find proof in the elections at Richmond and in South Carolina. No man has a better claim to their sympathy, and none stand a better chance of election, than those who were the last to give up. Motives of policy may induce them to nominate others, but the fact remains as I have stated. I repeat, that General Lee and Wade Hampton are the two most popular and best-loved men in the South to-day. I have heard but one disparaging remark made of General Lee since I was at the South, and that was in this connection: I was riding one night in a hack across the gap in a railway, made by Wilson, and, as usual, the conversation turned on political affairs and the condition and prospects of the southern people. One man said that General Lee stood the best chance for the next Presidency—by the way, that is a very prevalent idea here at the South—when another remarked that he would rather have Andrew Johnson. I was curious to know why, and inquired. He replied, that he had had little confidence in Lee since he favored negro soldiers, and in his opinion he was not much better than a Black Republican."

"At present every one at the South is occupied in his personal and family interests. There are no political parties; very little coherence of opinion as to the policy best to be pursued. But I find among the knowing ones, particularly those who have been on to the North, and remained some time in New York or Washington, a sanguine belief that they can easily resume the reins of office, and these men are the only Unionists in the South to-day. You can depend upon it, that the southern States in the future will present one solid, unanimous front; their leaders have them well in hand. And this is precisely what ninety-nine in every hundred of the men, women, and children believe sincerely as to the situation to-day: first, that the South of right possesses and always possessed the right of secession; secondly, that the war only proved that the North was the strongest; thirdly, that negro slavery was and is right, but has been abolished by the war. The southerners are too smart not to see that slavery is dead, but many of them hope as long as the black race exists here to be able to hold it in a condition of practical serfdom. All expect the negro will be killed in one way or another by emancipation. The policy of those who will eventually become the leaders here at the South, is, for the present, to accept the best they can get, to acquiesce in anything and everything, but to strain every nerve to regain the political power and ascendancy they held under Buchanan. This they believe cannot be postponed longer than up to the next presidential election.

They will do all in their power to resist negro suffrage, and to reduce taxation and expenditures, and would attack the national debt if they saw any reason to believe repudiation possible. They will continue to assert the inferiority of the African, and they would to-day, if possible, precipitate the United States into a foreign war, believing they could then reassert and obtain their independence. They will, most of them, take any oaths you may cause to be adopted, and break them immediately, and without scruple. In one word, this people have placed themselves in resolute antagonism to the North, and this generation, at least, will always hate the northern people, while the boys are being educated to the same idea."

"On the whole, looking at the affair from all sides, it amounts to just this: if the northern people are content to be ruled over by the southerners they will continue in the Union; if not, the first chance they get they will rise again. I venture the prediction that within five years they will either be in power, or will be fighting us again. If the first, God help New England!"

Other testimony is in harmony. For instance a trustworthy traveler who has recently traversed the Gulf States, thus writes in a private letter to myself:

"The former masters exhibit a most cruel, remorseless, and vindictive spirit toward the colored people. In parts where there are no Union soldiers, I saw colored women treated in the most outrageous manner. They have no rights that are respected. They are killed, and their bodies thrown into ponds or mud-holes. They are mutilated by having ears and noses cut off."

Of course such a people already talk of repudiating the national debt. To the question, "Would it be safe to trust white men at the South with the power to repudiate the national debt?" a person in gray uniform at once replied, "Repudiate! I should hope they would. I'm whipped, and I'll own it; but I'm not so fond of a whipping that I'm going to pay a man's expenses while he gives it to me. Of course there are not ten men in the whole South that wouldn't repudiate!" Such is the spirit of these States. But a candidate for Congress in Virginia undertook to speak for the rebel States, as follows:

"I am opposed to the southern States being taxed at all for the redemption of this debt, either directly or indirectly; and, if elected to Congress, I will oppose all such measures, and I will vote to repeal all laws that have heretofore been passed for that purpose; and, in doing so, I do not consider that I violate any obligations to which the South was a party. We have never pledged our faith for the redemption of the war debt. The people will be borne down with taxes for years to come, even if the war debt is repudiated. It will be the duty of the Government to support the maimed and disabled soldiers, and this will be a great expense; and if the United States Government requires the South to be taxed for the support of Union soldiers, we should insist that all disabled soldiers should be maintained by the United States Government, without regard to the side they had taken in the war."

A late writer, who within a few days has returned from an extensive tour in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, and who now enjoys a seat in your reporters' gallery, thus testifies with regard to the national debt:

"The national debt doubtless seems to you beyond the reach of any hand. Yet I regard it as very probable that one or two or all of three things will be attempted within three years after the southern members of Congress are admitted to seats—the repudiation of the national debt, the assumption of the confederate debt, or the payment of several hundred million dollars to the South for property destroyed and slaves emancipated. I met several shrewd and intelligent men who expressed the belief that confederate bonds will be worth something in two or three years. One told me that large amounts were held in New York and England, and he expected steps would be taken within five years toward paying them from the national Treasury. I heard no man openly advocate the repudiation of the national debt, but scores argued to me that it would not be fair to make the South pay any part of it; and one man said he believed, if the case were only carried up, that the Supreme Court would so decide. The idea that the nation will pay the South for her slaves extensively prevails both in Georgia and South Carolina. It is incorporated into the new constitution of Georgia, and is openly advocated by many influential men in South Carolina. Wherefore, I say, the national debt needs watching."

Let the Secretary of the Treasury take notice, and not expose the national finances to the peril which menaces them.

Passing from this testimony, which is general, I come to the neighbor State of VIRGINIA. I read from a private letter which I have received from a Government officer there:

"We who are here have a much better opportunity of knowing the feeling of the people than you at a distance, for they will not speak as freely before you as they will before us here and among themselves. The feeling of disloyalty is as strong here now as it was during the war, but they cannot show it as they did then; and with regard to the freedmen there is every disposition on their part to make them odious. They constantly talk of insurrection, insubordination, thieving, idleness, and every species of crime and vice; all of which I assure you is entirely false. They are perfectly subordinate to every law, and, so far as thieving is concerned, such an assertion is gratuitous or false, for all cases of thieving, certainly, I am sorry to say, are done by the whites."

I also read from another private letter:

"The clash of arms has subsided, the serried hosts of rebels have been disbanded, and the huge paraphernalia of war have been scattered; but, notwithstanding these facts, the low mutterings of sullen discontent are yet heard, and the desire to persecute and break down all truly loyal men is exhibited on every hand with even more sly ferocity than while the war of sections raged."

We are residents of this city, each engaged in public business, and consequently thrown into contact with all classes of citizens. Hourly we hear denunciations of the Government and prayers for the removal of the military. And why these denunciations and these prayers if the oath of allegiance had been honestly taken to be sacredly observed? No, gentlemen, the spirit of rebellion is not dead, and will never die while Democratic leaders in the South are relieved of their treachery and turned loose to stir up sedition and incite rebellion. They make loud professions of loyalty, and their press reverberates the echo from hill and valley, but you have only to read their fanfarones on loyalty to satisfy yourselves of the bitter hatred that fills their breasts against the Union, and the burning hate with which they will proceed to pour out the vials of their wrath upon all Union men, when once they can secure seats in Congress and get possession of the reins of State government. In their hearts they cling as ardently to State sovereignty as ever, and once give them the power and they will tax the loyal people to the full value of the slave property destroyed by the war. Mark this prediction."

Another private letter from a person so situated as to be singularly well informed, thus foreshadows a system of Peonage:

"The necessity of the courts is beyond all question. Even with these courts it requires watchfulness to protect the blacks. If they were left without these courts the whites would keep them forever in bondage by keeping them in debt, and I am afraid that the legislation of the States will be to the effect to establish here the Mexican system of Peonage by using some very extraordinary terms to coerce 'hatched-up' accounts against the blacks."

To this I might add indefinitely, exhibiting the bad temper and disloyal spirit which prevail throughout Virginia. Bayonets are no longer flashing there; bullets are no longer whizzing there; but the traitorous soul that inspired the rebellion still fills the State with its malignant breath. Do not, I entreat you, allow it to rile.

From Virginia pass to NORTH CAROLINA. Here the testimony is the same. During this week I have seen Government officers who have been in service, one of them since 1863, who report that it is not safe to speak one's sentiments there; that liberty of speech does not exist; that the freedmen, so far from being lazy or remiss, are willing to work, but that they are exposed to unutterable hardship and cruelty. On these points the testimony is explicit. A loyal resident of North Carolina writes me as follows:

"I tell you, sir, the only difference now and one year ago is that the flag is acknowledged as supreme, and there is some fear manifested, and they have no arms. The sentiment is the same. If anything otherwise, more hatred exists toward the Government. I know there is more toward Union men, both black and white."

More hatred toward the Union men, both white and black, than there was one year ago! Such is the condition of North Carolina.

In harmony with this is other testimony:

"Two women school-teachers who were recently sent from Wilmington to Fayetteville to establish a school for colored children, were informed by the sheriff of the county that they would not be allowed to start their schools, nor would they be allowed to land; but they might remain on the steamer until her return to Wilmington, inasmuch as they were women; if they were men they would receive such treatment as was awarded to such middle-class characters before the war."

Mr. Dickinson says that while he was in Fayetteville a negro was strung up by the thumbs in the public square and received forty-nine lashes from a civil officer recently appointed by Governor Holden."

A Wilmington paper makes the following report:

"General Ames, General Duncan, and Colonel Donelson, have returned from an official visit to Fayetteville, where they went to ascertain the truth of the reports coming from there in regard to the treatment of the colored people."

The result of their visit substantiates the fact that the negroes have been cruelly treated, not only by the civilians, but also by the civil authorities there.

"Two negroes were tied up and publicly whipped by the sheriff, on the sentence of a magistrate."

"Other negroes were tied up to trees and whipped, and left tied to the trees until a storm came up and prostrated the trees, and the poor negroes fell with them."

"Citizens exercised the authority of masters over the negroes, and punished them at their will with such severity as to them seemed fit."

"It is even reported that negroes have been killed in the most cruel manner."

But why heap these instances? They might be piled high; but why pain your hearts by such an exhibition?

From North Carolina pass to SOUTH CAROLINA, where the testimony is, if possible, still more explicit. The spirit of this rebel State, still rebel in heart, appears in the well-known letter from Wade Hampton, which I do not stop to quote. It also appears in the frank speech of James R. Campbell in the convention, from which I read an extract:

"I believe that when our votes are admitted into that Congress, if we are tolerably wise, governed by a moderate share of common sense, we will have our own way. I am speaking now not to be reported. We will have our own way yet, if we are true to ourselves. We know the past, we know not what is to be our future. Are we not in a condition to accept what we cannot help? Are we not in a condition where it is the part of wisdom to wait and give what we cannot avoid giving? I believe as surely as we are a people, so surely, if we are guided by wisdom, we will be the beginning of the next presidential election which is all that is known of the Constitution—for when you talk of the Constitution of the United States it means the presidential election and the share of the spoils—I believe then we may hold the balance of power."

That Mr. Campbell spoke according to the sentiments of the prevailing politicians is attested by a private letter which I have received from a Government officer there who is so situated as to know the real condition of things. I read extracts only:

"The speeches in convention and Legislature are doubtless known to you, and the animus pervading all action of these bodies. Mr. Campbell expressed it exactly. Let us do what we have to, as little as we are obliged to, get into Congress somehow, and then pay off the score. One or two minor matters in this connection I mention as showing how the current sets."

"1. The election for members of convention, 4th September. The favorites in every contested case were those most prominent in secession proceedings of past years. The majority of them did not take the amnesty oath."

"2. Not even the prospect of securing a favorable recognition in Congress could secure the election of any man tainted with Unionism, in opposition to any candidate thoroughly established as an opponent to the Government in past time."

"3. And yet, strange as it may seem, the people, by which I mean the planters generally, exclusive of the politicians, are not savagely disloyal, and this is one main point to which I desire earnestly to testify. It is a fact that the political working of the State is in the hands of one hundred and fifty to one hundred and eighty men. It has taken me six months to appreciate the entireness of the fact, though of course I had heard it stated."

"It seems to me a most providential opportunity is now offered to break up this mal-administration of politics. The people among whom I move are becoming restive under present disadvantages, and criticize sharply the acts of the Legislature which seem to delay reconstruction. If the State is refused representation in the present Congress, and the acts of the State Legislature, its speeches, its Black Code, its general fractious and combative attitude, its spirit in accepting the constitutional amendment and refusing the annulment of secession ordinances; if, in a word, it can be shown that the long-recognized politicians of the State have thoroughly damaged the State by taking her out of the Union, and have also kept her from coming in, there will be a political revolution in the State in less than two months. There is so promptly pardoned by the President will meet no such complacency from the people. I know this to be true; am taught it anew every day."

"If the State authority is to be recognized, and the present Legislature triumphs by forcing the State into the Union, I anticipate very disastrous consequences. The freed people are well enough; they do not know as much as could be desired, but they know quite as much as could be expected, and are open to instruction. But that instruction must come from the Government, through the military, untrammelled by any fractious jarring of State Legislatures. There is no confidence on the part of the freed people in the State; they only know the United States Government, and no other will answer."

Here is a letter from a South Carolinian who served in the rebel army, but who now sees the error of his ways:

"I am sorry to say Governor Orr's inaugural yesterday received no applause at all from the audience; its sentiments were too Union-loving for them. I am sorry also to say that the South Carolinians generally entertain to a great extent their old ideas and prejudices so disastrous of late to the State. One is almost compelled to think they insidiously wish to bring upon themselves more and greater mortifications. Witness the vote given Hampton, who refused to be a candidate."

What an unwise display of a factious and discontented spirit! Few seem willing to admit the simple proposition that all causes of ill-feeling between North and South have been settled by the arbitration of the sword, and we must submit sincerely. They seek rather to keep alive the ill-feeling that has made us unhappy for so many years, and that ill-advised disposition to supervise the actions of the United States Government."

"If this war does not settle all issues, and settle them forever, it will be because the General Government fails to use the power it has obtained. I am as dear a lover of South Carolina as any man in it, and for that reason I wish to see peace and harmony restored throughout its borders. But that can never be if the men who tried hardest to break up the Government are immediately they find themselves unsuccessful with the sword, allowed to take seats in Congress and recommence the agitation with their tongues, and by their arguments and notes. More inflammatory speeches were not made in 1860 than have been delivered during the late canvass. If examples are not made, if leading men are not made to feel some ill effects from an unsuccessful attempt to revolutionize, then agitation will never cease, but will be kept up by ambitious men of mean talents who can hope to rise only in times of disorder or by operating upon and influencing the passions of the multitude."

To cap the climax of this iniquity a body of men calling themselves the Legislature, but having small title to be considered a legal body, have undertaken to pass a Black Code, separating the two races, in defiance of every principle of Equality. Here is a provision which fastens apprenticeship or serfdom in a new form upon the unhappy freedman:

"Colored children between the ages mentioned [eighteen and twenty-one] who have neither father nor mother living in the district in which they are found, or whose parents are paupers, or unable to afford them a comfortable maintenance, or whose parents are not teaching them habits of industry and honesty, or are persons of notoriously bad character, or are vagrants, or have been convicted of infamous offenses, and colored children, in all cases where they are in danger of moral contamination, may be bound as apprentices by the district judge or one of the magistrates for the aforesaid term."

Under these words there is no colored minor in the State who is safe for one moment from a compulsory serfdom.

The lash is also prescribed as a means of enforcing contracts. The lash once more is to resound.

The planters at their public meetings have given utterance to this same brutal spirit. Here is a series of resolutions, where, after calling for the withdrawal of the troops of the United States, and after declaring themselves pledged to the existing state of things, and that it is their "honest purpose to abide thereby," they proceed as follows:

"Resolved, That if inconsistent with the views of the authorities to remove the military, we express the opinion that the plan of the military to compel the freedman to contract with his former owner, when desired by the latter, is wise, prudent, and absolutely necessary."

"Resolved, That we, the planters of the district, pledge ourselves not to contract with any freedman unless he can produce a certificate of regular discharge from his former owner."

"Resolved, That under no circumstances whatsoever will we rent land to any freedmen, nor will we permit them to live on our premises as employees."

Thus is the freedman, whose liberty the United States are bound to maintain, to be handed over to compulsory service, and under no circumstances is land to be rented to him. And yet these people announce that they accept the existing state of things and that it is their honest purpose to abide thereby!

From South Carolina pass to GEORGIA, and there is the same wretched story. The spirit of the State appears in the language of Mr. Simmons in the convention:

"Let us repudiate only under the lash and the application of military power, and then, as soon as we are an independent sovereignty, restored to our equal rights and privileges in the Union, let us immediately call another convention and resume the debt."

The testimony from various quarters shows the same spirit. A recent writer, of unimpeachable authority, now sitting as a reporter in your galleries, thus testifies:

"In the stage between Augusta and Milledgeville I rode with two gentlemen of considerable local weight and prominence, who were both anti-secessionists in 1860-61. They talked of the approaching convention, and of its probable action in redistricting the State for representatives. 'Well, Colonel,' said the younger, himself a man of over forty years—'Well, Colonel, what will be our proper course when we are once more fully restored to the Union?' The answer came, after a moment's consideration. 'We must strike hands with the Democratic party of the North, and manage them as we always have.' There was a pause while we rattled down the hill, and then the questioner responded, 'That is just it; they were ready enough to give us con-trouble if we gave them the offices, and I reckon they have not changed very much yet." There was then conversation on other matters; but half an hour later, after a mile or so of silence, the Colonel suddenly resumed, "Yes, sir, our duty is plain; we shall be without weight now that slavery is gone, unless we do join hands with them; Andy Johnson will want a reelection, and the united Democratic party must take him up; it shall be a fair division—we want the power and they want the spoils."

And the same writer, in another letter, shows how rebels were honored in the convention:

"I'll be d—d if I vote for any man who did not go with the State," said one of the delegates while the canvass for officers was going on; in accordance with which spirit the secretary is a gentleman who was a colonel in the rebel army, and the door keeper a gentleman who lost an arm in the service."

Where such a spirit prevails the freedmen fare badly. In Georgia they are treated cruelly. A traveler writes as follows:

"The hatred toward the negro as a freeman is intense among the low and brutal, who are the vast majority. Murders, shootings, whippings, robbing, and brutal treatment of every kind are daily inflicted upon them, and I am sorry to say in most cases they can get no redress. They don't know where to complain or how to seek justice after they have been abused and cheated. The habitual deference toward the white man makes them fearful of his anger and revenge."

An official of the Government, after traversing Mississippi and Alabama, writes from Georgia in a very recent letter, as follows:

"Every day the press of the South testifies to the outrages that are being perpetrated upon unoffending colored people by the State militia. These outrages are particularly flagrant in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, and are of such a character as to demand most imperatively the interposition of the national Executive. These men are rapidly inaugurating a condition of things—a feeling—among the freedmen that will, if not checked, ultimate in insurrection. The freedmen are peaceable and inoffensive; yet if the whites continue to make it all their lives are worth to go through the country, as free people have a right to do, they will goad them to that point at which submission and patience cease to be a virtue."

"I call your attention to this matter after reading and hearing from the most authentic sources—officers and others—for weeks, of the continuance of the militia robbing the colored people of their property—arms—shooting them in the public highways if they refuse to halt when so commanded, and lodging them in jail if found from home without passes, and ask, as a matter of simple justice to an unoffending and down-trodden people, that you use your influence to induce the President to issue an order or proclamation forbidding such wicked and unlawful proceedings; and, if he deem it prudent, forbidding the organization of State militia. The only military force needed in the South is more regular and volunteer troops to keep in proper subjection those lately in rebellion, and to teach them to treat the freed people in a manner becoming a civilized community."

Another witness, himself a Georgian, with ample opportunities of information, thus testifies:

"I have personal and friendly relations with many leading men of this section. I had before the war. I have met many of them in New York and in Washington within the past few months, and have, as a citizen of the South, had frequent conversations with them upon our future and the means that should be employed to begin it auspiciously. These interviews have been free and open in interchange of opinion, and I must believe that I had laid before me the intentions of those who must and will again assume the leadership here. If they are not so honored, their opinions will show how they would lead had they the power."

"Among these were four ex-Governors of three different States, who had received pardons from President Johnson. Our conversation naturally and necessarily turned to the future of the emancipated negroes. Their past and present condition was discussed, and their chances as well as our own were of course considered, and everything that could bear upon their future was canvassed. The course to be pursued by the Legislatures of the reconstructed States, and the laws to be enacted, in order to obtain the fulfillment of contracts with the freedmen employed, occupied no small portion of consideration. In this way I had full opportunity to learn the opinions of those who have been and will be again looked up to as the leaders and directors of southern opinion and sentiment."

"The unanimity of all was not the least singular thing, especially regarding the status of the freedmen and their rights hereafter. If legal emancipation can avail, those rights will be but nominal, and they will remain as they have ever been, isolated and apart; free in name, but slaves in fact."

It seems that in Georgia there is a body of men known as "regulators," who are thus described by a correspondent of that journal which has for years whitewashed the enormities of slavery, the New York Herald:

"Springing naturally out of this disordered state of affairs is an organization of 'regulators,' so called. Their numbers include many ex-confederate cavaliers of the country, and their mission is to visit summary justice upon any offenders against the public peace. It is needless to say that their attention is largely directed to maintaining quiet and submission among the blacks. The shooting or stringing up of some obstreperous 'nigger' by the 'regulators' is so common an occurrence as to excite little remark. Nor is the work of proscription confined to the freedmen only. The 'regulators' go to the bottom of the matter, and strive to make it uncomfortably warm for any new settler with demoralizing innovations of wages for 'niggers.'"

Such is the unimaginable atrocity which, according to a friendly authority, prevails in Georgia. The poor freedman is sacrificed. The northern settler, who believes in Human Rights is sacrificed also. Alas! that such scenes should disgrace our country and age! Alas! that there should be any hesitation in applying the necessary remedy.

Surely this is enough. I do not stop to dwell on the instances of frightful barbarism. There is one which has been authenticated in the court of the provost marshal, where a colored girl was roasted alive! And another writer, in a letter just received, describes a system of "burning" in Wilkes county, Georgia, as "a mild means of extorting from the freed people a confession as to where they have their arms and money concealed." He says "they were held in the blaze." Think of it, sir, here in our country, "they were held in the blaze." And the national Government looks on.

From Georgia pass to ALABAMA, only to find the same evil spirit and the same succession of enormities, intensified, if possible. Here again I am embarrassed by the variety and extent of the testimony.

A recent private letter from Mobile thus testifies:

"The press and people here, with one voice, are loud in their praise of President Johnson, for his wholesale manner of dispensing pardons. But I have yet to see the first signs of repentance on the part of those who have received clemency from the Chief Magistrate of the Government. The existing feeling is, that no man who did not support the confederacy is worthy of trust; and all offices are given to those who did their best to break up the country. President Johnson will find in the end that he has been too liberal in the exercise of clemency. And, unless he changes his course, or is checked by Congress, the most corrupt men in the South will again get into power, and sway the destinies of this section of the country."

"And until the labor question is adjusted between the planters and the freedmen, we cannot look forward to a time of prosperity. The indications at present are not favorable to a satisfactory solution of this difficult problem. The planters hate the negro, and the latter class distrust the former, and while this state of things continues, there cannot be harmonious action in developing the resources of the country. Besides, a good many men are unwilling yet to believe that the 'peculiar institution' of the South has been actually abolished, and still have the lingering hope that slavery, though not in name, will yet in some form practically exist. And hence the great anxiety to get back into the Union, which being accomplished, they will then, as I have heard it expressed, 'fix the negro.'"

"I look forward with deep solicitude to the approaching session of Congress. I hope there will be strength and moral courage enough in that body to keep the ship of state right. The President has a difficult position to fill, and needs all the sympathy and aid he can get from right-minded citizens. But there is no question that he has been most sadly imposed upon within the past few months by designing and corrupt politicians."

Another private letter from a person so situated as to be accurately informed, gives this painful testimony:

"The Government in taking the responsibility of freeing this people tacitly engaged to protect them in their freedom. The various departments of Government have solemnly declared the black man entitled to equal rights before the law with the white man. Yet it is the simple fact, capable of indefinite proof, that the black man does not receive the faintest shadow of justice. I aver that in nine cases out of ten within my own observation, where a white man has provoked an affray with a black, and savagely misused him, the black man has been fined for insolent language because he did not receive the chastisement in submissive silence, while the white man has gone free. It is the simple truth that the most flagrant crimes against the blacks are not noticed at all, and, indeed, a man loses caste if he interests himself about them."

"It is the simple truth that black men are not allowed to use their own property to the best advantage, or in any way to make such use of their capabilities as would be likely to elevate them in social position."

"The above are but specimen facts, and they are facts. Every provost-marshal who has been in office here will testify to the truthfulness of the picture. Meantime companies are forming to import coolies and European immigrants to drive the black man from the little chance that is left him. The whole thing may be summed up in one word: the South is determined to have slavery—the thing, if not the name. And if all restraint is removed, it is as certain as fate that their condition will be far worse than it ever was before. It will be the old system with all its mitigations rescinded and all its horrors intensified."

"The prospect for the coming winter is overwhelming in its horrors at best. If the freedmen are left friendless, it will be the very valley of the shadow of death. Let Congress keep these States out of the Union till the shape and tone of their legislation is seen and understood, as relating to freedmen, and then keep them out until it is clearly shown whether the people will obey the legislation or make it a dead letter from the beginning."

And still another letter makes these revelations:

"Do not let yourselves be deceived by the influences which reach you. These influences are energetic, active, spare no pains or expense, to accomplish certain purposes. I know this people well; I was born and reared with them; they are far more hostile to the Government to-day than they were in 1860. Every demonstration in the State since the surrender has been, in one shape or another, that of hostility to the Union; and every new concession they make is simply made with the hope of thereby obtaining that degree of independence which follows, as they understand and expect it, the resumption of the status as States again."

"The elections are just over. The secessionists were united to a man—hopeful, active; the Union party disorganized, discouraged, and dispersed among the secessionists. President Johnson and Governor Parsons are responsible for it. The enemies of the Union have defeated us horse, foot, and dragons, in all parts of the State. The staunch favorites of our party are defeated everywhere."

"In a word, the friends of the Union are completely under; the successful party are the secessionists and renegade Unionists, enemies of the Government. It is to the Union party of the North that we are to-day indebted for being able to live here."

The person who is styled Provisional Governor of Alabama, in a late message thus alludes to rebel trophies, and fans the flame of the rebellion:

"Several of these had been deposited in the executive department, and were not removed when the capitol was evacuated. They were not destroyed, however, by those who took possession of it, but came to my hands as the representative of the State for the time being, and are now carefully preserved and ready to be delivered to the Governor elected under the constitution. We should preserve these sacred souvenirs of the courage and endurance of those who went forth to battle under their folds, and who manfully upheld them with their life-blood."

Surely with such a person in high office we could expect little else than the barbarism which rages there.

From Alabama pass to MISSISSIPPI, and there the same hideous scenes are renewed. Here is the testimony of a citizen of this State, once a slave-master, in a private letter:

"In respectful earnestness I must say that if at the end of all the blood that has been shed and the treasure expended, the unfortunate negro is to be left in the hands of his infuriated and disappointed former owners to legislate and fix his status, God help him, for his cup of bitterness will overflow indeed. Was ever such a policy conceived in the brain of man before? After a great step and a mighty victory you are expected by President Johnson to withdraw your protection from this people and turn their destiny over to those who for centuries have ground them into the dust. Truly, by such a course will your fruits become bitter ashes."

"As a man who has been deprived of a large number of persons he once claimed as slaves, I protest against such a course. If it is intended to follow up the abolition of slavery by a liberal and enlightened policy, by which I mean bestowing upon them the full rights of other citizens, then I can give this movement my heart and hand. But if the negro is to be left in a helpless condition, far more miserable than that of slavery, I would ask what was the object of taking him from those who claimed his services. As things seem now approaching the position of rendering loyalty at the South a disgrace, and those who, amid many dangers and trials, stood true to the Union and the Constitution are to be left to suffer the scorn, contempt, and oppressions of secessionist traitors—I say, as this seems to be the settled policy of the Government to the whites so situated, I fear there will remain but little hope for them or the negroes unless the true men of the country will present a barrier between them and those who are anxious to punish and destroy them."

The pretended Governor of Mississippi, like the pretended Governor of Alabama, exults in rebel victories, and fans the rebel flame. Both convention and Legislature abounded in bitter treason. In the convention one of the speakers declared it to be policy to accept the present condition of affairs until the control of the State is returned into the hands of the people, and "to submit for a time to evils which cannot be remedied." Another speaker in urging the acceptance of the Union, thus revealed the plot:

"If we act wisely we shall be joined by what is called the Copperhead party, and even by many of the Black Republicans."

Such is the voice of Mississippi.

Naturally the freedmen are exposed to untold hardships and atrocities. Here is the testimony:

"A superintendent of the bureau reports the poor creatures coming in with cruel grievances that are unredressed by these magistrates. General Chetlain tells us that while he was in command, for two months, of the Jackson district, containing nine counties, there was an average of one black man killed every day, and that in moving out forty miles on an expedition he found seven negroes wantonly butchered. And Colonel Thomas, assistant commissioner of the bureau for this State, tells us that there is now a daily average of two or three black men killed in Mississippi; the sable patriots in blue, as they return, are the objects of especial spite."

There is another authority of peculiar value. It is a letter dated at Webb's Ranch, Issaquena county, Mississippi, November 13, 1865:

"I regret to state that, under the civil power, now deemed by all the inhabitants of Mississippi (since the order of President Johnson revoking General Slocum's decree in relation to the State militia) to be paramount, the condition of the freedmen in many portions of the country has become deplorable and painful in the extreme. I must give it as my deliberate opinion, that the freedmen are to-day, in the vicinity of where I am now writing, worse off in most respects than when they were held as slaves. If matters are permitted to continue as they now seem likely to be, it needs no prophet to predict a rising on the part of the colored population, and a terrible scene of bloodshed and desolation; nor can one blame the negroes if this proves to be the result. I have heard, sincerely arrived here, of numberless atrocities that have been perpetrated against the freedmen. It is sufficient to state that the old overseers are in power again. The agents of the Freedmen's Bureau are almost powerless. Just as soon as the United States troops are withdrawn, it will be unsafe for the agents of the bureau to remain. The object of the southerners appears to be to make good their often-repeated assertions, to the effect that the negroes would die if they were freed. To make it so, they seem determined to goad them to desperation, in order to have an excuse to turn upon and annihilate them. There are, within a few miles of where I sit writing, several northern men who have settled here, desiring to work plantations. They all assure me that they do not consider themselves safe in the country; and two of them, ex-colonels in the United States Army, are afraid to leave their places without an armed escort. Other northern losses do not dare remain on their places."

Here are grave words, which open in fearful vista the tragical condition of the freedmen, and the perils of northern settlers there.

And now the pretended Legislature is engaged in fashioning an infamous Black Code; but I do not dwell on this, as it has been already exposed by my colleague.

From Mississippi pass to LOUISIANA, where anarchy is beginning under the sway of returning rebels inspired from Washington. Unionists are menaced in their safety. The story is so familiar that I content myself with a glimpse. Here is the testimony of a responsible person:

"During the canvass I made a tour through the northern portion of the State where I have resided for many years and have a large acquaintance among the people, and was surprised to find the spirit of the people more hostile to the Government than at the breaking out of the war. This is especially the case with the leaders who asserted to me in private conversation that they were more impressed with the truth of secession than they ever were; that the war against the United States was for just one; that they would not support any man for office who did not participate in that war; and that the only true policy for the southern people to adopt is to support the Democratic party in opposition to the Republican party of the North. They say that the whole war was an aggression on the part of the Government, and that they intend to use every means in their power to destroy the Government."

"A prominent member of the Legislature, now convened in this city, said to me a short time before the election, that he was a stronger secessionist now than he ever was, and that he hated the United States Government, and intended to do all in his power to destroy it. This man is a leading member of the Legislature, which, in the House at least, is composed of more than eight tenths who entertain the same feeling, and are now legislating for the loyal citizens of this State."

"There are several respectable men now in this city who are refugees from their homes in the interior of the State, being recently expelled on account of their Union sentiments."

And here is a private letter from an interior town of Louisiana, written by a lady to a lady in New Orleans and communicated to me:

"The poor colored people are in a constant state of alarm. There is a Mrs. — in this place who teaches the colored children; but the inhabitants, I suppose, not liking their having the advantages of education, expressed their disapproval by shooting at the teacher. At one time she was nursing a sick baby when a shot passed over her shoulder. No attempts were made to discover the guilty party. Of course all in office here are rebels. The teacher, who is a poor widow, became so much alarmed for her safety that she petitioned the officers to allow the troops to remain, which they did for a few days. The attempts on her life not being renewed, the troops were obliged to leave, and it is only on her account that they remained as long as they did."

Enough of this. Nor is this all. The pretended Legislature is plotting, like such bodies elsewhere, against the freedman. But I forbear to dwell on the elaborate machination.

In TEXAS there is more hope than anywhere, because a sincerely loyal person has been placed in power there. But a private letter from a loyal Texan thus cries out:

"What we of the South fear is that President Johnson's course will, by its precipitancy, enable the old set to reorganize themselves into place and power. For Heaven's sake preserve us, if you can, from this calamity."

Surely you will preserve them.

But there is special evidence that I ought not to forget. The same authority which I adduced with regard to the general condition of the rebel States writes thus from Galveston, in Texas:

"If any man from the North comes down here expecting to hold and maintain 'radical' or 'abolition' sentiments, let him expect to be shot down from behind the first time he leaves his house, and know that his murderer, if ever brought to justice, will be acquitted by the jury. If the military are withdrawn his house even will be no protection, and he may expect to be hung from his own chamber window. I tell you, Mr. —, these men are only taking breath and recuperating. Not that there is the slightest danger of any immediate outbreak. No; the southern people are too smart for that. They will never again measure strength with the North, unless their success be assured beforehand. In case of foreign war, or a domestic convulsion at the North, they will rise, but they will never try it alone and without assistance. Meantime they propose to 'take it out in having.' Already our officers are the subject of a social ostracism. I repeat that any man of radical views who comes down here to plant cotton will be in constant danger, night and day, unless he holds his tongue. The ministers of the Gospel, of all denominations, the instructors of the youth of the country, the women, and the young men, all hate the North with a degree of intensity that cannot be exaggerated."

Small temptation here to the northern capitalist! Small welcome to the northern emigrant! The first condition of prosperity is security; but this is absolutely wanting in this blasted region.

There is also TENNESSEE, where authentic testimony shows a painful condition of things. I content myself now with official documents. It seems that a committee was appointed to consider what could be done to arrest crimes and disorders in Tennessee. Addressing Governor Brownlow, they remark as follows:

"In the discharge of this duty, we would respectfully and earnestly call the attention of your Excellency to the many dreadful crimes that are becoming so common not only in and immediately around the capital of the State, but over the whole country."

"Quiet and peaceful citizens are met on our most public highways and robbed of their money and property, often cruelly beaten and abused, and in many cases murdered outright. This state of things is not only greatly injurious to the business of the country, but shocking to all sincere advocates of law and order, and to humanity itself."

"We, therefore, with the earnest desire to see security restored to life and property, and the majesty of law reasserted, appeal to your Excellency, who is the chief representative of power in the State, to exercise your power, and give the weight of your great influence to correct these sore evils, of which the whole country so justly complain."

Governor Brownlow communicated this paper to the Legislature by the following message:

STATE OF TENNESSEE.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE, November 22, 1865.

Gentlemen of the Legislature: The reputation being acquired by Nashville, the capital of your State and the great commercial emporium of Middle Tennessee, is humiliating to every friend of law and order. Murders, robberies, and burglaries are the order of the day. No man is safe, day or night, within a circuit around Nashville whose radius is eight or ten miles. The most of these outrages grow out of the abundant use of intoxicating spirits, connected with those gambling hells to be found in full blast on every street in the city. The same may be said, to a considerable extent, of all the larger cities and towns in the State. Life and property must be protected or the country will go to ruin. I therefore call upon you, most respectfully but earnestly, by prompt and decisive legislation, to remedy this growing and alarming evil. Should you fail to apply the necessary remedy, my next appeal will be made to Major General Thomas to close up all these dens of wickedness, so prolific of fights, murders, and robberies of every description.

The Sabbath is violated, the sanctuary of the Lord is ruthlessly invaded, and ladies and gentlemen are insulted at every corner and on every highway. Again, I appeal to you, gentlemen, to relieve the suffering people from this outrageous condition of affairs.

W. G. BROWNLOW.

I add a few sentences from a Tennessee paper, the Southern Loyalist:

"Do the authorities at Washington realize the fact that there is very great danger of wide-spread anarchy and bloodshed? Do they realize that it is the supineness and imbecility, or worse, with which the Freedmen's Bureau has been conducted at this point that is the cause of danger, and it may be of much bloodshed? God knows we speak in all sincerity, and we believe we speak the sentiment of nine tenths of the loyal men of Memphis."

"When colored men have remonstrated against injustice—against the very discriminations against freedmen that the War Department declared should not exist—they have been told, 'If you damned niggers think I am going to give you any rights that you had not under the old State laws, you are damnably mistaken.' This may not be exactly literal, but it is very nearly so. When colored people have asked for wages hardly earned in the cotton-field but not paid by rascally employers, they have been in very many cases told to go about their business or left to get their claims as they could."

Such is Tennessee, the most advanced of the States claiming recognition in the government of the country. But besides this testimony there is other testimony derived from its own statute-book. Tennessee refuses to the colored citizen his rights at the ballot-box, and even his rights of testimony in court.

I say nothing of FLORIDA and ARKANSAS, for the special testimony which had come to me with regard to these States is not at hand. But it is not needed. The same dreadful report comes from these States also. But, even without any report, all this must be inferred. How could it be otherwise? Abandoned to themselves, with unchecked power, the old slave-masters naturally continue the barbarism in which they have so long excelled.

Mr. President, I bring this plain story to a close. I regret that I have been constrained to present it. I wish it were otherwise. But I should have failed in duty had I failed to speak. Not in anger, not in vengeance, not in harshness have I spoken; but solemnly, carefully, and for the sake of my country and humanity, that peace and reconciliation may again prevail. I have spoken especially for the loyal citizens who are now trodden down by rebel power. You have before you the actual condition of the rebel States. You have heard the terrible testimony. The blood curdles at the thought of such enormities, and especially at the thought that the poor freedmen to whom we owe protection, are left to the unrestrained will of such a people smarting with defeat and ready to wreak vengeance upon these representatives of a true loyalty. In the name of God let us protect them. Insist upon guarantees. Pass the bill now under consideration; pass any bill; but do not let this crying injustice rage any longer. An avenging God cannot sleep while such things find countenance. If you are not ready to be the Moses of an oppressed people, do not become its Pharaoh.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the proposition before the Senate, I believe, is to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I shall not be guilty of the impropriety of violating the usage of the Senate by entering into a general discussion of the merits of the bill upon a motion of that character; nor shall I attempt any reply whatever to the remarks that have just been made. Private letters and correspondence are not to be supposed to have much weight with the Senate of the United States. I shall detain the Senate but a very short time, as I understand there is a desire on the part of the body to adjourn presently in order to attend the funeral of the late Mr. Corwin. There is one remark, however, that I wish to make before the adjournment, as perhaps after to-morrow the Senate will not be in session for some days.

There seems to be an apprehension in some quarters, (judging from the debates that have already occurred in this body and at the other end of the Capitol,) that the Democratic party is again to come into power, and that it is to come into power through the agency of the present Executive of the United States. The fact can be no longer disguised that there is in the party which elected the President an opposition party to him. Nothing can be more antagonistic than the suggestions contained in his message and the speeches that have already been made in the other end of the Capitol and in this Chamber. We of the minority here have listened, and listened patiently, without saying one word as to what will be our policy when this fight shall come. I am prepared to speak for no one but myself; but if the voice of one so humble could reach presidential ears, it would be this: "Stand firm to the constitutional principles that you have avowed; and, though the attack may be fierce and the war upon your administration bitter, if you will continue to recognize in the future as your policy thus far as developed indicates that the States lately in revolt are still States of this Union, and entitled to all the privileges of States in the Union; if you will be true and faithful to your high mission and to the principles which you have foreshadowed, there are—and it may as well be known now as hereafter—two million faithful men in the States which have never been in revolt that will hold up your hands, although they did not support you for the present high office which you hold; while you shall be faithful to the Constitution of your country they will be your friends, and when the battle comes, it matters not how fiercely it may rage, they will welcome the contest and welcome the conflict."

Sir, it becomes not us of the small minority to champion the cause of the President. We do not presume to do so now. But he who has studied the political parties of this country, and gained his lessons from the past, well knows that Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, is not going to be put down in his efforts to support and sustain the constitutional rights of the people, if Andrew Johnson chooses not to be put down.

Perhaps I have said enough upon this subject. I could not say less in view of the fact that almost every day something is said in this Chamber or elsewhere expressing apprehensions of the return of the Democratic party to power; and this, too, though we have long heard from the same source that the Democratic party was dead. If indeed it was dead, well might it be said—

"Had it but lived, though reft of power,
A watchman on the lonely tower,
Its mighty voice had shook the land
When fraud or danger were at hand."

But, Mr. President, for the reason I have already stated, I shall detain the Senate no longer. I shall, at an early day, take occasion to consider the questions involved in the problem of "reconstruction" as it is called, a term that I do not use.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I am not disposed to allow the speech of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to go to the country without a very brief reply. If that speech be true, and if it be a correct picture of the South, then God help us; then this Republic, this Union is at an end; then the great war which we waged for the Union was a folly; then all the blood and treasure which we have expended in that war in order to restore ourselves to companionship with the people of the South have been equally follies. But, Mr. President, is it true? Or is not this a series of ex parte statements made up by anonymous letter-writers, people who are down there more than likely stealing cotton, people who are down there in the enjoyment of place and power, people who are interested that the disturbed condition of things which exists there now shall always continue because they make profit of it? Is there any man who has had any experience in the trial of causes, any man who knows anything about the nature of evidence, who does not know that the honorable Senator could have sent his emissaries into any one county in the lately rebellious States and gathered up from the expressions of knaves and fools and discontented, single-ideaed people, far more than he has given us in this speech?

We are told here of the exceptional instances of bad conduct on the part of the people of the South. Why, what a large volume it would take to hold all that! If a man were to go about anywhere in the loyal States and hunt up what he might suppose to be treasonable expressions, heretical expressions, how many could he find? And yet we are treated to all this here as if it was the whole of the evidence in the case. One man out of ten thousand is brutal to a negro, and that is paraded here as a type of the whole people of the South, whereas nothing is said of the other nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine men who treat the negro well. One man expresses a great deal of dissatisfaction at the present state of affairs, and that is paraded here, while nothing is said of the other ten thousand men who are contented to accept it and make the most of it.

What, then, are we to do? We are to suppose that the people of the southern States lately in rebellion have common sense; and when their utterances are in accordance with what is common sense and the dictate of their own interest, we have a right to presume it to be true. But according to what we have just heard, everything that has come from the people of these States and from their public bodies, from the representatives of these people, is to be taken as false; and why? Because some cotton agent, some correspondent of a radical newspaper in the North, some office-holder who has been making profit of the state of things there, chooses to say it is all false! The heresy of State rights is not destroyed there, the honorable Senator says. Have we not heard from almost all the public men of the South that that question was put to the arbitrament of the sword, that they have lost, and that they submit? Have they not acquiesced in the abolition of slavery—that thing of all others which was the last, in the opinion of everybody, that they would submit to? But still further guarantees are wanted; we are not told what they are. What are they? What is wanted? Everybody admits that the negro ought to have his natural rights secured to him. I believe all the moderate, conservative men of this Chamber are fully agreed that every man should have his natural rights secured—the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; the protection of property, limbs, and reputation; that he should have the right to sue and be sued, and to testify in courts of justice. The negro has not hitherto been allowed in the southern States to testify in courts of justice, and why? Because he was a slave, and if I had been a citizen of the southern States when slavery prevailed there, I would have resisted his right to testify in courts. A witness like a voter ought to be a free man; he should not belong to another man. What chance would a litigant have against the master of slaves if the slaves could testify? It seems to me that the slave ought not to testify for the same reason that the wife ought not to testify either for or against the husband. Would you ask a negro to testify against his master, to go back to that master and be subjected to his ill-will because of his testimony? Would you allow him to testify for the master as against a party on the other side? Certainly not. But now this state of things has passed away. Now the people of the southern States themselves, so far as I understand them, are in favor of opening the courts to all these classes of people. And, sir, they must open them for their own security. I am willing to leave that to themselves; their own interest will compel them to allow all people to testify unless they are excluded by those disabilities that have heretofore excluded witnesses from testifying. If the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and those who think with him desire that these people should have the right of suffrage, why not say so broadly?

Mr. SUMNER. I do say so.

Mr. COWAN. Very well; that is so much that is clear: make it broadly; we may differ from him, but the people will decide. I am perfectly willing to acquiesce in their decision; I do not care which way it is; but the people will decide that question, and they will decide it promptly. If the honorable Senator from Massachusetts wants to hold the doctrine that these States are not States; that they are not constituent members of this Union, let him say so; there is a tribunal to which that can be referred. If he wishes to take issue with the President on these points, let the issue be made fairly and squarely, and it will be met. Thank God, in this Government, not like that of Russia which he has eulogized, there is a power above us all; there is a power to whose arbitrament and award we can appeal, and who will settle this thing conclusively.

Now, Mr. President, I am for reconciliation. I want to have this Union restored; and a Union means a Union by consent, not by force. I would like to make friends of all the people with whom we have been at enmity heretofore. I do not want the contest to go on any longer. But are we to make friends with them, and are they to be reconciled to us, and are they to behave better by such speeches as have been made by the honorable Senator here to-day? I very much doubt it. I do not think that he will improve the condition of the southern heart, or the condition of the southern mind, by thus parading these exceptional cases to the people of this country, and stimulating and exciting their angry passions more than they are now against this unfortunate people—unfortunate in every respect; unfortunate on account of their errors; unfortunate on account of the penalty which has followed those errors, and which they have suffered.

Mr. President, let us look at this testimony. The honorable Senator, as I said before, reads from anonymous letter-writers, from cotton agents, and people of that kind. Now, it does so happen that we have some testimony upon this subject; we have the testimony of the President of the United States, not a summer soldier or sunshine patriot—

Mr. SUMNER. I have not read anonymous letters.

Mr. COWAN. They are anonymous so far as we are concerned; and I commend the Senator's prudence in keeping the names of their writers from the public, because I have no doubt that if their names were known they would not be considered of much importance. I very much doubt whether there is a single man among them who has ever wielded anything more than a pen during this rebellion. But I say that we have the testimony of men of unexceptionable veracity; we have the testimony of the President of the United States, who was a Union man, and who was in favor of the Union at a time and in a place where there was some merit in it. I do not suppose there was any great merit in being a Union man in Massachusetts. I suspect a man would have been very likely to get a lamp-post if he had been anything else there; but the President of the United States was a Union man in the very thick and storm of the battle. He was driven from his home; he was waylaid hither in order to attend to his official duties in this body. He has stood by the Constitution, by the Union, all the way through, steadily and firmly, and as a compliment to him the great party to which I belong, and to which he did not belong, and never pretended to belong, conferred upon him office which, in the providence of God, has made him President of the United States.

Now, sir, you are told here that this man in his official communication to the Senate of the United States whitewashes the condition of things down below. Yes, sir, "whitewash" is the word. The honorable Senator says that he will not accept the definition of "whitewash" given by the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Wisconsin, but he has not told us what he means by the word "whitewash." It is not necessary that he should say what he means by that word. Everybody understands it. I suppose even his colored friends, in whom he takes so much interest, would know what the meaning of the word "whitewash" was. [Laughter.] He says that this man, who stood firm when everybody else faltered, this man who stood almost alone in the midst of an enraged population, and in the very storm and strife of the worst civil war perhaps the world has ever seen, comes here to "whitewash." What does he mean except that the President of the United States in an official communication to this body comes here to lie; that is the plain English of it; comes here either to suppress the truth or to suggest a falsehood.

What does the President say? I will read what he says as a sufficient answer to what all these people down South report of the state of affairs there, and I do not find it necessary to deny thousands of instances of exceedingly heretical talk may have taken place there, and of treasonable talk if you please; and I have no doubt that in a state of things unparalleled in the history of the world heretofore wrongs and outrages innumerable happen there; but that is not the question. The question is, what is the condition of the mass of the people in the South, what is their disposition and tendency, not to love the North, not to love the honorable Senator from Massachusetts—because I very much fear that that will not be brought about soon unless there is a change in the temper of both parties—not to have hearts overflowing with love and gratitude to those who they think persecute and hunt them in their submission, who kick and strike at them after they are down, after they have cried "enough"—but the question is, what is their disposition to obey the laws? What do we care about their hearts or their dispositions if they are obedient to the laws, and submit to the laws? Now they have submitted to laws which impose the heaviest penalty, for if they are traitors the law imposes the penalty of death and confiscation of estates by means of fine. I will read what the President says now of the condition of that people from the information he has received:

"In that portion of the Union lately in rebellion the aspect of affairs is more promising than in view of all the circumstances could well have been expected."

I think there is no candid man who will not indorse that sentiment.

"The people throughout the entire South evince a laudable desire to renew their allegiance to the Government, and to repair the devastations of war by a prompt and cheerful return to peaceful pursuits."

Why should they not? To suppose anything else is to suppose that they are demented, that they have no kind of common sense left, that four years of the most terrible war and the most terrible punishments ever inflicted upon a people have been without their lessons. It cannot be, Mr. President; it is not in the nature of things that it should be.

"An abiding faith"—on the part of this man who suffered from these people, who suffered from this war and the doctrine of secession and the attempt to break the Union—he says:

"An abiding faith is entertained that their actions will conform to their professions, and that in acknowledging the supremacy of the Constitution and the laws of the United States, their loyalty will be unreservedly given to the Government, whose leniency they cannot fail to appreciate, and whose fostering care will soon restore them to a condition of prosperity."

And here, Mr. President, allow me to ask when in the history of this world or of the human family has it happened that severity, cruelty, persecution, refusal to recognize common rights, has reconciled a people and pacified a distracted country; and when has it happened that clemency, leniency, as the President expresses it, has failed to produce beneficial results? It is not necessary to go very far back for instances to show this. Look at the treatment of England toward Ireland. What has been the result there of her holding that people in a species of vassalage? A Fenian insurrection upon her hands now after hundreds of years of attempt to dominate over that people. Look at Poland; look everywhere. And if it be necessary to see what clemency, what leniency and justice and trust and confidence can do to restore a people once in revolution, take the conduct of Hoche in La Vendée. There by the genius of one man, high enough to be above vulgar passion, statesman enough to look to the future, La Vendée was restored to France, and is there now part and parcel of it, with every recollection of the revolution effaced.

Says the President,

"It is true that in some of the States the demoralizing effects of war are to be seen in occasional disorders"

These effects are to be seen in the North as well as in the South—

"but these are local in character, not frequent in occurrence, and are rapidly disappearing as the authority of civil law is extended and sustained. Perplexing questions were naturally to be expected from the great and sudden change in the relations between the two races; but systems are gradually developing themselves under which the freedman will receive the protection to which he is justly entitled, and by means of his labor make himself a useful and independent member of the community in which he has his home. From all the information in my possession, and from that which I have recently derived from the most reliable authority, I am induced to cherish the belief that sectional animosity is surely and rapidly merging itself into a spirit of nationality, and that representation, connected with a properly adjusted system of taxation, will result in a harmonious restoration of the relations of the States to the national Union."

There is a little more testimony yet, Mr. President; and it is worth while to consider, while we are here to take counsel and to know what we ought to do in the extraordinary situation in which we find ourselves, from whom will we take that counsel. Are we to take it from men, the purpose of whose whole life seems to be to wage war upon these people and their institutions? Shall we take it from men whom they hate personally and by name, and to whom it is almost impossible to suppose they ever will be reconciled, or, in the nature of things, can be reconciled? Or are we to take it from the men who have not made this a personal war; who have treated it as a national war, and who, in their conduct of it, have won the applause of both sections? The President says that part of his information has been received from General Grant. Who is General Grant? Who is to be put in the scale with that scarred soldier, and whose testimony is to weigh down his? Is he "whitewashing" here too? Has he forgotten the position he occupies before the American people? With the highest military character of any man to-day upon the earth, has he condescended to come here to deceive the Senate of his country, and to lie about the condition of affairs in the South, which he has recently visited? Let us hear what he says, and listen with patient reverence to the utterance of a man of sense, a patriot, and a prudent man, who desires not to embroil, not to embitter, not to widen the gap that already exists between two people who ought to be fraternally united, but a man who desires to heal and to pacify; a man imbued with the spirit of Hoche when he went to La Vendée, and where he succeeded when others had failed. What does he say? It is not the tone or manner of the letter-writer, but it is in the manner of a man and a soldier.

"I am satisfied"— says he; and when he is satisfied who dares say he is not satisfied upon the score of honesty and good intent toward this Republic?

"I am satisfied that the mass of thinking men in the South accept the present situation of affairs in good faith."

That is what General Grant says. Is that "whitewashing?"

"The questions which have heretofore divided the sentiments of the people of the two sections—slavery and State rights, or the right of a State to secede from the Union—they regard as having been settled forever by the highest tribunal, arms, that man can resort to."

It is now said that they do not think so; that they are only pretending, and have a covert purpose of doing something hereafter about this thing, nobody can tell exactly what. Perhaps we will be told they will not abide the result:

"I was pleased to learn from the leading men whom I met, that they not only accepted the decision arrived at as final, but that now, when the smoke of battle has cleared away and time has been given for reflection, this decision has been a fortunate one for the whole country, they receiving like benefits from it with those who opposed them in the field and in council."

Why, Mr. President, the common sense of that last utterance is worth more as testimony than that of a thousand scribblers who merely look at detached points of this great field. They have resolved to accept the decision as final; and, what we ought all to be glad to know, they have found that it is for their benefit. They have found, too, after the smoke has cleared away, that they are really in a better condition than they were before, that they have been relieved from the incubus which has oppressed them for so long a time, and they are ready now to take their places in the Union, and alongside of the northern States who have made liberty their great principle rather than slavery. Why should they not? If any man can give a reason why they should desire to keep up this strife longer, with their devastated fields, with their treasuries empty, with their society disorganized, I should like to hear it.

I therefore hope, Mr. President, that we may meet them in a different spirit; that we may show to them that we made this war, not to make them eternal enemies of ours, not to humiliate them, but to rescue them; that we made this war to go and get them out of the clutches of the bad men who had misled them into the gloomy realm of secession and disunion; and that we intend, after the great military victory which we have achieved, to achieve another by magnanimity and clemency in our conduct toward them; that we will win them back to be as they were before, our friends and our brothers, of the same race and of the same lineage. I hope too that this angry, irritating, and exciting mode of treating this subject, which is calculated to make us anything else than friends, will be discarded hereafter, and that we shall coolly and calmly and in the spirit of the nation, (because that is the spirit of the nation,) examine this question and do with it that which will be calculated to restore the old harmony and peace and the old Union again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. SUMNER. My colleague is out of his seat now, and I know he did not expect final action on that motion to-day. I move an adjournment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask if there is not business on the table which ought to be disposed of before we adjourn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several bills from the House of Representatives lying on the table.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion now made is to adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw that motion.

DEATH OF ORLANDO KELLOGG.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, communicating to the Senate information of the death of Hon. ORLANDO KELLOGG, late a Representative from the State of New York, and the proceedings of the House of Representatives thereon.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to pause again in its deliberations and pay its tribute of respect to the memory of another deceased member of Congress. Hon. ORLANDO KELLOGG, a member of the House of Representatives, died at his residence in northern New York in the month of August last. He died, after a very brief illness, in the midst of his activity and usefulness, and when human foresight would have allotted to him many years of vigorous health.

I have known Mr. KELLOGG for many years. He was reared a mechanic and labored at his trade until after he came to his majority. Without fortune or influential friends, without the advantages of early education, he raised himself by his own energy and persevering industry to a respectable position at the bar. He possessed, in an eminent degree, the respect and confidence of an intelligent and patriotic constituency. Their estimate of his worth is shown by the fact that three times they have elected him their Representative in Congress.

In private life Mr. KELLOGG was upright and honorable. His public duties were always discharged with honor to himself and fidelity to his country. In the terrible ordeal through which, as a nation, we have just passed, he presented a noble example of loyalty and patriotic earnestness in the support of the Government. He won the love and admiration of every loyal heart by his untiring zeal and devotedness in the cause of his country. Rarely indeed have the portals of the grave closed over a better man. In all the varied relations of life he sustained a reputation above all reproach. He has left to his sorrowing friends the undying memorials of an honorable life. When living he received the homage of my respect, and now that he is dead I find a mournful pleasure in paying a just tribute to his memory and his virtues. I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the message of the House of Representatives announcing the death of Hon. ORLANDO KELLOGG, a member of that House from the State of New York.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members of the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be transmitted to the family of the deceased by the Secretary of the Senate.

Resolved, That as a further token of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 20, 1865.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed the following concurrent resolutions, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Manufactures of the respective Houses inquire if the tax from the internal revenue act upon the products of domestic manufacture is greater than the duty, premium on gold, expenses of exchange, and transportation upon similar products imported, and if thereby the foreign product is entered for consumption upon more favorable terms than the domestic produce, to report a remedy by bill or otherwise.

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the joint committee of the two Houses appointed under a joint resolution at the last session of Congress to investigate Indian affairs, have liberty to make their report at any time during the present session of Congress.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. BROOMALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and referred to the joint committee on reconstruction:

Resolved, That the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery or involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime, having now been ratified by three fourths of the States comprising the Government of the United States, to wit, the States of Illinois, Rhode Island, Michigan, Maryland, New York, West Virginia, Maine, Kansas, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Missouri, Nevada, Indiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Vermont, Connecticut, and New Hampshire, the same has thereby become the paramount law of the land; and the House of Representatives congratulates the country on being at last and forever free.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. BROOMALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit the following resolution for reference to the joint committee on reconstruction:

Resolved, 1. That the termination of the recent civil war has left the inhabitants of the territory reclaimed from the late usurpation in the condition of a conquered people, and without political rights.

2. That as a legitimate consequence the relation of master and slave among them is destroyed, and that it is not within the province of civil law ever to revive it.

3. That the future political condition of these people must be fixed by the supreme power of the conqueror, and that the effect of amnesty proclamations and pardons is to relieve individuals from punishment for crime, not to confer upon them political rights.

4. That it is not the interest of the Government that these people shall remain in their present unorganized condition longer than is necessary for their own good and the good of the country.

5. That Congress should confer upon them the necessary power to form their own State governments and local institutions, but that this cannot be done until the rights of those among them, of whatever caste or color, who remained always true to their allegiance, are effectually protected and guaranteed.

6. That it is the paramount duty of the Government to guard the interests of all within the conquered territory who rendered no willing aid or comfort to the public enemy; and if this cannot otherwise be done, Congress should organize State governments composed of these alone, and forever exclude from all political power the active and willing participants in the late usurpation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

ASSISTANT ASSESSORS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint assistant assessors of the internal revenue; which was read a first and second time. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized to appoint any assistant assessors of internal revenue now provided by law.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I will say that as the law was first enacted the power was given to the Secretary of the Treasury. It was subsequently changed in order to relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from so great a burden as the appointment of so many officers. That was objected to as being unconstitutional, and now it is proposed to restore the law to what it was, and to give the Secretary of the Treasury the power to appoint those officers, instead of leaving it as now, to be done by the President of the United States, who certainly has no time for such great labor.

I demand the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do these appointments require the confirmation of the Senate?

Mr. MORRILL. They do at the present time, and it is to relieve the President from the trouble of making these appointments and the Senate of confirming them that this bill is reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, as the Committee of Ways and Means has been divided, that under the new rule the Committee of Ways and Means is authorized to report at any time for commitment, and the Committee on Appropriations to report appropriation bills at any time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. LAWRENCE presented the petition of Smith Fuller, asking leave to contest the seat of Hon. JOHN L. DAWSON; and moved that it, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SPALDING introduced a bill to amend the judicial system of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JENCKES introduced a bill to regulate the civil service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MISSOURI CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The Committee of Elections have instructed me to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the matter of the contested-election case of Hon. Sempronius H. Boyd against Hon. John R. Kelso, it is hereby ordered that the sitting member be allowed fifty days from and after the passage of this resolution, for the purpose of taking testimony, and the contestant, if he choose, thirty days thereafter for the purpose of taking testimony in reply thereto; and that in all things, except the extension of time herein prescribed, both parties be required to conform to the provisions of the statute of February 19, 1851, in relation to contested elections in this House.

I will say that this resolution is the result of mutual consent on the part of the two parties; and therefore the committee have not gone into the question whether the sitting member has reasonable ground for asking for this extension.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN G. HARRIS.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to communicate to this House a copy of the record, finding, sentence, and action of the Executive thereon, in the court-martial in the trial of Benjamin G. Harris, a member of this House from the State of Maryland.

The SPEAKER. This resolution calling for executive information, unanimous consent is required for its introduction at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that I shall object, but I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether that record called for will include the testimony taken in the case? I would rather have the word "testimony" inserted.

Mr. DAWES. The committee understand that the testimony is part of the record.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to have the word "testimony" inserted in the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend by inserting that word.

Mr. DAWES. I accept that amendment.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

HOUSE REPORTERS.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to report from the Committee on Rules a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's table.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the following rule be, and hereby is, adopted as a rule of the House, to take effect from and after the 4th day of March, 1865:

Rule.—Reporters of the official proceedings of the House, published in the Globe newspaper by its order, shall be recognized, and are hereby declared, officers of the House for the purpose of reporting its proceedings; and appointments or removals of such reporters shall be held subject to the approval of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BANKS. This resolution is reported with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Rules. It is intended only to assert the privilege of the House over the reporters of its own proceedings, and not to affect in any degree the relations which have been made for printing the debates of the House.

As it is unanimously reported by the committee, I call the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the gentleman to allow me a moment.

Mr. BANKS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HALE. I respectfully submit, with all deference to the Committee on Rules, and the weight to which their deliberations are entitled, that this is a question involving serious points for the consideration of this House as to personal and private rights—rights arising under contract between the employer and employed; that it is not a matter which ought to be pressed upon this House under the previous question, and without full and dispassionate consideration. I certainly would desire to have an opportunity of raising certain questions upon the propriety of such action by the House, and especially as the rule is made retroactive, going back to the 4th of March last. I sincerely trust the honorable gentleman who reported this resolution will not urge the previous question upon its passage. It seems to me there are considerations which will commend themselves to the mind of the gentleman, and to the minds of other members of this House, showing that this question should be considered, and that the parties who are interested should have an opportunity to be heard.

I beg leave to ask whether such a hearing has been accorded by the committee to the proprietors of the Globe, the parties immediately interested in the settlement of this question?

Mr. BANKS. No such offer has been made, for the reason that the committee were unanimously of opinion that the rule reported does not in any respect affect any relations existing between the House and the proprietors of the Globe. It asserts simply the privilege of the House. It is impossible that the House can have given to any persons outside, and who are wholly irresponsible to it, the right to send persons into this House without its consent, who are authorized to report its proceedings which go to the country as official. It cannot be that this House would do that; and it is certainly impossible that any previous House can have done it in such a manner as to bind this House.

The questions to which the gentleman refers are certainly proper and important, but they can be brought up and disposed of by the House without touching in any respect whatever the resolution now before the House; and I should be glad to give not only serious attention, but the utmost favor, to any proposition he may make upon this subject. But this resolution does not refer to that; it relates simply to the privilege of the House over the reporters of its official proceedings, and declares that those who are here for that purpose cannot be here without the consent of the House.

Mr. HALE. Let me beg the indulgence of the gentleman from Massachusetts for one moment further, to submit this proposition simply, not by way of debating the question, but simply to show that this is a question which ought to be debated here.

As I understand this resolution, for the purpose of appointments and removals, it dates back to the 4th day of March last. Now, I understand that it is claimed—and I am not speaking of claims here; I do not assume to know the facts—I understand that it is claimed here that the proprietors of the Globe are contractors with this House for the publishing of their debates. I understand that it is claimed by the proprietors of the Globe that they employ the reporters of this House in pursuance of that contract; that they have the same right in regard to their appointment, and in regard to their removal, that every other contractor or employer has.

Now, if this be so, and if this resolution is to remove from these employers the privilege of employing whom they choose, so long as they pay them and perform their contract with this House, it certainly seems to me that it must commend itself to the intelligence of every member of the House that these employers, whose rights in relation to this House, and in relation to their employes, are to be affected by the resolution, shall somewhere have a hearing before their rights are determined.

I do sincerely hope that this question will not be pressed this morning under the previous question, but that a question of such grave importance and principle, however trifling it may be in practice, or in its effect upon the parties immediately in interest, may not be pressed under the previous question, but set down for a certain day, and opportunity be had for a free discussion of the measure. It seems to me that this is due to the sense of justice, which ought to belong, and does belong, I have no doubt, to every member of the House. I therefore renew the appeal to the gentleman from Massachusetts not to press this resolution under the previous question, but to give an opportunity for fair examination and debate.

Mr. BANKS. If I thought that this resolution involved in any degree the matters referred to by the gentleman from New York, I should waive the previous question; but I am confident that it does not.

In the first place there is no such contract as that to which the gentleman refers. All the votes by the House of Representatives and by Congress in relation to the publication of proceedings are votes of appropriation, connecting certain conditions with the appropriations. The proprietors of the Globe receive those appropriations by compliance with the conditions. That is all the contract there is. The contract is for each session. Each Congress makes an appropriation for the payment of the publication of its proceedings, and attaches certain conditions to those appropriations. That gives no right whatever to the proprietors of the Globe to say who shall or shall not report the proceedings of the House independent of the wish or will of the House. Such a waiver of the privileges of the House can hardly be contemplated or defended.

There is a provision in some of the appropriations that the order of the House which justifies the Clerk in purchasing copies of the Globe for new members, and which arranges the price paid per column and some details of that kind, may be abrogated by Congress, or by the proprietors of the Globe, by giving two years' notice. This measure does not affect any of those provisions; but if the gentleman proposes at any time to bring up the subject of reporting and publishing the debates, no one will be more willing to give to the proprietors of the Globe the most liberal consideration than myself; and I believe that that subject is worthy of the most serious consideration of the House.

Mr. HALE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts one question. Is not the effect of the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules to remove from the proprietors of the Globe any right of the appointment or removal of the reporters, and to make this House the sole power to appoint or remove?

Mr. BANKS. Not at all; not in the slightest degree. It does not interfere with the appointment or removal of reporters by the proprietors of the Globe, except that it calls for the consent of the Speaker to their action in that matter.

Mr. HALE. Then I misapprehended it so far.

Mr. BANKS. It does not and is not intended to take from the proprietors of the Globe the power of appointment or removal that exists, but it requires the assent of the Speaker to their action in this regard; and certainly gentlemen will not claim that outside parties who are engaged in printing a newspaper, and are wholly irresponsible to the Government, should have a right to send gentlemen in here to report our proceedings without the consent of the House or without the consent of any of its officers.

And let me say in relation to the question raised as to the discharge of reporters heretofore, that the committee has not taken that subject into consideration at all. It has made no question whatever as to the relations of the reporters to the proprietors of the Globe. It asserts the privileges of the House in the most naked form, and declares that the persons who come in here to report our proceedings, which reports are regarded as official proceedings, and are published and received as official proceedings, should be for that purpose considered as officers of the House, and that their appointment and removal should be subject to the consent of the Speaker. If it touched any other question, or any other relation, I would yield to the request of the gentleman. But unless some other proposition is to be made, I shall ask the House to sustain my call for the previous question.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BANKS. I will do so.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] will not press this subject to an immediate decision. It is one of those questions that ought to be examined, and upon which the other side have clearly a right to be heard before final action is taken upon it. Now, so far as the proprietors of the Globe are concerned, it is rather my conviction that they have not done justice by some of the reporters whom they have discharged. But I think it would be small business for us to interfere and undertake to revise their decisions and conclusions between themselves and their employes.

So far as these reporters are concerned, I believe that the House has been, from the start, almost uniformly satisfied with their work. They have been intelligent, diligent, and faithful workmen. But we require, on the part of the proprietors of the Globe, a certain amount of work, and to be done in a certain style. Now, if we are to hold these publishers responsible for their work, clearly they ought to have the right of employing whom they may please. And for the House to interfere, and say that they shall not employ any one unless they shall first receive the approval of the Speaker would certainly be an interference with their rights.

I do not know anything especially as regards the merits of the present case. But I have been informed, since the debate has sprung up here, by one of the publishers of the Globe, that he has not been consulted in relation to this matter; that he knew nothing at all about what was to be reported from the committee; that they have not been examined before the committee, although they tendered their services to the committee for an examination, which was either declined or refused. Under the circumstances, I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] will not press this matter for immediate decision. If he should do so, I shall be constrained to ask for a division of the resolution, and a separate vote upon the last portion of it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with an amendment House bill No. 4, for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States, in which amendment he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

HOUSE REPORTERS—AGAIN.

Mr. BANKS. Neither the proprietors of the Globe were consulted, nor the reporters, nor any parties who might be supposed to have private interests involved in this matter, because it was regarded by the committee unanimously that it did not involve the private interests of any party; that it asserted simply the privileges of the House; and I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that it seems to me to be impossible that the House can have conferred upon any outside party, under any supposed contract, the right to send parties in here to report our proceedings, which reports are to be published and will be received as official, without the consent of the Speaker of the House. That is all this resolution proposes to accomplish. If it involved more, then it might be considered proper to bestow more time upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask the gentleman this question: does not the resolution now under consideration propose to take effect from March last past?

Mr. BANKS. It does; because during March last past the last Congress closed, and the present Congress commenced.

Mr. MORRILL. And there have been removals since that time, and therefore those removals would come under the operation of this resolution.

Mr. BANKS. That I do not know. I say explicitly to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and to the House, that no consideration has been given by the committee to the interest of any private parties.

Mr. HALE. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to claim that there is no existing contract between Congress and the proprietors of the Globe.

Mr. BANKS. I do not say that.

Mr. HALE. I understand that there is a contract, and that a bond has been filed by Mr. Rives for his faithful performance of that contract. Now, I beg leave to suggest to the gentleman whether the fact that this case has required the address, ingenuity, and ability which have been shown here, to convince the House of the propriety of the proposed rule, is not in itself convincing proof that this resolution should not be passed without full and free discussion? I know nothing of the Globe or its proprietors, except that I appreciate heartily their motto that "the world is governed too much."

Mr. BANKS. I do not insist that there is no contract. I expressed the opinion that there is no contract; but we have not examined that matter carefully, because this resolution does not refer to it. In relation to the matter stated by the gentleman who last spoke, the facts are simply these: that Congress authorized its members to subscribe for a certain number of copies of the Globe, for which appropriations were made. The printers of the Globe were authorized to draw upon those appropriations, and if they did so they gave bond that they would supply the copies of the Globe. If they took the appropriations before they had performed their work, they gave bond that they would perform their work by supplying the copies of the Globe. This is the fact of the matter. It does not involve a contract, except that, if the printers of the Globe have received money from Congress, they have agreed to do that for which the money was paid.

But this resolution does not refer to that. It simply asserts the naked privileges of the House, (which are more important to the minority than to the majority, and which affect our relations to the people of the country at large,) by declaring that, for those persons who are sent here to report our official proceedings, we are responsible, at least so far as to be able to give our assent to their being present for that purpose. I trust that the House will sustain the previous question; and I will hereafter give the gentlemen who are interested on the other side the heartiest support in a review of this whole subject.

And I may be allowed to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are no officers connected with the Government who exercise functions of higher dignity or greater importance than the reporters. I believe that it would be well for the Government to publish the report of its own proceedings, and so far as the report of its daily proceedings is concerned, that it would be well that an official abstract should be made, which might be published in one or more of the papers of this city, and in all the leading papers of the country. If the publication of such an abstract were practicable, it would be of greater service to the country and to Congress than anything yet done in regard to the publication of our debates. But none of these questions are involved in this resolution.

In regard to a division of the question upon the resolution, I must say to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that it is not susceptible of division. If it were I would cheerfully consent to his request. But inasmuch as the resolution is reported after careful consideration by the committee, unanimously—a committee representing different sides of the House—and as the resolution involves a single question as to the authority of the House over gentlemen who are upon this floor for the performance of official duties, I hope it may be disposed of at this time. I ask the previous question.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman [Mr. BANKS] yield to his colleague, [Mr. BALDWIN]? Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to doing so if it is the pleasure of the House to continue the debate.

Mr. BALDWIN. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot vote for the resolution, and I wish to indicate in a few words my reasons.

In the last Congress I was so placed that I necessarily became acquainted rather closely with the relation of the Globe to the House, and the relation of the reporters of the Globe to that establishment. I found that there is—you may call it a contract, or you may call it an arrangement—that there is at any rate an arrangement by virtue of which the proprietors and publishers of the Globe are engaged to do the work of reporting and printing the debates of Congress. They are paid for doing this. They employ reporters and printers. They come here by their employes to report the debates; and by their employes in their establishment they print them. Now, I do not feel ready to interfere between the publishers of the Globe, our principals in this arrangement, and their employes who come here to do the work for them. I do think that, by adopting this resolution, we shall do injustice to the publishers of the Globe, create confusion in our relations with them, and prepare for ourselves occasion for regret. Therefore I must vote against the resolution.

Mr. BANKS. I think that my colleague is in error in his view as to the contract or arrangement between the House and the printers of the Globe; but, as to that, I care nothing. It is impossible, or certainly improbable, that any previous House has undertaken by contract or arrangement to control the privileges of this House; and one of the highest privileges of the House is the right to decide who shall be allowed to come here to report its official proceedings. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, is a motion in order to refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire and report to this House what, if any, are the rights of the proprietors of the Globe in regard to the reporters of our proceedings?

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order if the previous question should be seconded. The pending question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HALE. Then I hope that the previous question will not be seconded, and that I may have an opportunity to make that motion.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, there were, on a division—ayes 53, noes 50.

Mr. BANKS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BANKS and HALE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 74.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HALE moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire and report to this House what, if any, are the relations subsisting between the proprietors of the Globe and this House, under contract or otherwise, in regard to the reporting of the debates.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. RAYMOND presented the credentials of G. H. Kyle as a Representative from the State of Arkansas, and moved that they be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAYMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the credentials were referred to the joint committee on reconstruction; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL POST ROADS.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report a bill for the establishment of certain post roads, which it is important should be passed at this time as the advertisements are about to be issued for contracts for four years. There can be no objection to the passage of the bill as it only embraces post roads.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURT AT ERIE, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SCOFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill directing a district court to be held at the city of Erie, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COLUMBIA BRIDGE CLAIM.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the petition and papers in the case of the Columbia Bridge Company be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. JOHNSON, his Private Secretary.

CONFISCATION.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to double the pensions of those who were pensioners by the casualties of the late war, and to pay the damages done to loyal men by the rebel government and rebel raiders, and to enforce the confiscation laws so as to pay the same out of the confiscated property of the enemy, of which I have given notice, for the purpose of having its consideration postponed for one month.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to its postponement to any particular day.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not ask to make it a special order.

Mr. BROOKS. What will be the effect of postponing the bill to a particular day?

The SPEAKER. It will come up on that day, or thereafter, if other business does not interfere. Special orders would take precedence of it.

Mr. BROOKS. I object to its postponement to any particular day, but I do not object to its introduction and reference.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand that the bill has been introduced.

The SPEAKER. It has.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know what the gentleman desires.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not want to give the bill precedence over other business, and I understand that the effect of postponing it to a particular day will give it such precedence.

Mr. STEVENS. It does not give it such precedence, for any business may be set down before it, if we shall desire, before that day arrives.

Mr. BROOKS. It gives it precedence on the Calendar for action. I am willing that it should take the ordinary course of business. I will agree to refer it to the gentleman's own committee, and he can dispose of it there.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know to what committee to refer it.

Mr. BROOKS. The select committee on reconstruction.

Mr. STEVENS. That would be a good committee, but it is not a committee of this House, but a joint committee, and it is necessary first to refer the bill to a committee of this House. I move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was so referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIABILITY OF SHIP-OWNERS.

Mr. ELIOT introduced a bill to limit the liability of ship-owners, concerning maritime liens, and for other purposes. It was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRIAL OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolutions, which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That public justice and national security demand that, so soon as it may be practicable, Jefferson Davis, a representative man of the rebellion, should have a fair and impartial trial in the highest appropriate civil tribunal of the country, for the treason most flagrant in character by him committed, in order that the Constitution and the laws may be fully vindicated, the truth clearly established and affirmed that treason is a crime, and that the offense may be made infamous; and at the same time that the question may be judicially settled, finally and forever, that no State of its own will has the right to renounce its place in the Union.

Resolved, That public justice and national security demand that in case of the conviction of said Jefferson Davis, the sentence of the law should be carried into effect in order that the Constitution and the laws may be fully vindicated and faithfully executed, the truth clearly established and affirmed that treason is a crime, and that traitors should be punished.

Resolved, That in like manner, and for like reasons, such of the most culpable of the chief instigators and conspirators of the rebellion, as may be necessary to satisfy the demands of public justice and furnish security for the future, and those criminally responsible for the murder and starvation of Union prisoners of war, should be tried and punished for the high crime of which they have been guilty.

Resolved, That justice should not fail of its purpose, and that all who are guilty of or responsible for the assassination of the late President, and the great offenders during the recent rebellion guilty of and responsible for the murder and starvation of Union prisoners of war, as well as those guilty of or responsible for other unparalleled violations of the laws of civilized warfare, are amenable to and should be tried, convicted, and punished by military tribunals authorized by law, and sanctioned by the common law of war and the usage of civilized nations, whenever and so far as may be necessary to secure the ends of justice.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, may be necessary to provide juries for trials for treason, for writs of error, and to carry into effect the purposes of the foregoing resolutions; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

MRS. MARY LINCOLN.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the bill for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, in order that the House may agree to a merely verbal amendment made by the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. To take up that bill during the morning hour requires unanimous consent.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. STROUSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to create the northern judicial district of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. C. WARMUTH.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a question of privilege. I offer to the House what purports to be a certificate of the election of H. C. Warmuth, as Delegate from the Territory of Louisiana, backed by nineteen thousand votes. I ask that it may be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred under the order of the House.

DESTITUTE INDIANS.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence and clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the President of the United States to cause to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for immediate subsistence and clothing of destitute Indians and Indian tribes within the southern superintendency, and for agricultural implements and seeds, a sum not exceeding $500,000 of the unexpended balance in the Treasury of appropriations heretofore made to enable the President of the United States to carry into effect the act of March 3, 1819, and any other acts now in force "for the suppression of the slave trade," and the accounts of such expenditure are to be laid before Congress during its present session; provided, that all articles to be furnished to said destitute Indians and Indian tribes shall be delivered to them on or before the 1st of July next.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. This is a joint resolution which passed the Senate in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. If there is no objection to the passage of the resolution on the part of any gentleman, I will call the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. Within the last day or two I have received some information which induces me to believe that we ought to pause before we pass this resolution. It proposes to divert an appropriation which was made for a special purpose to another purpose; and I understand that it is to pay probably for a large contract, and a very fraudulent one, made in the neighborhood of Kansas, involving an improper payment of nine or ten dollars per barrel for flour.

I hope the joint resolution will be postponed until we can investigate the subject. If my information is correct, it ought never to pass without a thorough examination. I may be misinformed, but if I am rightly informed, we ought at least to have a week or ten days before we pass so large a measure. With the consent of the gentleman from Kansas, I will move to postpone the further consideration of the joint resolution until the 10th day of next month.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield the floor to allow the motion to be made?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. No, sir; I cannot yield the floor for that purpose. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] that this resolution comes from the Senate, and is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

I am informed that the charges of fraud in a contract, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred, received the attention of the committee of the Senate, as, I doubt not, the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House.

The statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is incorrect in reference to the prices which have been paid under this contract.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was present at the time that this joint resolution was under consideration. I have heard of the reports which have been spoken of by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and I have conversed with the Indian superintendent of that superintendency on the subject, Mr. Sells, who is a man of honor and integrity, and he assures me that there is not a word of truth in the reports which have been referred to, that those contracts which have been let have been let upon fair and proper terms, and that these reports which have been put in circulation in relation to frauds and swindling in this department are altogether untrue. I am willing to rely upon the statement of that superintendent; he is a citizen of Iowa, who has held high and prominent positions in that State, and I have yet to hear a word of accusation brought against him.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the resolution in reference to the adjournment over, agreed to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Messrs. TRUMBULL, CLARK, and BUCKALEW, managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 53) for the relief of Barney Cain, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

DESTITUTE INDIANS—AGAIN.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. In addition to the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HUBBARD,] I desire to state for the information of the House that there are at this moment, according to the estimate of the Department, nineteen thousand loyal Indians and eleven thousand disloyal Indians. These latter have returned from the South and find their homes desolated and their farms and crops destroyed. They raised no crops last year, and are entirely without shelter, and I say to the House that this appropriation, on the ground of humanity alone, is an imperative necessity.

So far as the charge of fraud is concerned, I do not believe that it has any foundation in fact. The southern superintendent of Indian affairs, Mr. Sells, formerly Sixth Auditor, is a gentleman well known to many members of this House, and is a man who sustains as high reputation as any other man in this House, or out of it, in this country. I say that the passage of this joint resolution is an imperative necessity, and that it is demanded upon the highest grounds of humanity. Winter is upon these Indians; they are at home; they have returned home during the last summer and fall by aid of the Government, and now they are absolutely without support.

For the purpose of showing to the House the imperative necessity of the immediate passage of this joint resolution before the adjournment for the holidays, I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read, the following communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read the communication, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS,
WASHINGTON, D. C., December 15, 1865.

SIR: Referring to office report of the 8th instant, submitting a joint resolution for the diversion of certain funds under the control of the Department for the relief of destitute Indians and Indian tribes, I would respectfully urge that you recommend the matter to the immediate attention of Congress.

There can be no doubt of the fact that thousands of Indians in the Indian Territory are destitute of food and clothing; that they are actually starving with hunger and cold.

The records of the War Department will show that millions of dollars have been expended to feed white persons who have lately been in rebellion against the Government, and whose ability to sustain themselves was certainly equal to that of these Indians.

It is not a new thing to the Department that these people are suffering. Their great calamities, growing out of the war; the utter desolation of their once rich and prosperous country, have long been known; and appeals for assistance, which this Department has no power to afford, have been numerous and urgent.

Agent Dunn, of the Creek agency, writes, on the 26th September: "The fall winds are upon us and the frosts of winter are near at hand. My people, a majority of them, are nearly destitute of clothing of any kind. I earnestly call your attention to the fact; if neglected, I shall not wish to remain here to witness the consequent suffering." As to the disloyal Choctaws and Chickasaws, Agent Coleman writes, on the 19th September: "Having been away from their homes, and in the rebel army, for nearly three years, they now find themselves in a condition of extreme destitution, and actually suffering for the necessities of life, and undoubtedly will have to be supplied by the Government until another year will enable them to shift for themselves." On the 1st of October Agent Harlan writes, as to the loyal Cherokees: "Many have small surplus, and many have some, but not enough for their bread, and many poor widows have none and no means of buying any."

It is apparent that many will have to be fed until another crop shall be raised." Of the Seminoles, Agent Reynolds writes, on the 2d October: "Their flocks and herds have been driven off by the necessities of enemies of the country and the avarice of pretended friends, until their country is uninhabited and their improvements completely destroyed and laid waste."

Of the Indians at the Wichita agency, Agent Gookins writes, on the 18th September: "They are generally very poor; except a portion of the Shawnees and Caddoes, they are very poor and destitute. Among the Shawnees is a large proportion of widows and orphan children who, however, means whatever of sustaining their lives." On the 16th of October, Superintendent Sells writes: "I visited the temporary agencies of the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, and upon my return to Kansas I visited the temporary Seminole agency, and found the Indians alike destitute everywhere." Of the loyal Cherokees: "Their country is now a vast scene of desolation; houses burned, treasury robbed, fences and agricultural implements destroyed, cattle stolen, and their former fields overgrown with weeds; and now they return to their homes after an exile of years, destitute of almost everything to commence life anew, except personal energy, and they appeal with just expectations to the Government for aid and support. They want subsistence until they can raise enough to sustain themselves. To secure that end, they must have axes to build houses and fences; they must have plows and hoes to cultivate their lands; they must have stock, seed, &c.; and I apprehend that a great and magnanimous Government like ours will not permit this unfortunate people to go unaided during the inclemency of the winter months now approaching." Of the loyal Creeks, (about six thousand,) whose loyalty cost them exile and untold misery, he says: "During their exile in Kansas they lost all their property, including houses, fences, agricultural implements, and stock." * * * * "This portion of the Creeks have returned to their desolated homes, and now appeal to the Government for aid in clothing, farming implements, and seeds." Of the disloyal Creeks: "They too appeal to the Government for aid; they say they are destitute of clothing, the means of subsistence, agricultural implements, &c.; that they have no cattle and but few ponies—about one to every ten men—and no means with which to purchase more."

Of the refugee Choctaws and Chickasaws, (about two thousand,) who were being fed by Agent Coleman: "They insist that they have not the means of purchasing clothing, and that their destitution is extremely painful and must result in great suffering unless supplied by the Government. They are exceedingly anxious to resume their agricultural pursuits, and to enable them to do so they must be provided with agricultural implements and seeds." Of the Quapaws, Senecas, and Shawnees, he says: "These refugees have been in Kansas most of the time during the war, but now they are willing to return to their former homes, whither they will be removed during this month or the first of next. They, in common with all other loyal Indians, have had their homes desolated, and they appeal for aid in clothing and farming implements. They have been subsisted during the whole period of their exile, and must continue to be until they can raise a crop, when they ought to be able to subsist themselves." Of the Wichitas and other affiliated bands: "These Indians are poor—desperately poor—and unless they are fed by the Government they must starve or steal, and they may steal and yet not be able to prevent starvation among the helpless women and children. If they should be driven to the necessity of plundering for subsistence, murders may be expected to follow in the wake of robbery, and consequent strife, bloodshed, and war to exterminate these poor, dependent, and helpless Indians who have been driven to their extremity from sheer suffering."

It was with these statements before me, statements which, from personal observation while in the Indian country, I knew to be true, that, in my annual report, I set forth the destitution of these Indians, and their dependence upon the Government for food and clothing.

From sources outside of the officers of this Department like information has been received, and similar appeals made. Major General Reynolds, on October 12, transmits a petition of the southern Cherokees (dated September 27) stating that "they are in a very destitute condition, for the want of subsistence."

"They must stay where they are and have no subsistence, and no means of getting any for months to come, during all the inclemencies of winter, unless they are fed by your Government—their guardian and protector." General Hunt remarks in forwarding this to General Reynolds, "In the condition of these people it is important that they should not be driven by hunger to depredations on the property of the Chickasaws and Choctaws, especially at this time;" and General Reynolds says: "The necessity for contributing to their support is apparent, and humanity dictates that their sufferings be alleviated without delay."

To meet these urgent appeals, to relieve all this suffering, the Department has not one cent of funds, and cannot have until Congress acts.

The estimate of Superintendent Seils may seem large, but the necessities are great. To feed 19,070 loyal Indians for six months he asks for $520,611, which is at the rate of fifteen cents per day for each Indian; to feed 11,700 Indians lately disloyal, for six months, he asks for $312,940, which is at the rate of ten cents per day; and to clothe all these, and 1,500 others, who have subsistence, but no clothing, he asks for $451,780, which is at the rate of fourteen dollars for each Indian. His estimate foots up $1,185,331, and I think not less than $1,000,000 will suffice.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. N. COOLEY,
Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES HARLAN, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLARKE] will permit me, I will state that at the last session of Congress I acted on the part of the House in a conference committee upon the Indian appropriation bill. Near the close of that session there came to this House from the Senate an amendment to the regular appropriation bill, providing for the diversion of a quarter or half a million dollars, I forget which, for the relief and support of destitute loyal Indians. In the hurry of the closing part of that session our committee reported it to the House with a recommendation that it pass, but without any provision whatever guarding the disbursement of that appropriation. I felt that it was wrong to pass a mere general appropriation without any guard or check upon its disbursement.

And now, at this early day of this session, we find another proposition of the same character, proposing a discretionary appropriation at this time of $500,000 without one solitary check upon its expenditure.

I find in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the following sentences, which I will read, and to which I ask the attention of this House:

"I suppose that I am not making a remark which will startle the Department by its novelty, when I suggest that there is reason to believe that agents are too often in some manner interested with or for the traders. Certainly there can be no doubt that if such combination of interests should exist, it can only exist to the injury of the interests of the Indians, and consequently of the Government. It is not uncommon to hear the apparent rapidly-increasing wealth of employes of, or officers subordinate to, this office spoken of as a reproach to the service. I have no idea of undertaking a Quixotic attempt to correct the manners or morals of public officers, but in this particular matter I have been led to believe that an improvement can be effected, partly by the adoption and enforcement of new and stringent rules by the Department, and partly by the aid of congressional enactments."

And further down on the same page, he says:

"With a view to the correction of such wrongs as may exist, and the prevention of others in future, in relation to a combination of interests between agents and traders and contractors, I suggest an application to Congress for the passage of a law which shall make it a penal offense for any agent, or other officer in the Indian service, to be in any manner, directly or indirectly, interested in the profits of the business of the trader, or in any contract for the purchase of goods, or in any trade with the Indians, at their own or any other agency; the same penalties to apply to the licensing of any relative to trade, or to purchasing goods or provisions for the use of the Indians of any firm in which they or any relative may be partners, or in any way interested. I do not desire to push legislation to a point where it cannot be enforced, but I think that in this matter the most stringent measures are necessary."

Now, we have learned from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that there are reports in circulation of bad management, of misconduct, and of fraud in connection with the expenditure of these appropriations. I have heard a report that $280,000, or some other very large part of this money, has now actually been expended without warrant of law, and this is proposed for the purpose of paying what has already been contracted for without warrant of law. My colleague [Mr. HUBBARD] says that here are gentlemen from our own State; the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the superintendent, are from Iowa, and I see among the other names two or three others who are either from Iowa or connected with officers controlling the Indian department who are from that State.

Now, I do not like that these things shall exist any longer if we can avoid it by providing proper guards upon the distribution of this fund. It is said that the son of the superintendent is a partner in a firm who is interested in these contracts. I want these matters to be so arranged that the character of these gentlemen will not be liable to any such imputations as are now made, and when we are doing our utmost in the Committee on Appropriations, in pursuance of the manifest wish of this House, to guard against mal-administration, and cut down appropriations, I do not want appropriations made in so unguarded a manner as to lead to imputations like those referred to upon the gentlemen engaged in that department.

I think, therefore, that we ought to hesitate before thus voting away $500,000 by what is actually a new appropriation, which, it seems to me, ought to go, under the rules, to the Committee of the Whole. I hope that we shall not set the precedent of disposing of such an amount of money without placing the slightest guard upon its disbursement. If the House shall, as I trust it will, refuse to sustain the previous question, I shall propose that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that that committee may adopt such provisions, in connection with this appropriation, as will, in the estimation of all honest men, guard the disposition of this fund against any supposed mal-administration. I apprehend that a delay of a few days cannot make a very great difference. In a matter involving the expenditure of $500,000, the House ought to have a little time to provide, through the appropriate committee, that the appropriation of so large a sum of money may be surrounded by proper guards, none of which are now provided. By the resolution, the money is appropriated, in general language, "for the relief and support of Indians." I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLARKE] will see the propriety, on all grounds, of allowing the resolution to go to a committee, by which the proper guards can be provided, so that there will no longer be this liability to imputations upon the character of those who are to administer the fund.

Mr. GRINNELL. I think, sir, that, after the reading of the report to which we have listened, this is no time for my colleague [Mr. KASSON] to raise the question with regard to imputations of fraud in reference to the expenditure of this money for the relief of starving Indians. I would not have risen but for the fact that the gentleman whose name has been mentioned here is a constituent of mine. He was for many years the secretary of state of the State of Iowa. A more honorable gentleman does not reside in that or any other State.

The resolution now before us originated, I believe, with the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; certainly it is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior. It has met the approval of the Senate, and comes before the House with the sanction of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body, who have fully examined the subject. Yet my colleague proposes that we shall allow the resolution to go over for three weeks, leaving meanwhile those Indians on the frontier to die by starvation, in order, as the gentleman contends, that we may set at rest imputations which have been made against some citizens of my own State. Sir, those gentlemen need no vindication. I trust that my colleague will not rise here to impeach the character of citizens of his own State, against whom, as I believe, no imputation can justly be made.

I hope that we shall follow the well-considered recommendation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and pass this resolution. I repeat, it has received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, who certainly has the reputation of being an honest man, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is also I believe an honest man. I hope that we shall, by appropriating this money, save those destitute Indians from starvation, and not invite them in this inclement season to commence depredations upon the white people of the frontier. The bill is well guarded, has been well examined, and delay, I fear, is fraught with risk, if not with great wrong.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLARKE] yield to me one moment?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I will.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I rise simply for the purpose of asking the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to what seems to be a singular feature of the case now presented to the House. It seems, by the communication read at the desk, that there are some, perhaps eleven thousand, disloyal Indians of two tribes that are named, who have been about three years in the rebel army, and have been reduced to circumstances of destitution by reason of their absence from their homes while in the rebel service. They now come back to their homes, and appeal to the Congress of the United States to make provision for them on account of the suffering condition in which they are found by reason of their service in the rebel army.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to be a novelty, whatever the claim on the part of humanity may be, that Congress should, without consideration, provide speedily for the wants of returned rebel soldiers and their families. To ascertain the reasons why that should be done has led me to invite the attention of the House to this subject.

And permit me to say, in this connection, that if these claims of humanity are to be indulged, to induce Congress to make these appropriations, there are claims which could be urged with more startling force from hundreds who are suffering greater hardships, and who are more deserving of our attention. A communication was sent to me a few days ago by a gentleman who is traveling through the South, wherein it is stated that freedmen of the South, and their families, that the families of soldiers of the Army of the United States are now lying at railroad stations and elsewhere under circumstances not only of destitution, but dying of hunger and exposure. These remarks apply, as gentlemen know, to the families of our own soldiers in the North. It is not necessary for me to say what is so familiar to all, that there are thousands and tens of thousands of those who have been rendered fatherless and desolate by the late war for whom no provision has been made by the Government.

I only allude to this for the purpose of saying that if the claims of humanity are to be advanced to pass this appropriation speedily, there are other claims which come with more force from other classes of men.

I trust that this measure will be permitted to go to the committee, and that we may have more time to consider it.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to answer the suggestions made by the gentleman who last addressed the House. I will say before proceeding to do so, however, that this bill came from the Senate on Monday last when I was accidentally absent from the city, nor was I present when it was investigated by the committee of this House; but I have investigated it since. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHELLABARGER] refers to the fact that there are eleven thousand disloyal Indians who have been engaged in the rebel service, and that an appeal is made to us to afford them relief while our own soldiers are unprovided for. I admit that without some explanation the gentleman would make a strong case.

I desire to state with reference to these Indians that there are circumstances which take them out of the general rule, which would seem to make us provide for all who are in a destitute condition. These Indians are held substantially as prisoners of war. There are nineteen thousand loyal Indians as well as eleven thousand disloyal Indians in that condition; and as my authority, I refer to a communication from an officer of the subsistence department of the Army. He says that these Indians have been captured and taken to that reservation, and are held in the light of prisoners of war, and that as such they have been subsisted by the subsistence department. He says further, that for the purpose of having them more readily provided for they have been turned over to the Interior Department.

The fact is that these Indians were taken to that reservation under guard, and have been held as prisoners of war under guard of United States forces. If we wish to repeat against them the horrors of Andersonville prison, then let this bill go over for three or four weeks. If gentlemen do not desire to relieve our prisoners of war because imputations are cast upon Indian officials; if we wish to fail to do justice in this matter, let us postpone this matter. But I think we will prefer to do justice and take it up at once and pass it.

I have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, but I do object to throwing this resolution over for a month.

So far as these imputations of fraud are concerned, I do not know how much truth there may be in them; but I do know this, or at least I believe it, that if St. Paul were to come down and accept the office of the Secretary of the Interior, he would be accused of stealing in less than three months afterward. I believe that the present Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs are as good men as are in the country; and we take this resolution upon their recommendations, and facts furnished by their agents, who are deemed reliable. I do not think that these Indians should be permitted to starve because charges of fraud are made against certain officials.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a very large claim, and I trust the House will not begin by passing upon a bill appropriating $500,000 for Indian affairs, without a proper examination. I know of no subjects in this House, so far as my experience goes, which will better bear examination or endure more pruning than appropriations for Indian affairs.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to ask the gentleman if an examination by the Secretary of the Interior, by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, by the Senate itself, and by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, do not afford some sort of guarantee that this question has been examined, as well as if it had gone to the Committee of Ways and Means in the House?

Mr. MORRILL. Undoubtedly; and the examinations of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of the House, so far as I am concerned, will be received with as much confidence as the action of any other committee of this House; but at the same time there is a wonderful facility of transferring appropriations made for one purpose to another. It is not that I have any special opposition to this particular bill, but I think that no bill of this amount ought to pass without a critical examination by the proper committees of this House.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but I wish to make a single remark in addition to what has been already said upon the subject. It is this: that this matter has been fully canvassed, discussed, and examined before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and there was not a solitary member of that committee that became conversant with the facts relative to the condition of these Indians, their starvation, their wants, and the circumstances by which they were surrounded, who was not in favor of appropriating this money. Why, sir, this is a question of the starvation of these Indians. They are without clothing, without food, and in a destitute condition; and unless this appropriation is made to furnish them with provisions and clothing they must suffer and die by the hundreds.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to propound to the gentleman a question which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] promised to give me an opportunity to ask, but who took his seat without affording me the opportunity. I see no reason, for one, in the remarks of the advocates of this bill for providing for those rebel savages, unless, in some sense or other, they are held as captives of war. If they are, I would like to know why not liberate them, and have done with it? Andersonville cries aloud because those men were held and starved. If these prisoners that were, are in any sense yet prisoners of war, why not let them go? If they are not prisoners—as I understand they are not—the simple proposition is that we shall appropriate $500,000 to save from starvation a certain number of savages who are destitute because they have been fighting as rebels, when the land is full—when one half of it, at least, is full of white men, white women, and white children, who never fought to aid this rebellion, and who also are starved and naked and hungry. Now, I take it for granted that there is some difference between these classes; and if so, I would like to understand why these Indians should not be liberated, if prisoners; and if they are not prisoners, why they should be stipendiaries of the Government.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that a large number of these Indians have been heretofore held as prisoners of war, and fed by the War Department. They are now liberated and thrown upon the Interior Department, and it becomes necessary for that Department to make some provision for them or else they must starve. They have been held in such a condition that it has been impossible for them to raise any crops for the past season. They are, therefore, destitute of food. They have been held as prisoners of war, and have, therefore, been unable to prosecute their hunts, and are destitute of clothing.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would ask the gentleman from Iowa how many Indians there are in that destitute condition?

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I understand that there are altogether about thirty thousand. About eleven thousand of those are disloyal Indians. The chairman of the Indian Committee can correct me if I am in error, but I understand that there are about thirty thousand of these Indians, and some twenty-odd thousand of that number, I understand, have always been loyal.

Mr. SPALDING. Inasmuch as this joint resolution involves an appropriation, I would inquire whether it can be passed without reference to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is too late to raise that question now, the joint resolution having been debated. If made in time, it would have been a good point. It is too late now, according to the usage of the House.

Mr. SPALDING. I supposed that at any time an objection might be taken to the consideration in the House of a joint resolution or bill involving an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The objection is to its consideration in the House, and when the House considers it the objection is supposed to be waived.

Mr. SPALDING. As soon as I can get the floor I will move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I wish to make but one additional remark upon this question. These Indians are there in that Territory, and their condition is such that unless immediate provision is made for them they must suffer and must die during the coming winter. They have nothing on which to subsist, as I understand it, and these facts were made apparent before the committee that investigated the matter.

As to these reports that are in circulation in relation to the management of affairs in that department, I understand that they are without foundation; that there is no truth in those reports.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I desire to state that I have seen the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the superintendent of these Indians, and the Secretary of the Interior, and the gentlemen who have been concerned in making the contracts, and they assure me that there is not a single word of truth in the stories of fraud that have been referred to here. I think I know as much of what is required for Indians as any man upon this floor, and let me say to the House that if these Indians, thirty or forty thousand strong, are in a starving and destitute condition, humanity dictates that their wants should be supplied and that they should be protected from starvation.

I have spent the last five years of my life among the Indians, and I know that it is utterly impossible to prevent their committing depredations of every character so long as they are reduced to starvation.

I do not know anything about the allegations of fraud in this case, nor do I care; I know this, that no gentleman here could take charge of Indian affairs without being accused of fraud, and without being convicted of it, too, if the testimony of those interested in trading with the Indians is to be received. Upon such testimony a man could be convicted of horse stealing or any other crime.

I do hope that gentlemen will consider this matter, and that a sufficient appropriation will be made for this purpose. If $500,000 is required to relieve these starving Indians, let that amount be appropriated.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] that I am willing, as I doubt not the Committee on Indian Affairs are willing, to go with him at a proper time into any investigation he may think proper in reference to any charges of fraud in connection with the Indian department or the administration of Indian affairs. At present, as has been stated in the communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which has been read within the hearing of the House, and as has been stated by the other gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HUBBARD,] this action asked by the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs and by this joint resolution, which has unanimously passed the Senate, is one of imperative necessity, and is demanded, in my judgment, by the highest principles of humanity.

Whenever the history of the sufferings and trials of these nineteen thousand loyal Indians shall have been written, it will present a scene of horror, of woe, and of suffering, such as has been presented by no other people, by no other class, and at no other time, in the history of this rebellion. Gentlemen of this House will remember that famous appeal of the loyal Indians, who, in the midst of a rigorous winter, in an inclement season, when they were with their children upon the prairie with the thermometer at zero, with their dead and dying strewing their path, still preserved their loyalty to the flag of this country, and appealed to the Government for protection. They have returned to their homes since the close of the rebellion and find those homes deserted and destroyed. As I said before, they have raised no crops during the past year, and winter is upon them at this very hour.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CLARKE] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I must decline to yield further, as my time is nearly out. As I said, the winter is upon them; they have no means of subsistence, and if this House fails to pass this bill before the adjournment over the holidays many of these Indians must necessarily starve. I speak in behalf of these Indians, who have not only appealed to the protection of their Government, to which they have continued loyal, but five thousand of whom entered the service of the United States, and joined with us in the defense of the country. This is a question of humanity; one which appeals to the humanity of this House; one which, if this House fails to pass this bill, will appeal to the humanity, sympathy, and charity of this country. I now call the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question. Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 52, noes 47.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be read a third time.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a question of order. I understand that this joint resolution involves an appropriation requiring consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] that that point is made too late. If before proceeding to the consideration of this joint resolution that point had been raised, the Chair would have examined the joint resolution, and decided the question of order; but, as the gentleman well knows, the usage has been that if the consideration of a measure is proceeded with without objection, that point of order is considered to be waived, and cannot afterward be made.

The question was taken upon ordering the joint resolution to be read a third time; and there were—ayes 55, noes 57.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WINDOM and RADFORD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 59.

Mr. WINDOM. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 67, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brooks, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Dixon, Briggs, Dumont, Eliot, Farnsworth, Finck, Grinnell, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Trimble, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—43.

So the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being, "Shall the joint resolution pass?"

Mr. WINDOM demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the joint resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 53, noes 60.

The joint resolution was then passed.

Mr. WINDOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION AT PARIS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report of this date from the Secretary of State, and the papers referred to therein, concerning the Universal Exposition to be held at Paris in the year 1867, in which the United States have been invited by the Government of France to take part. I commend the subject to your early and favorable consideration.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, December 11, 1865.

The message and accompanying papers were, on motion of Mr. WENTWORTH, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

PEONAGE IN MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, requesting information relative to a so-called decree concerning the reestablishment of slavery or peonage in the republic of Mexico, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, and the documents by which it was accompanied.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, December 14, 1865.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION OF DOMESTIC MANUFACTURES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution from the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the Committee on Manufactures of the respective Houses inquire if the tax from the internal revenue act upon the products of domestic manufacture is greater than the duty, premium on gold, expenses of exchange, and transportation upon similar products imported, and if thereby the foreign product is entered for consumption upon more favorable terms than the domestic product, to report a remedy by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move that the House concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following concurrent resolution from the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the joint committee of the two Houses appointed under a joint resolution at the last session of Congress to investigate Indian affairs, have liberty to make their report at any time during the present session of Congress.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the House concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARY LINCOLN.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of House bill No.

4, for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment. The amendment is merely a verbal one, in which I move that the House concur.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line ten, after the words "United States," insert "for the current year," so that the clause will read: Provided always, That any sum of money which shall have been paid to the personal representatives of the said Abraham Lincoln, since his death, on account of his salary as President of the United States, for the current year, shall be deducted from the said sum of $25,000.

The amendment was concurred in.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. BROOMALL asked to have entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution relative to the constitutional amendment for the abolition of slavery was referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The entry was accordingly made.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Freedmen's Bureau, Major General Howard, be directed to inform this House whether any real estate, seized under the act of 17th of July, 1862, as enemies' property, the title to which, by that act, was vested in the United States, has been assigned or allotted to freedmen as a residence and homestead by any department of the Government; and if so, whether the same has been restored to the rebel owners, the people of color ordered off, and by whose authority; and also whether abandoned plantations have been thus kept and thus restored; and, if known to the said Superintendent of the Freedmen's Bureau, to state under what pretense of authority traitors' property vested in the United States under the confiscation act was taken from the United States and bestowed on conquered enemies.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE HOLIDAYS.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the report of the committee of conference, that when the two Houses adjourned on Thursday the 21st of December, they should adjourn until Friday January 5, 1866.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question, to make a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses relative to the adjournment over the holidays. Instead of the propositions adopted by the Senate and the House we have agreed on an adjournment from Thursday the 21st of December to Friday the 5th of January next. I desire to say in regard to that report that they were the best terms we could get on the part of the House from the Senate. The committee on the part of the House, representing the sentiment of the majority here, were desirous of having the full time provided in the House resolution, but the Senate would agree to no more than what we have reported.

I will state further, that it was stated to the committee on the part of the Senate that there would not be much done in the House to-morrow as many members had made arrangements to leave to-night. We were told that there were some things they wanted to do in the Senate to-morrow, but that the House could by unanimous consent agree that no business should be transacted to-morrow.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that when the House adjourns on Friday the 5th of January, it will adjourn until the following Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to entertain that motion, but it is not in order. It has been decided repeatedly that the House cannot determine in December what time it will adjourn over in January.

DEATH OF HON. ORLANDO KELLOGG.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, the sad duty is devolved upon me of announcing to this House the death of Hon. ORLANDO KELLOGG, a member-elect to the Thirty-Ninth Congress, from the sixteenth district of New York.

Mournful as this task always is, it is especially so in this case; for it is not merely a colleague upon the floor of this House whose loss I mourn, but an intimate personal and political friend of my whole adult life, and one with whom, for many years as my professional partner, my relations were of the nearest and most intimate character. And in laying this my scanty tribute upon the grave of my dead friend, I seem rather to myself as bewailing the personal loss of a brother than as taking part in the common forms of official eulogy.

Mr. KELLOGG was born in Elizabethtown, Essex county, New York, on the 18th of June, 1809. There his life was spent, and there he died on the 24th day of August last.

His ancestors were the pioneers in the settlement of his native town, and bore and left there a respected name.

His father, an industrious and worthy mechanic, died just as his eldest son, whose memory we now honor, attained the age of seventeen years, leaving a family impoverished and reduced to actual destitution by the lingering and painful disease which had for years deprived them of the labors and support of their head.

At this early age—or indeed at a still earlier—commenced the labors and responsibilities of life with Mr. KELLOGG, and from them he never flinched. Assuming not only cheerfully but eagerly the duties thus forced upon him, applying himself to his father's trade, with hammer and ax and jack-plane, he wrought out by the labor of his hands, for his widowed mother and orphaned brothers and sisters, support and comfort and the means of education. Never was graver task undertaken by such a youth—never one more faithfully and thoroughly performed.

At the age of twenty-two, under the advice of friends, he commenced the study of law, and after serving the protracted course of study then required by the rules of his State was admitted to practice in the year 1838.

In 1840 he received from Governor Seward the appointment of surrogate of his native county, and performed most acceptably the delicate and trying duties of that office for four years.

In 1846 he was elected a member of the Thirtieth Congress.

At the end of his term he returned to private and professional life, and so remained till called by the almost unanimous voice of his district again to represent them in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and was again re-elected to the present Congress.

Of his congressional career many here can speak with better and fuller knowledge than I. He was never a prominent or obtrusive member. Diffident and cautious of speech, he never thrust himself upon the notice of the House; and indeed rarely rose to speak. But among those who could truly appreciate such qualities his sterling good sense, his practical wisdom, his unerring tact in the management both of men and things, did not fail to stamp him as a man who, in many of the qualities that go furthest to constitute worth for the practical everyday duties of life, had on the floor of the House few equals and no superior.

At the breaking out of the rebellion Mr. KELLOGG gave himself, heart and soul, purse and person and family, to the cause of his country. Though precluded by controlling personal and family circumstances from active participation in the military service, no man in that service or out of it gave up his time, his labors, or his means, more unreservedly to the support of the military measures of the Government.

To the soldiers from his own district his relation seemed almost paternal, and particularly his own peculiar district regiment, the one hundred and eighteenth New York volunteers, in whose organization he took a most active part, and in whose ranks his son marched, always welcomed him with enthusiastic zeal as their father and their friend.

No labor was too severe for him to undertake on behalf of the humblest soldier. Nay, even crime could not steel his heart against mercy, and the erring and condemned soldier has more than once found in him an intercessor who would not be denied, and has been restored by his efforts to life and liberty and reformation.

In his profession Mr. KELLOGG stood deservedly high. Precluded by the very circumstances of his early life to which I have adverted from the scholarly research and nicety of legal learning which are essential to the perfect lawyer, he yet brought to his profession that broad and comprehensive view both of facts and principles, that quiet sagacity, that intuitive perception of secret causes and motives, that prompt and fearless action, and that perfect and unspotted integrity of character that made him from the very outset of his professional career a counselor most widely sought and most highly valued. In his profession he was most emphatically a peacemaker, and his first inquiry when consulted by a client seemed always to be, how can litigation be honorably and properly avoided?

As a jury advocate he stood in the very first rank in his section of the State. Plain, and often blunt of speech, but always apt, always forcible; often rising to genuine and lofty eloquence, and often exhibiting that wonderful combination of humor and pathos that is reached by nothing short of genius; always impressing his auditory with the conviction of his own earnestness and sincerity—the first requisite of a successful orator—he combined a larger number of the essential requisites of a jury advocate than often falls to the lot of one man.

But it is as a citizen and neighbor, in his social and private relations, that I would speak most freely of Mr. KELLOGG; and here, alas! I feel the most deeply my inability to do justice to his character, for the very reason that my knowledge of him was so intimate, my love and respect for him so thorough.

Though often rough and almost repellant in manner, no kinder, truer, more loving and sympathizing heart ever beat in human bosom. In every act or question touching his fellow-men his first impulse was rectitude, his second kindness.

I never knew a man who enjoyed more universally the respect and confidence of the entire community in which he dwelt, irrespective of all difference of social position, of character, or creed.

Always bold, frank, unreserved in his political opinions and utterances, no political antagonist ever grew into a personal enemy. For while he knew no fear or hesitation in the expression of his own political views, he extended the largest tolerance and charity to all who differed with him.

His manliness, boldness, frankness, and tenacity of purpose commended him to the admiration and confidence of all; and he most accurately filled the character painted by the Roman poet, as "Justum ac tenacem propositi virum."

The sanctity of the family circle I cannot invade further than to say that never was husband, son, and father mourned with a deeper and holier grief than he, by widow, mother, and children.

Mr. Speaker, those of this House whose lives are passed amid the din and jostle of crowds, the cares and anxieties of active political and business life, can hardly appreciate the strength of the social ties that bind together the few inhabitants of a sequestered community like that in which Mr. KELLOGG lived. We are not, as the inhabitants of the crowded city are too apt to be, divided from each other by party-walls; but the life of each man seems sensibly to run into that of every other; we seem to be in effect but a larger family circle.

When, on the morning of the 24th of August, the hurried report ran through our village that Mr. KELLOGG was dying, was dead—he whom we had all seen a few hours before in robust health, with every promise of long life and useful labor—there was not a house on which it did not seem that a shadow fell, not a family but seemed a family of mourners.

Among those rugged hills where his life was spent and where his body now lies his name and memory will be long cherished; and the present generation, at least, must fully pass away before the personal memories of his virtues, his kindnesses, and his true and manly heart can perish from among us.

Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolutions, and move their adoption:

Resolved, That this House has learned with sincere regret the death of Hon. ORLANDO KELLOGG, member-elect to this House from the sixteenth congressional district of New York, and that to mark their respect for his memory, the members of this House will go into mourning by wearing crape upon the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

Ordered, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but for a few moments in the tribute I feel called on to make to the memory of my colleague and former associate in these Halls. In eulogizing the dead we are wont—and it is, perhaps, excusable—to indulge in language of exaggeration. We are tempted to magnify the virtues of the deceased and to make no note of faults. But, sir, I believe if through his spirit my lamented colleague, whose death we are now called on to commemorate, could speak, he would admonish us to spare all over-wrought encomiums, and utter no praise or commendation that we did not feel was justly due. This, in my estimation, would be characteristic, for he was a man of singular directness and sincerity. Nor is it necessary to say anything more than the simple truth concerning him. A true portraiture of his character—such as has been so eloquently and faithfully presented by his successor and intimate friend, [Mr. HALE,] who has just preceded me—is all that is required to command our respect and admiration.

Mr. KELLOGG was a man of great native sagacity, thoroughly honest impulses, and fearlessness in the vindication of his convictions. His judgment was formed more by intuition than through the ordinary process of reasoning and reflection. Discarding the doubts and subtleties that would embarrass most men, he marched directly to his conclusions. Once there, he seldom had occasion to change, for truth and honesty were the lights which guided him. He was a man of strong common sense.

As we have just heard, Mr. Speaker, he was, in the fullest meaning of the term, a self-made man. Commencing life without any of the advantages with which ancestry or wealth line the pathway of a young man, he felt that his future was to depend upon himself; that from his own unaided efforts he was to win success, and manfully did he strike the hard blows that were necessary to forge and shape his destiny. He was one of those instances, Mr. Speaker, so common under the favoring influences of the institutions and laws of this country, which illustrate that the avenues to the most honorable position and the highest success are here alike open to all, and within the reach of every man who will apply his God-given faculties with fidelity and earnestness of purpose.

His early life, as we have just learned, was incumbered with more than the mere necessities of caring for himself. The wants of a widowed mother and her destitute children were dependent on him for supply, and the hard-earned wages of a mechanic had to suffice for them as well as for his own support. We have just been told how faithfully he discharged these duties; how, with the earnings of his own strong arm, want was kept from a household, and education and comfort and happiness secured to its inmates. This illustrates the real character of the man, and speaks for him more eloquently than any words of eulogy I can command.

As a lawyer, my knowledge of Mr. KELLOGG was more from his general reputation than any other source. It is sufficient, however, as evidence of his professional ability, that throughout the northern part of our State no one was more largely sought as a legal adviser and defender.

Of his private life I can only speak as I did of his professional reputation, from the measurement of public esteem. Nowhere was he so beloved and believed in as among his immediate neighbors and in the domestic circle. This, Mr. Speaker, is the best vindication of a man's private worth and virtue.

Mr. KELLOGG was not what is usually designated a showy man. Modest and unobtrusive, he was not, perhaps, as generally known by his associates in the Thirty-Eighth Congress as many others; but, Mr. Speaker, there were few men in that body, or in this, on whose judgment and patriotism safer reliance could be placed. Strong in his own convictions, and earnest in maintaining them, he was nevertheless one who respected the faith and opinion of others. Culling the right from the wrong, he was always prompt to award credit or acknowledge error. Eminently practical, he could be carried away by no theoretical abstractions, but deemed it wiser and more statesmanlike to secure the most that could be obtained, rather than to risk all in battling for what he might desire. He was the character of a man so essential in the councils of the nation at this time when we are called upon to complete the difficult and transcendently important work left by our military heroes and brave soldiers on whom is still the dust of battle.

It is perhaps fortunate, Mr. Speaker, that we are not too constantly influenced by our knowledge of the uncertainty of life. Placed here for earnest, active duties, to labor for the benefit and advancement of the living world, it is wisely provided that our energies should not be paralyzed by the ceaseless apprehension of death. But, sir, while this may be true, we must not shut our eyes to the importance of heeding those constant admonitions of our mortality. It is well that the voice of mourning is sometimes sounded so near that we cannot but listen; and when in our own ranks, and standing side by side, our comrades are stricken down, surely each one of us should be admonished to be prepared for the summons that must come to all as it came to our lamented friend.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join in giving proper respect to the memory of our late associate, Mr. KELLOGG, of New York.

Death has again crept upon us, and removed from our deliberations a member who was always attentive and ever at his post. During the last Congress I had occasion at various times to confer with him in the discharge of our respective duties. I found him a man of mature reflection, never hastily arriving at a conclusion, but his opinions being formed, he was firm in his convictions and his actions, sincerely having in view the interests of the people who had honored him with their support. It is becoming, therefore, that I should add a few words to what has been so well and truthfully said.

In casting aside, for a brief period, the secular avocations incident to our positions, let us reflect upon the awful reality of death—no respecter of persons; striking high and low; the gifted as well as the uneducated. We are admonished to be ever ready, for we cannot know at what time we too may be summoned. The future after our sojourn here is not given us to know of; but we can observe the examples about us, and so live that when we come to die it may be said of us, as I now say of the deceased, that he was a faithful Representative, a good citizen, and a man who endeavored to carry out the golden rule of life, by doing unto others as he would wish to be done by.

You have listened to the particulars of Mr. KELLOGG's early youth and subsequent manhood, and in it we find an example well worthy of imitation—not rare, I am glad to say, in this country or among our people—that by industry and perseverance we can succeed. He steadily stepped the march of life, gaining the respect of those with whom he came in contact, and feeling a full sense of the requirement to do right in every public and private situation. He rose by his own exertions, and advancing, proved the truth of what we all know, that in this free America every man has it within his reach, by labor and industry, to make himself useful to his fellow-men and an ornament to society. This is suggestive to us all here, and should be well observed by those entering into manhood. No royalty is left an inheritance to the American youth. He is estimated at what he is capable of, and has it with himself alone to be distinguished or not. Then, indeed, are those who fail to improve such opportunities in twofold culpable. No young man need despair; all is well with him here if he does justice to himself. The career of Mr. KELLOGG is a clear and undisputable instance of this, and for this reason it is our privilege to-day especially to do honor to his memory.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, there is no rank nor station where death does not intrude, reminding us by its havoc how uncertain is human life. Since the 4th of March last, several who were members of that Congress, have been followed to their last resting-places. ORLANDO KELLOGG, whose departure from earth calls forth these testimonials, left us at the adjournment of last session full of manly strength, with every prospect before him that man could have of being in his place here a member of this body. This instance, among the many others, is before us forcibly illustrating how feeble our hold is upon life. An acquaintance of twenty-five years, which very early ripened to close friendship for the deceased, impels me to join in these testimonials. I could not allow this occasion to pass without adding a tribute to his memory. Full opportunity was given me to study his character and prove his many noble and manly virtues. He rose from penury and obscurity by his own individual effort. A superior mind with a laudable ambition soon gave him prominence and influence. He chose law for his profession, and readily accumulated a business that became a lucrative practice. A versatile and practical talent, and great self-reliance, soon won for him the confidence of the circle who knew him. His great forte, as a lawyer, was in addressing a jury. For them he possessed ingenious argument, tempered and fused with a vein of rich and racy wit, that generally rendered him invincible. His wit was keen and piercing, but the wound it left was soon healed by his earnest friendship and constant flow of good humor. He was a man of large heart, and at once became deeply interested in behalf of suffering and affliction. In moments of relaxation from business he was genial and social, and chained all by the cheerfulness of his conversation. He always remembered with warmth his earliest associates, however humble in life their position. Sprung from the laboring class, the early ties that bound him to them were never weakened. They went to him with confidence, and to that confidence he was ever faithful. Mr. KELLOGG in politics was a Whig, then a Republican. He was firm and sincere in his political opinions, and advocated them with great warmth and success.

To his influence is largely due the healthy condition of public sentiment in the district which he represented. He was a Representative in the Thirtieth Congress together with our martyr President. A friendship was contracted there between them which was revived and strengthened during the last Congress. As a member of this House he seldom spoke. His work, though quiet, was effectual, and his whole career in the Thirty-Eighth Congress is marked with great industry. He was a warm supporter of the national Administration, and gave his undivided strength in aid of the suppression of the rebellion that was then attempting the destruction of the Government. He lived to see that rebellion crushed, and lived, too, to mourn with us the death by the hand of the assassin the head of the nation—the man to whom he was bound by private friendship, and whom he loved for his public virtues. Men's names are not treasured here except in record—they are soon forgotten—but among the people whom the deceased represented the name of ORLANDO KELLOGG will be treasured as household words and will not fade from memory for ages to come.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Though I did not know that this death was to be announced to-day until a few moments ago, yet I feel impelled not to permit this occasion to pass without paying a feeble tribute to the memory of ORLANDO KELLOGG. I never knew him until I met him in this House as a member of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. Shortly after the organization of that Congress I was thrown on a committee with him, and there I became acquainted with the man. I there came to know something of his value, his strong common sense, his firm will, the manner in which he investigated subjects for the purpose of arriving at truth, and, when arrived at, the tenacity with which he clung to it. I became fond of ORLANDO KELLOGG. I admired him as a friend, as a legislator, and as an honest man.

And after the adjournment of the last Congress I happened to be in his own vicinity on a visit, and there I could understand very fully why ORLANDO KELLOGG was sent to this Congress. I never knew any man who, I thought from all I could see, was more beloved by the entire body of citizens in his vicinity than he was. Everywhere I went and spoke of ORLANDO KELLOGG, I found he was the ideal of a man of honor in the minds of all his constituents. I received so much kindness from him, and from his friends on account of my acquaintance with him, that I felt tempted, though perhaps out of order, as I was not consulted in regard to this matter, to say these feeble words.

After I left him, I had barely reached my home when I received the startling news that ORLANDO KELLOGG was dead. I had left him in the full flush of health. He was a younger man than I was, and such a sudden announcement struck me with great surprise, as I have no doubt it did the members of the last Congress who are here. When one so full of life is cut down so suddenly, it is an admonition to us all to be ready for the final change which will soon overtake us all.

The resolutions were agreed to; and thereupon (at half past four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 21, 1865.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. FESSENDEN, GRIMES, HARRIS, HOWARD, JOHNSON, and WILLIAMS, as members on the part of the Senate of the joint committee to inquire into the condition of the late so-called confederate States.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Assistant Secretary of War, which was sent to the Senate at the last session of Congress, but not received until after the adjournment, transmitting, in obedience to law, a statement of the contracts and orders given, and the purchases made, by the ordnance department, during the year ending December 31, 1864; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Second Auditor of the Treasury, which was sent to the Senate during the last session, but not received until after the adjournment, transmitting, in obedience to law, copies of all accounts which have been received at that office from persons charged or trusted with the disbursement of moneys, goods, or effects for the benefit of the Indians from July 1, 1863, to June 30, 1864, with a list of the names of all persons to whom moneys, goods, or effects have been delivered within that year for the benefit of the Indians, the amount accounted for, and the balances under each specific head of appropriation still remaining in their hands; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State with accompanying documents on the subject of a decree of the so-called Emperor of Mexico, of the 3d of October last; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State concerning the Universal Exposition to be held at Paris in the year 1867, in which the United States have been invited by the Government of France to take part; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, in reply to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, requesting the President, if not inconsistent with the public service, to communicate to the Senate "the report of General Howard, of his observations of the condition of the seceded States, and the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau therein," stating that the report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands was on the 19th instant transmitted to both Houses of Congress, as required by the act of March 3, 1865; which was referred to the joint committee to examine into the condition of the so-called confederate States, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint assistant assessors of internal revenue—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (H. R. No. 61) to establish certain post roads—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) to amend the Constitution of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the resolution of the Senate authorizing the joint committee appointed under a resolution of the last session of Congress to investigate Indian affairs, to make their report at any time during the present session of Congress.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the resolution of the Senate providing that the Committee on Manufactures of the respective Houses inquire if the tax from the internal revenue acts upon the products of domestic manufacture is greater than the duty, premium on gold, expenses of exchange, and transportation upon similar products imported, and if thereby the foreign product is entered for consumption upon more favorable terms than the domestic product.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 4) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Lincoln, widow of the late President of the United States.

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence and clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of slack-water navigation on the Cannon river and lakes, from Red Wing, on the Mississippi river, to the Minnesota river, near Mankato; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the passage of a law granting a bounty to certain members of the second Minnesota cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of military posts on the northern overland mail route from St. Cloud, in that State, to Fort Walla-Walla, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORTON presented memorials of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of mail routes from Hutchinson to Torah; from Watertown, in Carver county, via Winstead and Bergen, to Glencoe, in McLeod county; from Blue Earth City, Minnesota, via Fairmount, Jackson, and Sioux Falls City, to Yankton, the capital of Dakota Territory; from Henderson, Minnesota, to Fort Rice, on the Missouri river, and from Fort Wadsworth to Devil's Lake, in Dakota Territory; from Hastings, in Dakota county, to Cannon Falls and Kenyon, in Goodhue county, by the way of New Trier, in the county of Dakota, and State of Minnesota, and for the establishment of a post office at New Trier; which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. CONNESS. I present the petition of B. Dean, president, and the board of trustees of the Alameda Coal Mining Company, a corporation authorized under the laws of California, praying that an act may be passed for extending the time for entering the coal lands in that State. Having introduced a bill on this subject which has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, I move that this petition have the same reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of colored soldiers enlisted between the 15th of June and the 4th of July, 1864, praying that Congress will pass an act giving them the same bounty as soldiers afterward enlisted; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Carroll county, Ohio, who have served in the Army during the late war, praying for the passage of a law equalizing bounties, giving to the volunteers of 1861 and 1862 the same bounties as those of 1863 and 1864; and for the grant of one hundred and sixty acres of land to each volunteer who served during the war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented the memorial of Jesse Baldwin, suggesting a mode of resuming specie payments, and praying for the repeal of the legal-tender law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer a memorial from persons representing two hundred and eighty thousand citizens of the United States, colored citizens of the State of Tennessee, remonstrating against the admission of Senators and Representatives from that State as it is now organized. They set forth in their memorial, which is very brief, that "On the 7th day of August last a convention of colored men was held in this city (Nashville,) there being a sufficient number of delegates from each division of the State to obtain the sentiments of our people. After deliberating for four days, and passing such resolutions as it was thought would be conducive to their improvement, it adjourned.

"Among other things it was resolved that the colored people of the State of Tennessee respectfully and solemnly protest against the congressional delegation from this State being admitted to seats in your honorable bodies until the Legislature of this State enacts such laws as shall secure to us our rights as freemen."

"We cannot believe that the General Government will allow us to be left without such protection after knowing, as you do, what services we have rendered to the cause of the preservation of the Union and the maintenance of the laws. We have respectfully petitioned our Legislature upon the subject, and have failed to get them to do anything for us, saying that it was premature to legislate for the protection of our rights."

"We think it premature to admit such delegation. It is true we have no vote, but we nevertheless desire and will do anything we can to support the Government."

"We deem it unnecessary to attempt to make an argument in favor of our protest, believing, as we do, the justice of our cause to be a far better argument than we could make; yet it may not be amiss to say that, inasmuch as the United States Constitution guarantees to every State in the Union a republican form of government, we are at a loss to understand that to be a republican government which does not protect the rights of all citizens, irrespective of color."

"Being impressed with these convictions, we cannot refrain from appealing to your honorable and dignified assembly, entreating the hope that we will be heard and our cause considered."

"The Government did not forget to call for our help, and now we think that we have a right to call upon it."

In presenting this memorial I desire to express my entire sympathy with it. I feel that a community which despoils two hundred and eighty thousand people of their rights cannot expect to be recognized as a republican government. The colored memorialists are right, and when they ask that their case shall be considered I hope that they will have at least that indulgence, even if Congress does not grant them their rights. I move the reference of this important memorial and protest to the joint committee of the two Houses having this subject under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia similar to the petitions which I presented yesterday, calling upon Congress to provide irreversible guarantees in the work of reconstruction, so that we shall have security for the future, and, among those guarantees, proposing the enfranchisement of the colored race. I may say, sir, that I am glad to present this petition from citizens of the District of Columbia, because it shows that there are good people here who are not indifferent to the great cause of equal rights. I am more disposed to make this remark because I see notice of a public meeting of whites in this city in the hope of arresting this cause. Of course the whites can meet if they please, but any vote on their part will be under the circumstances little better than an absurdity. Of course such a meeting called under such auspices will vote to continue their unjust pretensions. Squatters who for generations have squatted on the rights of others do not quietly give up their claim. The whites of the District of Columbia, in respect to the colored people, are no better than squatters, and it is our duty to dispossess them. Hereafter nobody should be allowed to squat on the rights of others, civil or political. I move the reference of this petition to the joint committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I present the petition of three thousand seven hundred and forty colored men of South Carolina, in which they respectfully ask Congress, in consideration of their unquestioned loyalty, exhibited by them alike as bond or free, as soldier or laborer, in the Union lines under the protection of the Government, or within the rebel lines under the domination of the rebellion, that in the exercise of our high authority over the reestablishment of civil government in South Carolina their equal rights before the law may be respected; that in the formation and adoption of the fundamental law of the State, they may have an equal voice with all loyal citizens, and that Congress will not sanction any State constitution which does not secure the exercise of the right of the elective franchise to all loyal citizens otherwise qualified in the common course of American law, without dis-tion of color. The petitioners proceed to say that "without this political privilege we will have no security for our personal rights and no means to secure the blessings of education to our children." "The State," they add, "needs our vote to make the State loyal to the Union and to bring its laws and administration into harmony with the present dearly-bought policy of the country, and we respectfully suggest that had the constitution of South Carolina been free, as we now ask that it shall be hereafter, this State would not have led one third of the United States into treason against the nation. For this object your petitioners will, as in duty bound, ever pray," &c. I take pleasure in being able to say, Mr. President, that the persons whose names appear to this petition are real persons, and that very many of them have rendered important services to the cause of the Union during the rebellion. I ask that the petition may be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction, so-called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be ordered.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Joshua D. Todd, a lieutenant in the Navy, praying to be allowed the difference of pay between master and passed midshipman during the time he was acting master, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 57) for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Joshua D. Todd, late of the United States Navy, deceased. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am instructed by the joint committee to investigate Indian affairs to offer a resolution, which I shall ask to have considered at the present time. It relates to the publication of the report of that committee and the evidence taken by it; and as Congress is about to adjourn over the holidays, I will say to my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, that I exceedingly desire that it be acted on to-day in order that the printing of the testimony may be going on during the recess. There will be less crowding on the printing office now than there will be at a subsequent period in the session, and if the printing is begun during the recess the committee will be able to make their final report at an earlier day. The committee had the subject under consideration in their meeting this morning, and agreed to recommend that two thousand five hundred additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate, one thousand for the use of the Indian Bureau, and six thousand five hundred for the use of the House of Representatives, which would be ten thousand copies in all. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the joint committee to investigate Indian affairs be printed, and that two thousand five hundred additional copies be printed and bound for the use of the Senate, and one thousand additional copies for the use of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The committee were also in favor of the printing of six thousand five hundred copies for the use of the House, but under the rules, each House orders the printing for itself, and therefore this resolution is confined to the printing for the Senate and the Indian Bureau.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, this resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the object of the Senator from Wisconsin is to have a report from the Committee on Printing to-day, it would be hardly practicable. One of our colleagues is absent, and it would be impossible to obtain from the Superintendent of Public Printing an estimate of the cost, without which the Committee on Printing are not in the habit of making any reports. As to the necessity of printing this document and the number of copies to be printed, we should be governed entirely by the views of the committee of which the Senator from Wisconsin is chairman. I think, therefore, that by unanimous consent whatever number of copies the committee think best to have printed on the part of the Senate had better be assented to at once without a reference. It is not customary for the Senate to order printing for the House of Representatives. That would not be proper.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That is not contained in the resolution. I will state in reply to my honorable friend, that this matter was under consideration this morning in a full committee, and they were unanimously of the opinion that there should be printed two thousand five hundred extra copies for the Senate, one thousand for the Indian Bureau, and six thousand five hundred copies for the House; but this is simply a resolution as to the printing for the use of the Senate. I hope we may, by unanimous consent, order the printing, for it will come at some other time, and it had better be begun now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this resolution at the present time. Is there any objection? No objection being made, the resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on its adoption. The resolution was adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 54) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of the totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States," which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 55) to maintain and enforce the freedom of the inhabitants of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 56) granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 8) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, the bill (S. No. 6) supplying appropriate legislation to enforce the amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery, was taken from the table, read a second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, the bill (S. No. 7) to enforce the guarantee of a republican form of government in certain States whose governments have been usurped or overthrown, was taken from the table, read a second time by its title, and referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

CONFINEMENT OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. HOWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the Constitution declares that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State or District wherein the crime shall have been committed;" and whereas several months have elapsed since Jefferson Davis, late president of the so-called Confederate States, was captured and confined for acts notoriously done by him as such, which acts, if duly proved, render him guilty of treason against the United States, and liable to the penalties thereof; and whereas hostilities between the Government of the United States and the insurgents have ceased, and not one of the latter, so far as is known to the Senate, is now held in confinement for the part he may have acted in the rebellion except said Jefferson Davis: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested, if compatible with the public safety, to inform the Senate upon what charges or for what reasons said Jefferson Davis is still held in confinement, and why he has not been put upon his trial.

MILITARY TRIALS AT THE SOUTH.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the records and proceedings, with the review of the same by the Judge Advocate General, of the military commissions by which the following-named persons were tried and convicted, namely: 1. E. W. Andrews, of South Carolina; 2. J. M. Brown and C. C. Reese, of Georgia; 3. J. L. McMillan and Niel McGill, of North Carolina.

THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the franking privilege now allowed to members of Congress, except upon written communications.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was Ordered, That the following bills be printed:

A bill (S. No. 35) to grant one million acres of public lands for the benefit of public schools in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 49) more effectually to provide for the national defense by establishing a uniform militia throughout the United States; and

A bill (S. No. 50) in relation to the Freedmen's Bureau.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 34) in relation to the qualification of jurors and to writs of error in certain cases be printed.

DEBTS DUE THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the heads of the State, Treasury, War, Navy, and Interior Departments, and the Postmaster General, report by alphabetical lists the names of all persons indebted to the United States according to the records and papers of their respective Departments, reporting the amount owing by each person up to the 30th of June, 1865.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) This resolution can only be considered by unanimous consent at the present time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not rise to object to the resolution; I have never objected to a resolution of inquiry since I have been in the Senate; but I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky explain the object of this resolution. I suppose it would take twenty clerks three months to prepare such a report as is called for by the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the honorable Senator's estimate of the work that will be required to respond to this resolution is greatly exaggerated unless the books are very imperfectly kept. I suppose one or two clerks in a very short time could compile all the information asked for in the resolution. My reason for offering it is this: I believe from information I have received that there is a large number of defaulting debtors to the Government, and I want to know who they are, where they are, and what steps are being taken to hold them to an accountability for their defaultation.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the resolution had better lie over; and upon the general subject of resolutions of this kind I desire to say a few words, but I wish my friend from Kentucky not to regard the remarks I am about to make as having any particular reference to this more than to other cases.

The little experience that I had as a Department officer satisfied me that if the members of Congress understood how much labor they gave occasion for, and how much expense in printing by the calls which are made for information, they would before offering resolutions of this kind in the respective Houses take pains to inquire in the first place and ascertain exactly what they do want and what would probably be the result of the call. In the Treasury Department these debts and defaults of one kind and another have been accumulating for a great number of years; and recently, according to my information—I know the proposition was made while I was in the Treasury Department—a special agent has been appointed with express reference to these debts, to look them up, and see whether they could not be settled, authority having been given to the Secretary of the Treasury to compromise certain debts.

The Senator from Kentucky will observe that his call upon the various Departments is unlimited in point of time; it goes back to the foundation of the Government. I presume that the other honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. GUTHRIE,] who was formerly at the head of the Treasury Department can give more information on the subject than I can; but it is apparent to me that it would involve considerable expense to prepare the information proposed to be called for. It must take considerable time to examine the books of the various Departments in order to make out this list of defaulting debtors, many of the items of which have become in a measure obsolete and are of no sort of consequence; and the list will be so large, when obtained, that to publish it will involve the publication of a book again, upon which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] commented yesterday.

I think the resolution had better lie over, and let the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DAVIS] take some pains to inquire what would probably be the result of the call in regard to the employment of clerks, the examination of books, and the accumulation of material, the greater part of which is utterly useless, and in regard to the expense of the publication of the list, the result of which would be to lay a book on our tables to be examined, but upon which probably no action could be taken. If the Senator wants a list covering any particular period of time let him designate it; but it strikes me that it is not exactly wise—and perhaps it is more than the Senator intends—to call for a very large mass of information and require a very long examination of the books of the Departments. I know that frequently members wishing to get at a particular thing, which, if they had been definite, could have been reached in an hour, make a call for information that requires the labor of several clerks for weeks before it can be obtained, and then wonder is expressed that the answer does not come in at once, when the result is that, instead of a single sheet or a single statement, reams of paper almost are written over with information of no sort of consequence.

I hope, therefore, that members will be a little careful in these matters. Making general calls of this kind occasions expense and trouble unnecessarily, and which they do not mean to create when they make the call, being desirous simply to obtain certain information. By going to the Department and inquiring in the first place as to the particular points to which their inquiry was meant to be directed, they would be furnished invariably with all the information necessary to enable them to reduce their call to the very point or points on which they wished to be enlightened.

Mr. DAVIS. Instructed by the remarks of the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat, I will restrict this call for information to the period between the 4th of March, 1861, and the 30th of June, 1865, the close of the last fiscal year. The honorable Senator from Maine can strike the rock, and the fountains will flow; the Departments, with all their archives, are open to him, but they are not open to some of the rest of us. He can get information at his pleasure; some of us cannot. I am induced to believe, from much that I have heard, that there is a great degree of culpable carelessness and of favoritism, if not of corruption, in pressing the defaulters to the Government; and my object is to have a little light thrown upon the subject for the purpose of having more impartial exertion and effort to collect the debts that are due by the public debtors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been made to the present consideration of the resolution, it will lie over under the rules.

PROTECTION OF FREEDMEN.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up Senate bill No. 9, on which I desire to make a few remarks.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 9) to maintain the freedom of the inhabitants in the States declared in insurrection and rebellion by the proclamation of the President of the 1st of July, 1862, the question pending being on Mr. COWAN's motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to remark that on a mere question of reference, it is not allowable to enter to any great extent into the discussion of the merits of the measure. A limited discussion is often allowed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, sentiments having been announced on the motion to refer this bill which I cannot indorse, I am compelled by a sense of duty to make a few observations. I ask the indulgence of the Senate in digressing from the real question at issue for the purpose of entering my protest against the attack made by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] upon the message of the President and the report of the Lieutenant General, and to condemn the kind of testimony used in support of that attack. But before I enter into a discussion of this evidence, I desire to make a few remarks upon the great questions which have become involved in this debate. Sir, if the Senator from Massachusetts is right, and the evidence adduced by him establishes that the great mass of the people of the South are capable of the atrocities imputed to them by the anonymous witnesses paraded before this Senate, then a union of these States is impossible, then hundreds of thousands of the bravest and best of our land have fallen to no purpose, then every house from the Gulf to the lakes is draped in mourning without an object, then three thousand millions of indebtedness hangs like a pall upon the pride and prosperity of the people only to admonish us that the war was wicked, useless, and cruel. But we are told that although we cannot have union, although we cannot extend the blessings of the Constitution to seven millions of our fellow-citizens who reside in the late rebel States, yet we have conquest and territorial dominion which we should perpetuate regardless of ourselves and our posterity. Senators complain of the growing power of the Executive, and at the same time seek through him to govern near half the territory of the United States by the military, which all must see will make it the overshadowing power in the land.

Mr. President, have conquest and dominion been the mottoes under which millions of the loyal men of the United States have rallied round the flag of their country? On the contrary, have not union, freedom, and equality before the law been the words of inspiration to the soldier, who poured out his blood as water, and to the nation, which expended its treasure as dross? Now that these sacrifices have been made and the victory won, are we not bound by every obligation which reverence for the dead, regard for the living, and fear of God can inspire, to preserve, not destroy, the Constitution and Union of these States? Thus far there are two plans presented to the country for the reorganization of the South. The one which finds favor in Congress—if we were to judge of the sentiment of that body from those who talk most—is to govern eleven States as conquered provinces by an exercise of power unwarranted by the Constitution, which must inevitably derange, if not destroy, that charter of our liberties. This plan trusts all to force, nothing to conciliation; all to revenge, nothing to charity. It treats with equal contempt the good opinion or hatred of seven millions of American citizens. It disregards the example of Ireland, where the oppression of Great Britain has produced millions of enemies, breathing vengeance from every part of the civilized world, before whom crowned heads now tremble. The vast armies which devour the substance of Europe and oppress and burden the downtrodden masses with ruinous taxation to hold subjugated provinces subservient to despotic will, have no warning for the advocates of this scheme. But what is the evidence used to induce the Senate to believe that the exercise of this despotic power is necessary? In judging of testimony upon ordinary subjects we take into consideration not only the facts stated, but the character and standing of the witness, his means of information, and last, but not least, his appearance upon the stand.

In this great cause the Senate properly called upon the chief Executive of the nation for information. Was he a witness whose character and standing before the country would entitle his testimony to consideration? Let the voice of a great people who have indorsed his patriotism and his administration answer. Were his means of information such as to entitle him to speak advisedly upon this subject? Let the machinery of Government, that collects facts from every department, civil and military, upon the table of the Executive, answer. Was not his appearance before the public in communicating this testimony to the Senate and the country such as to remove all grounds of suspicion? Let the exalted tone, bold and fearless statement, pure and patriotic spirit of both his messages be his best vindication. In the first he says:

"I found the States suffering from the effects of a civil war. Resistance to the General Government appeared to have exhausted itself. The United States had recovered possession of their forts and arsenals; and their armies were in the occupation of every State which had attempted to secede. Whether the territory within the limits of those States should be held as conquered territory, under military authority, emanating from the President as the head of the Army, was the first question that presented itself for decision."

"Now, military governments, established for an indefinite period, would have offered no security for the early suppression of discontent; would have divided the people into the vanquishers and the vanquished; and would have engendered hatred rather than have restored affection. Once established, no precise limit to their continuance was conceivable. They would have occasioned an incalculable and exhausting expense. Peaceful emigration to and from that portion of the country is one of the best means that can be thought of for the restoration of harmony; and that emigration would have been prevented; for what emigrant from abroad, what industrious citizen at home, would place himself willingly under military rule? The chief persons who would have followed in the train of the Army would have been dependents on the General Government, or men who expected profit from the miseries of their erring fellow-citizens. The powers of patronage and rule which would have been exercised, under the President, over a vast and populous and naturally wealthy region, are greater than, unless under extreme necessity, I should be willing to intrust to any one man; they are such as, for myself, I could never, unless on occasions of great emergency, consent to exercise. The willful use of such powers, if continued through a period of years, would have endangered the purity of the general administration and the liberties of the States which remained loyal."

How plainly he here states the dangers of the plans proposed by those who would reduce the South to conquered provinces, and hold them under military rule, subjugated and degraded Territories, denied all the rights and privileges of the Constitution and the Union. How modestly and patriotically he declines to assume such enormous responsibilities. Does not the passage just read place him before the world a disinterested and competent witness upon these great questions?

He continues:

"Besides, the policy of military rule over a conquered territory would have implied that the States whose inhabitants may have taken part in the rebellion had, by the act of those inhabitants, ceased to exist. But the true theory is, that all pretended acts of secession were, from the beginning, null and void. The States cannot commit treason, nor screen the individual citizens who may have committed treason, any more than they can make valid treaties or engage in lawful commerce with any foreign Power. The States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired, but not extinguished; their functions suspended, but not destroyed."

"But if any State neglects or refuses to perform its offices there is the more need that the General Government should maintain all its authority, and as soon as practicable resume the exercise of all its functions. On this principle I have acted, and have gradually and quietly, and by almost imperceptible steps, sought to restore the rightful energy of the General Government and of the States. To that end, provisional governors have been appointed for the States, conventions called, Governors elected, Legislatures assembled, and Senators and Representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. At the same time the courts of the United States, as far as could be done, have been reopened, so that the laws of the United States may be enforced through their agency. The blockade has been removed, and the custom-houses reestablished in ports of entry, so that the revenue of the United States may be collected. The Post Office Department renews its ceaseless activity, and the General Government is thereby enabled to communicate promptly with its officers and agents. The courts bring security to persons and property; the opening of the ports invites the restoration of industry and commerce; the post office renews the facilities of social intercourse and of business. And is it not happy for us all, that the restoration of each one of these functions of the General Government brings with it a blessing to the States over which they extended? Is it not a sure promise of harmony and renewed attachment to the Union that, after all that has happened, the return of the General Government is known only as a beneficence?"

There again he maintains a perfect consistency with the theory of this war, that it was prosecuted for the preservation of the Union, not for its destruction, or the annihilation of its component parts. But he frankly admits the difficulties which all have felt and which all still feel. He says:

"I know very well that this policy is attended with some risk; that for its success it requires at least the acquiescence of the States which it concerns; that it implies an invitation to those States, by renewing their allegiance to the United States, to resume their functions as States of the Union. But it is a risk that must be taken; in the choice of difficulties, it is the smallest risk; and to diminish, and, if possible, to remove all danger, I have felt it incumbent on me to assert one other power of the General Government—the power of pardon. As no State can throw a defense over the crime of treason, the power of pardon is exclusively vested in the executive government of the United States. In exercising that power, I have taken every precaution to connect it with the clearest recognition of the binding force of the laws of the United States, and an unqualified acknowledgment of the great social change of condition in regard to slavery which has grown out of the war."

Upon the subject of the amendment of the Constitution abolishing slavery, the President uses the following language:

"The next step which I have taken to restore the constitutional relations of the States has been an invitation to them to participate in the high office of amending the Constitution. Every patriot must wish for a general amnesty at the earliest epoch consistent with the public safety. For this great end there is need of a concurrence of all opinions, and the spirit of mutual conciliation. All parties in the late terrible conflict must work together in harmony. It is not too much to ask, in the name of the whole people, that, on the one side, the plan of restoration shall proceed in conformity with a willingness to cast the disorders of the past into oblivion; and that, on the other, the evidence of sincerity in the future maintenance of the Union shall be put beyond any doubt by the ratification of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, which provides for the abolition of slavery forever within the limits of our country. So long as the adoption of this amendment is delayed, so long will doubt and jealousy and uncertainty prevail. This is the measure which will efface the sad memory of the past; this is the measure which will most certainly call population and capital and security to those parts of the Union that need them most. Indeed, it is not too much to ask of the States which are now resuming their places in the family of the Union to give this pledge of perpetual loyalty and peace. Until it is done, the past, however much we may desire it, will not be forgotten. The adoption of the amendment reunites us beyond all power of disruption. It heals the wound that is still imperfectly closed; it removes slavery, the element which has so long perplexed and divided the country; it makes of us once more a united people, renewed and strengthened, bound more than ever to mutual affection and support. "The amendment to the Constitution being adopted, it would remain for the States, whose powers have been so long in abeyance, to resume their places in the two branches of the national Legislature, and thereby complete the work of restoration. Here it is for you, fellow-citizens of the Senate, and for you, fellow-citizens of the House of Representatives, to judge, each of you for yourselves, of the elections, returns, and qualifications of your own members."

This amendment the Secretary of State, as provided by law, has proclaimed to the world is now a part of the Constitution, and that, too, by the concurrence of several of the lately rebellious States, eight of those States being required to constitute the requisite majority. By this proclamation the honorable Secretary, whose age, learning, and eminent public services command respect both at home and abroad, has unmistakably pronounced his solemn opinion that North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Virginia are States in the Union. But suppose he is wrong, and they are not States in the Union, no one doubts the power of Congress to make them such by recognizing them as

States; and in either event we have this constitutional amendment, the supreme law of the land. By it four million slaves are set free, and slavery forever made impossible within the limits of the United States. But what makes this constitutional amendment a practical, living thing, is the power given to Congress to enforce it by appropriate legislation. It is to be hoped the exercise of this power will be rendered unnecessary by the conduct of the States concerned.

The simple fact that we possess the power must have a salutary effect in constraining the local authorities to accord the freedman his natural rights. For the purpose of asserting this power a bill is already before the Judiciary Committee authorizing the President to continue the Freedmen's Bureau in an effective form so long as abuses may exist in any of the States, and to withdraw the same whenever the good order of society and the safety of the freedmen no longer require its protection, and again to reinstate it whenever new abuses shall arise requiring the exercise of its power. Through this constitutional agency the General Government may redeem its solemn pledge of emancipation, so far as to confer upon all men, without regard to color, perfect equality before the law. May not the freedmen be as well protected, if this view of the constitutional amendment be correct, by the strong arm of the Government while we recognize no State as having been out of the Union, as by that other theory of State destruction and territorial subjection?

In the one case military power may or may not be used, depending upon the good faith and fair dealing of the States themselves, which every principle of interest and humanity must induce them to exercise toward their emancipated slaves. But in the other case, military power is the only remedy proposed; no opportunity to do voluntary justice is offered, but a conclusive presumption of guilt is indulged upon evidence of unknown letter-writers. What more do gentlemen want than a submission to the laws and a willingness to return to the Union?

Gentlemen say they wish security for the future. What security can we have that they will obey the laws more than the assurance of the chief Executive and the Lieutenant General that order and civil authority are being rapidly restored? What stronger proof can we have of their repudiation of secession than the fact that their Senators and Representatives are now knocking for admission into the Halls of Congress? What stronger guarantee of the effectual abolition of slavery and the restoration to civil rights of the freedmen can be given than the pledge recorded in the supreme law of the land proclaiming their liberty, and authorizing Congress to provide for its maintenance? For, whatever course may be pursued, it must for years be the effective power of Congress, cooperating with the Executive, that will protect the freedmen from oppression; and while Congress retains this power no necessity exists for treating the late rebel States as conquered provinces. But it may be, and from the extraordinary course of this debate it would seem, that something more is contemplated than the restoration of the Union, the punishment of treason, the abolition of slavery, and the protection of the freedmen. If this were all, it could be accomplished during the present session of Congress by a cordial cooperation of the various departments of Government. I for one am content with this. I am anxious at once to secure the benefits of our glorious victory. I am anxious to restore the Union and the Constitution, and to repudiate slavery and secession. These are greater reforms than any other age has produced; this is more progress than has been achieved since the formation of our Government. I am anxious to secure this before we attempt more.

But another step is proposed, an advanced position is assumed before those already taken are secured, and that is a proposition for universal suffrage without regard to color, to be enforced by the central Government without regard to law. Whether this be a white man's Government or not is not the real question before the country; but the true question is, shall the General Government interfere with the right of suffrage in the States? When this is attempted we are not only met by the prejudices, whether just or unjust, of a large majority of the white inhabitants of the United States, but by the conscientious opinions of the chief Executive of the nation, sustained by many of the wisest and best statesmen and jurists of the country, that the Constitution has placed the question of suffrage exclusively within State jurisdiction. I do not propose to argue at length either the prejudices of the former or the constitutional objections of the latter. But we must remember that prejudice is often more powerful than reason, and that it often happens that prejudice itself is founded in reason. If this is not a white man's Government, one thing is certain, that neither the black man or the red man has ever reared such a Government. It must also be remembered that this Government is still regarded by other nations as an experiment, and its failure is confidently predicted for the reason that history furnishes no adequate proof of the capacity of man for self-government. They are not so much mistaken in their general reading as in the facts which lie at the foundation of our institutions. They forget that we are a race descended from the original Anglo-Saxon stock, and that our ancestors learned the lessons of liberty through generations of martyrdom, and have practiced those lessons for three hundred years in this distant land comparatively free from the degrading influences of arbitrary power; that superior natural endowments, universal education, and a vast and productive country have enabled us, alone, among all the nations of the earth, to sustain free government.

It may not be unjust for a people whose liberties can only be sustained by intelligence and virtue, to pause and hesitate before they intrust those liberties in the hands of four millions of unfortunate persons just emerged from the most degrading slavery before they shall have had an opportunity to learn the principles of that Government whose functions they are called upon to administer.

This prejudice is not necessarily selfish or cruel, but it may arise from an honest desire for the preservation of our own liberties and the liberties of the race which the war has made free. However this may be, the fact still exists, that few States in the North have yet granted the right of suffrage in any form to the colored men within their borders, although those colored men are often educated, frequently more enlightened than some white men among whom they reside. And while the States we represent deem it inexpedient to confer the right of suffrage upon the colored men within their borders, are we justified as their representatives in compelling the late rebellious States to confer that right upon the mass of unfortunate blacks who have yet to learn the first principles of their duties and responsibilities as citizens? But this is not all. If we are disposed to disregard the sentiments of our constituents and the action of our State governments, shall we trample upon the constitutional right of the States to regulate the question of suffrage, without first amending the Constitution as provided in that instrument? This is dangerous ground and a fearful responsibility. There is no question of necessity to justify it. The Union can be restored without it. The freedmen can be protected without it. The honor of the nation can be vindicated without it. But in attempting it, all may be lost, and we may have despotism and anarchy, or rather anarchy and then despotism, in the place of our once glorious and prosperous Union. But before I conclude, let me once again refer to the testimony of the President and the Lieutenant General to the bright prospect that is before us. The former says:

"From all the information in my possession, and from that which I have recently derived from the most reliable authority, I am induced to cherish the belief that sectional animosity is surely and rapidly merging itself into a spirit of nationality, and that representation, connected with a properly-adjusted system of taxation, will result in a harmonious restoration of the relation of the States to the national Union."

General Grant, whose means of information are second to none, except perhaps the President, being in immediate communication with the military authorities throughout the South, says:

"My observations lead me to the conclusion that the citizens of the southern States are anxious to return to self-government within the Union as soon as possible; that while reconstructing, they want and require protection from the Government; that they are in earnest in wishing to do what they think is required by the Government—not humiliating to them as citizens—and that if such a course was pointed out, they would pursue it in good faith. It is to be regretted that there cannot be a greater commingling at this time between the citizens of the two sections, and particularly of those intrusted with the law-making power."

Against this we have statements, extracted from letters written by persons unknown to the country or to the Senate. We have no means of judging of their character for truth and veracity, or what information they really possess, and above all of what motives induced them to write.

We are not surprised at these stories, whether true or false. We expected, in the present disorganized condition of society, that crimes would be committed in the South. We know that crimes are committed, and men talk nonsense and folly in all countries. Even in the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts, with all her public virtues—and they are many—there are records of crime and misery. And it would have been strange if in the South, with all the mad passions of the people excited by this terrible civil war, no scenes of horror should have been witnessed since the fall of the rebellion. But it is said in some of the letter extracts read to the Senate that men in the South threaten to fight us through the ballot-box. Do we object to that? Are we not willing to submit all questions to the voice of the people? Are we not willing to be governed by the majority? Did we not fight them with the sword because they repudiated the decision of a constitutional majority? Are we willing to prolong the restoration of the Union and risk the experiment of taxation without representation for fear that the application of the rule, that the voice of the majority is law, shall drive us from power? Shall we not rather seek the perpetuation of the Union party by the accomplishment of the objects for which it was organized? Nothing but our own folly can deprive us of the rewards due to the services which that organization has rendered to the country and to the cause of liberty and humanity. The preservation of the Union, the repudiation of secession, and the abolition of slavery, the parent of secession, are great deeds; and the party that has achieved them, so long as it adheres to the principles it has vindicated, will be remembered and sustained by a generous and patriotic people."

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I introduced the bill now under consideration to meet a pressing need. It was introduced in the interest of humanity and justice. I have examined many and many pages of official records, records connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, records of military officers, and letters written by some of the foremost officers of our armies, men who have made their names immortal in the history of the country. The evidence conclusively shows that great atrocities and cruelties are perpetrated upon the freedmen in various sections of the country; that the poor, dumb, toiling millions who look to us for protection are inhumanly outraged.

The Senator who has just addressed us questions the testimony adduced here by my colleague yesterday. He might as well question the massacre at Fort Pillow, and the cruelties perpetrated at Andersonville where eighty-three per cent. of the men who entered the hospitals died; Andersonville, where more American soldiers lie buried than fell throughout the Mexican war; where more American soldiers lie buried than were killed in battle of British soldiers in Wellington's four great battles in Spain, and at Waterloo, Alma, Inkermann, and Sebastopol. The Senator might as well question the atrocities of sacked Lawrence and other atrocities committed during the war. If he will go into the Freedmen's Bureau and examine and study the official records of officers who for five or six months have taken testimony and have large volumes of sworn facts; if he will go into the office of General Holt and read the reports there, his heart and soul will be made sick at the wrongs man does to his fellow-man. No one questions the intelligence and judgment of General Grant—he is in communication with the officers of his Army; but I say here, and say what I know, when I declare that nearly every general commanding in the rebel States has written the strongest letters in regard to the tone, temper, and disposition of the people and the condition of that country. Some of them go further than my colleague went yesterday. There are letters in the Senate Chamber to-day, written by commanders in States and in whole sections of country—men whose name and fame are world-wide—which, if read by the Senator, would more than convince him of the truth of the testimony adduced. It makes the heart sick to dwell on such records of crime and wanton brutality.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to be distinctly understood as not opposing the passage of the bill. I am in favor of legislation on this subject, and such legislation as shall secure the freedom of those who were formerly slaves, and their equality before the law; and I maintain that it can be fully secured without holding the southern States in territorial subjugation. Whether or not instances of individual cruelty exist is quite immaterial to the point, for I believe they can be remedied quite as well if we regard those States as States in the Union as if we regard them as Territories. All that is necessary is for us to exercise the power we have under the Constitution.

Mr. WILSON. I think the moments consumed in the dispute whether those States are in the Union or out of the Union is lost time. I do not choose to discuss that question, or to raise it; I believe our powers are full, ample, complete, to bring back those States, and restore them, and preserve, also, the rights and the liberties there of all that breathe God's air. I do not want to degrade a single man in the rebel States. I do not want them to degrade others, and I do not mean that they shall do it. I do not believe the Senator is opposed to this bill; I do not think he can oppose it. I do not believe the Senator is in favor of that kind of freedom that turns the emancipated working-man out into the highway, then takes him up as a vagrant and makes a slave of him because he cannot get a home when they do not allow him to lease land or buy a humble home. They have enacted a law in the State of Mississippi that will not allow the black man to lease lands or to buy lands outside of the cities. Where in God's name is he to go? Into the public highway? Then he is a vagrant; then he is taken up under the vagrant laws and sold into bondage. They have enacted a law in the State of Louisiana that he must get a home in twenty days, and they will not sell him land or allow him to lease land.

We must annul this; we must see to it that the man made free by the Constitution of the United States, sanctioned by the voice of the American people, is a freeman indeed; that he can go where he pleases, work when and for whom he pleases; that he can sue and be sued; that he can lease and buy and sell and own property, real and personal; that he can go into the schools and educate himself and his children; that the rights and guarantees of the good old common law are his, and that he walks the earth, proud and erect in the conscious dignity of a free man, who knows that his cabin, however humble, is protected by the just and equal laws of his country. I am sure the Senator from Nevada is in favor of that policy of emancipation that carries with it equality of civil rights and immunities, rather than that other policy that makes the enfranchised bondman a serf or peon, the slave of society, its soulless laws and customs.

Having read hundreds of pages of records and of testimony, enough to make the heart and the soul sick, I proposed this bill as a measure of humanity. I desired, before we entered on the great questions of public policy, that we should pass a simple bill annulling these cruel laws; that we should do it early, and then proceed calmly with our legislation. That was my motive for bringing this bill into the Senate so early in the session. Many of the difficulties occurring in the rebel States between white men and black men, between the old masters and the freedmen, grow out of these laws. They are executed in various parts of the States; the military arrest their execution frequently, and the agents of the Freedmen's Bureau set them aside; and this keeps up a continual conflict. If these obnoxious State laws were promptly annulled, it would contribute much to the restoration of good feeling and harmony, relieve the public officers from immense labors, and the freedmen from suffering and sorrow; and this is the opinion of the most experienced men engaged in the Freedmen's Bureau. I have had an opportunity to consult with and to communicate with many of the agents of the bureau, with teachers, officers, and persons who understand the state of affairs in those States.

But, sir, it is apparent now that the bill is not to pass at present, that it must go over for the holidays at any rate. The constitutional amendment has been adopted, and I have introduced a bill this morning based upon that amendment, which has been referred to the committee of which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] is chairman. This bill will go over; possibly it will not be acted upon at all. We shall probably enter on the discussion of the broader question of annulling all the black laws in the country and putting these people under the protection of humane, equal, and just laws.

We were told yesterday by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that there was an apprehension on this side of the Chamber that the Democratic party was soon to come back into power through the agency of the President of the United States. Sir, I think the Senator from Delaware altogether mistaken in regard to any such apprehension. I entertain no such apprehension. I do not apprehend that the Democratic party is soon to come into power through the agency of the President of the United States or through the agency of anybody else. A party that has maintained the attitude assumed by the Democratic party during this great rebellion, that has allied itself with a sinking and lost cause, is not likely hereafter to take or to control the regenerated Government of the United States. It needs reconstruction and reorganization quite as much as do the rebel States, and it must have reconstruction and reorganization before it can govern this now free country through anybody's agency.

I know there has been a studied and systematic attempt during the last few months to separate the President of the United States from the great party that elected him. Some persons fear that these attempts will be successful. I am among those who have never entertained any such fears, and if there are any persons who do entertain them I advise them to dismiss such fears at once. The President is bound to the men who elected him, by honor, by principle, and by interest. His fame is to rest upon the great fact that he shall complete the work Abraham Lincoln commenced—the work of restoring a broken Union, enfranchising a race, and preserving the cause of human liberty in America. I am sure that the President of the United States is as conscious as any man living that his strength now and his fame with posterity depend upon his moving right straight forward and onward to the restoration of the Union, and to the security of the liberties of all men, and the security of equal, universal, and impartial liberty. He found the rebel States on the 15th of April, when he assumed executive power, broken, shivered, conquered, subjugated. No people since the morning of creation ever fought a braver battle than our rebel countrymen; and no men were ever so defeated, so subjugated, so conquered—conquered in the field, their ideas annihilated forever; their power broken; and their fortunes lost. No men have been so conquered and so punished; and, sir, I have it not in my heart to seek their lives or their blood.

I believe it to be the sentiment and will of the country that we should demand the amplest guarantees for the future; that in demanding those guarantees we should say nothing and do nothing to humiliate or degrade anybody. I believe that it is in our power by a firm and inflexible adherence to principle to secure all the guarantees that the patriotic and liberty-loving men of the country require. I believe the President of the United States has labored according to his sense of public duty to prepare the rebel States for restoration, and to secure the liberties of the enslaved people of the country. I would have acted differently in some things, but he has done nothing to prevent the Congress of the United States from moving right straight forward and onward in the adoption of the necessary legislation to complete the great work of unity and liberty. He has made no issue with Congress, and Congress has made no issue with him. He does not undertake to dictate to us; he has pursued his own line of policy. And we ought to follow the convictions of duty; if we believe that we should go further than he has gone, let us pass the needed legislation; if then the President shall take issue with us, an issue will be made. I do not believe that any issue will be made by the President. I have an undoubting faith that if we enact the needful legislation to secure the equal liberties of all men and bring back the rebel States into Congress, it will receive the sanction and approval of the Executive.

I know, sir, that it has been and is the policy of the Democratic party to represent that a great and inevitable conflict is to come between the President and Congress. It was so represented before the country last autumn. We met it then; met it in the West; met it in New Jersey; met it in Pennsylvania; met it in the great State of New York; and to-day, of the twenty-five loyal States of the country, twenty-three are in harmony with us of the Republican party upon this floor; our sentiments and our opinions are more strongly sustained to-day than they have been on any other day that the sun ever shone upon, and will be stronger to-morrow. There are some men who profess to be more devoted to the President than the great mass of the men who elected him. It is our duty to give the President a manly, generous, and earnest support; I am sure he wants none other. Let us look with hope and confidence, let us be prudent in speech, but let us be as inflexible as destiny itself in the maintenance of the cause of equal, universal, and impartial liberty throughout the whole country—that sacred cause, for which three hundred and twenty-five thousand Union soldiers sleep in their bloody graves to-day; that holy cause, for which more than four hundred thousand scarred and maimed heroes tread the soil of the Republic. The gallant heroes of twenty-six hundred actions have done their duty, their whole duty; they have trampled the rebellion down under the iron heel of war. Let us do ours.

It is committed not to the President alone, not to Congress alone, but to an Administration and a Congress placed in power by the American people when the land was convulsed with civil war, to restore the Union, and so to restore it that there shall be no slave, no black law, no rule, no regulation, nothing whatever to oppress the men we have made free. They are our wards, to use the words of the President of the United States. Abraham Lincoln pledged himself to his country and his God for their emancipation and the maintenance of their liberties; and that pledge, I believe, every department of this Government, executive, legislative, and judicial, will inflexibly maintain.

Measured by the state of things that existed last April we have made progress in many respects—in some sections of the country a great deal of progress, in others less. Perhaps in some localities we have gone backwards, but there has been general progress in the country during the last nine months. Comparing the condition of things that existed when the President entered upon his duties, and looking at the rebel section as a whole, we have made progress—not so much as I wish we had made and as I think we could have made; but if in the past we have made less progress than we desired, we must make more in the future, and that progress is to be made only by fidelity to the great cause by which we have stood during the past four years of bloody war. For twenty-five years we had a conflict of ideas, of words, of thoughts—words and thoughts stronger than cannon balls. We have had four years of bloody conflict. Slavery, everything that belongs or pertains to it, lies prostrate before us to-day, and the foot of a regenerated nation is upon it. There let it lie forever. I hope no words or thoughts of a reactionary character are to be uttered in either House of Congress. I hope nothing is to be uttered here in the name of "conservatism," the worst word in the English language. If there is a word in the English language that means treachery, servility, and cowardice, it is that word "conservative." It ought never hereafter to be on the lips of an American statesman. For twenty years it has stood in America the synonym of meanness and baseness.

I hope, too, that we are not to make apologies here for our action. It does not fit our lips or our ears. The way to settle the question, growing out of this great civil war, is to say to the rebels, "We do not want to degrade you; we resisted for twenty years your aggressive policy for slavery and your barbarian ideas; we bore the dishonor and disgrace of your policy; you plunged us into the fire and blood of civil war to perpetuate slavery and make the ideas of slavery dominant in Christian and republican America; we resisted your aggressions before the people; we shrank not from a civil war; we met the contest; you fought bravely, with a bravery worthy of a better cause, but you were defeated, crushed, annihilated, ground to powder; not a flag of yours waves between the capital and the Rio Grande; not a soldier bears a rebel bayonet on the continent; we do not seek your lives or your blood, and you have got but little property left for us to seek if we would. All we ask—and this we will ask and this we will have as sure as God rules the world—is that the men emancipated by war, emancipated by legislation, emancipated by the proclamation of the martyr President, emancipated by that great crowning act, the constitutional amendment, shall be as free as we who proudly tread our native hills." I want every rebel and every rebel sympathizer, every repentant and unrepentant rebel in the country, to understand that the loyal men of this nation who voted their treasure and offered up their blood, who gave their sons to the preservation of the menaced Union and the imperiled cause of liberty, have sworn it, they have written it on the lids of their Bibles, they have engraved it on their doorposts, that these enfranchised men shall be free indeed, not serfs, not peons, and that no black laws nor unfriendly legislation shall linger on the statute-book of any Commonwealth in America. They are sure to triumph, and all around may as well understand it at once. The men in this country who committed themselves to the cause of liberty, justice, humanity, and Christian civilization are baffled sometimes, but defeated never. They have put men up and put men down. They have grappled with ideas and with organizations, and they have come off victors. With the attributes of Almighty God, everything pure and holy on earth and in heaven inspiring to action, they are sure to triumph in the future as in the past. If anybody doubts this, let him look back over the last twenty-five years of conflict in our country and see on every rod of our march the political graves of great and able men who hesitated, wavered, faltered, and went down under the stern condemnation of a Christian and liberty-loving people.

Sir, I hope that we, the men who carried the country through the war, who gave the Government men and money and everything it asked, who stood by it, who reflected Abraham Lincoln, and took Andrew Johnson from his Tennessee home and made him Vice President because he had been brave and true to the cause of the country, will be as bold, as firm, as prudent now as we were when the land was baptized in the blood of our sons. We should look hopefully to the future; but to do that we must not close our eyes to the facts that are about us. We must take nobody's fair, soft words; we must not trust to anything but irreversible guarantees of liberty. I will not trust repentant rebels with the liberties of the meanest man that treads the soil of the Republic; I will not trust ourselves, nor will I trust others. I hold that there is not a freedman treading the soil of a rebel State to-day who is not entitled to the protection of just, humane, and equal laws as much as I am or any man that sits about me.

We may differ and we do differ in regard to some modes of action, but I trust there are no differences among us in regard to the great purpose to be attained. That purpose is to make this country a united country and a free country; to make it the great North American Republic, the admiration of all the nations and all the ages. We differ in regard to modes of action. Well, sir, let us differ; we can afford it. The friends of liberty and the country have differed for twenty-five years, and they grew and strengthened and prospered by a free and manly discussion of great public questions. I say to my friend from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] that he does not know the men who have fought this battle for the country and for liberty if he supposes that those men, accustomed to speak their thoughts upon all questions with the freedom that becomes American citizens, are to sever, disunite, and be disrupted for the benefit of men who have linked their names forever with the cause of human slavery on this continent; and some of them with the cause of the defeated rebellion.

Sir, this measure will not pass at present as I hoped it would; but the ideas embodied in this bill are to go upon the statute-book of the nation; they are to be enforced—enforced by the President, enforced by the judiciary, enforced by the Army, and enforced by the voice of the regenerated nation. The committee we have appointed, and to whom we have referred these great measures will, I am sure, act wisely. Every source of testimony will be open to them; they will see to it that they fully understand the exact condition of every rebel State; they will report proper measures—what the needs of the country demand; Congress will pass them; the President will sign them; and at no distant day these vacant seats will be filled, and filled by men who, whatever may have been their errors in the past, will support the cause of our united country and the cause of liberty in America. These freedmen, ground and degraded by two centuries of slavery, will in all respects be free; they will go on with us and of us in the career of elevation and improvement; and we of the North and they of the South, of every race, will contribute to develop and elevate and make immortal our great Continental Republic.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the reference of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to a remark which I made yesterday constitutes my apology for trespassing for a moment, and only for a moment, upon the attention of the Senate.

The honorable Senator seems to labor under a very great mistake. He seems to have understood me as saying that the Democratic party of this country was to come into power again through the agency of the present Executive. I said nothing of the kind. Since the commencement of this session the Democratic members of this body have sat in their seats in perfect silence, without saying one word in reference to any of the issues that seem to distract the councils of the Republican party. I did say, however, yesterday, that the apprehension seemed to exist in the minds of some in the other end of the Capitol and in this Chamber that the Democratic party of the country was again to come into power, and through the agency of the present Executive. I was expressing no opinion of my own, but stating the simple fact that such an apprehension seemed to exist. Was I not justified in that remark? I recollect reading in the newspapers a speech made in this city by Mr. Thaddeus Stevens, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, in which he openly advocated the exclusion of the southern States from representation in the Congress of the United States on the ground that such a representation would be destructive of the Republican party. He is high authority in that political church, I believe. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to know whether, in the speech made by his colleague [Mr. SUMNER] yesterday and the extracts read from private letters which he said he had received from southern people, the same apprehension did not seem to exist.

But, sir, I did not rise to express any opinions of my own as to whether that apprehension was well or ill founded. I am in no position to know whether it was well or ill founded. I have known the President of the United States as a distinguished Senator upon this floor. I served with him for several years, and our relations were always of the most kindly and friendly character, and I will take occasion here to say that, although not of his party now, when he was of mine I entertained for him high personal regard, and though he may have strayed into wrong company, still for him individually I entertain great personal respect and kindness, and for one, so far as his actions shall conform to the Constitution of the country and the just rights of the States of the Union, I shall stand by him, finding no fault, but lending him my humble support, not however because I suppose the result of that course will be to break up a party which is a great and glorious and noble party, as the honorable Senator from Massachusetts would have us believe—a party whose heroes never retreat, but always go forward. We shall see whether they will be as successful in the accomplishment of party purposes in the future as they have been in the past.

But I will say to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that, with or without the agency of the President of the United States, the Democratic party is not in such a hopeless condition as he seems to suppose. He volunteers his kind advice that it needs reconstruction. Let me tell that honorable Senator that however offensive the word "conservative" may be to him, that party is a conservative party. It does not make sudden changes; it does not require frequent reconstruction; it needs no new or modern architects to build it up:

"We know what masters formed its keel,
What workmen wrought its ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchor of its hope."

Sir, it was formed by the great and the good men of the country who formed the Constitution of the country which this Congress, and some of the party to which the honorable Senator belongs, seem so anxious to reconstruct and to improve. Why, sir, I believe it was only yesterday that an amendment to the Constitution of the country—the work of those "old fogies" of a former age who did not seem to understand their business, the men who laid the deep foundations of this Government firmly in the principles of constitutional liberty—was offered in the other branch of Congress, and passed through without debate under the previous question, and hurried into this body. The Senator does belong to a progressive age and to a progressive party! The work which cost such men as George Washington and James Madison and the founders of the country months of anxious deliberation, is now every day the subject of patchwork in the Congress of the United States; and there is no statesman, however young or inexperienced, or unknown to fame, that does not feel himself perfectly competent to amend the workmanship of such men as the founders of this Government.

Mr. President, let me say to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that however offensive the word "conservative" may be to him, if this work of amending the fundamental law of the land is to be proceeded with so rapidly and is to continue, I apprehend that the number of the Democratic host will swell, and that there will be more conservative men who, venerating the work of their fathers, will solemnly protest against the inconsiderate and hasty legislation of the present times.

As I said before, I am in no situation to know the views of the President of the United States further than he chooses to communicate them in his written messages to this body. While I shall support the President in all constitutional measures, I would not have it understood that I agree with him in much that he has done. I have no doubt that he has acted patriotically and as he thought right. I am perfectly willing to give him credit for that. But, sir, his theory of restoration is not my theory of restoration; neither is the theory of the destruction of the southern States as advocated by others my theory. I will simply state in one moment what I mean, without entering into this question now; it will be time enough to do so hereafter.

I hold that when armed resistance to Federal authority ceased in the southern States, and the Federal authority was acknowledged, those States never having been out of the Union, but always in it, their ordinances of secession being absolute nullities, the people of those States had a right to assemble as citizens of the United States, elect their own State Legislatures, elect their own Governors, and put into operation the machinery of government, without the intervention of the President or Congress or anybody else. Although I never had the honor to see the distinguished warrior who did as much if not more than any other in suppressing armed resistance to Federal authority—I refer to General Sherman—I take this occasion to say that the only true and wise solution of this national difficulty was that which General Sherman adopted in his negotiations with General Johnston. Had his action been approved and his programme been carried out in good faith, peace would not only have reigned from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the Gulf, but happiness and contentment would have everywhere prevailed, and the vacant seats in these Halls of Congress would have been filled with representatives from the southern States, not in enmity to the Government of the United States, but rejoicing that they were again back under that same old flag which they in former years adored, and which their fathers followed and worshiped.

But, sir, that mode of settlement was not adopted. The President of the United States acting, as I have said I have no doubt, patriotically, adopted his mode of restoration of the relations of those States to the Federal Government; and I am glad that he does not use the word "reconstruction." The people of the southern States have themselves acquiesced in that mode of restoring their relations to the Federal Government. It then is not only the President's plan, but it becomes, by virtue of the adoption of the people of the southern States, their plan, and may be treated as the act of the people of those States. Therefore, I can legitimately and properly support the President in his plan of restoration, the people of those States having the right themselves to act upon it, and having adopted it as theirs. Upon no other ground could I support it. How much nobler, how much wiser, how much more statesmanlike is that plan than the plan presented by some, of treating eleven States of this Union as foreign territory conquered and held by military power, subject to the control of the conqueror, and to be disposed of according to his sovereign will! The President's plan, as adopted by the people of those States, gives them the same status in the Union that they always had before they forcibly opposed Federal authority. It secures to the people of those States the regulation of their own internal affairs, and is antagonistic to that proposed by the advocates of the opposite theory.

One word more, sir; and it may as well be said now as at any other time. We are told by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and others of like opinions with himself, that the second section of the amendment to the Constitution, as it is called, but which I call the unconstitutional pretended constitutional amendment to the Constitution of the United States, confers ample power upon the Congress of the United States not only to go into the southern States, but into any State of this Union, and to legislate in reference to the condition of what are termed the freedmen. I have never had but one opinion in reference to that amendment. I acknowledge that as a matter of fact slavery does not exist in this country. Other things have brought about the abolition of slavery. It has been abolished by the military power of the country. I think the honorable Senator and others are greatly at fault when they suppose that there is any great desire to restore slavery in this country. I do not believe, from my intercourse with some of these southern gentlemen since the commencement of this Congress, that in some of the largest slaveholding States in the South they would, if they could, restore slavery. Still, sir, as I call it an unconstitutional pretended constitutional amendment, I will say that I do not believe the Congress of the United States had a right to pass it. Three fourths of the States have no right to say whether slavery shall exist in my State or not. It is a matter foreign to the objects of the Government when formed, a matter never intended by the parties to the compact, as there are a hundred other things which were never intended to be intrusted to the decision of three fourths of the States. It was no more intended by them than it was intended that three fourths of the States should decide whether there should be slavery in Massachusetts or not.

But, sir, what is the meaning of the phrase "appropriate legislation?" The honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] the other day asked me what it did mean. Having had nothing to do with it in its passage, I remarked that I did not know what it did mean; but I think I can judge of the meaning of language. The amendment itself was an amendment to abolish slavery. What is slavery? That is the subject-matter of the amendment. Slavery is a status, a condition; it is a state or situation where one man belongs to another and is subject to his absolute control. The slave can own no property of his own; he cannot work for himself, but he is subject to the command of his owner. Cannot that status or condition be abolished without attempting to confer on all former slaves all the civil or political rights that white people have? Certainly. Your "appropriate legislation" is confined to the subject-matter of your amendment, and extends to nothing else. "Congress shall have power by appropriate legislation to carry this amendment into effect." What amendment? The amendment abolishing slavery, abolishing the status, the condition of slavery; but there is nothing in your amendment which gives Congress the power to enter my State and undertake to regulate the relations existing between classes and different conditions in life. When the passions of the maddened hour shall die away and reason shall resume its throne, and the clear-headed jurists of the land shall sit in judgment upon such a question as this, I have no doubt as to what the decision will be. It has been said that it was never questioned that Congress had such a power. I have great respect for the opinion of learned gentlemen of this Senate, but I confess that if I were to ask a student of six months in my office such a question as that, and he were to express such an opinion, I should really consider that his term of study in the office should be six years, instead of three, as the law of our State requires before his admission to practice.

Mr. President, slavery is abolished, and that I think ought to be sufficient for the lovers of freedom in this country, and especially for my friend from Massachusetts. I hope what I say will be taken in good part; but what does that honorable Senator know about the condition of the negro race? I know he has made it a study for a great many years of his life; he has read the newspapers; he has read volumes of records here, as he says; he has read many private letters; and yet in the State in which he lives there are not enough persons of that race to make milestones along their public roads. What opportunities for actual personal observation and knowledge has he had? None whatever. Why, sir, he was never kind enough until this war was over to visit the southern States and make an inspection for himself. If he had come to the State in which I live, as he has in political times I believe visited the upper portion of it, he would have been kindly received, and might have had opportunities to observe the condition of the negro population.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that in the year 1855, ten years ago, I visited the State of Delaware, attended a very great meeting in the city of Wilmington, made one of the most radical abolition speeches that it was in my power to make, and I received the kindest treatment from the people of that city, a very large number of them thinking then precisely as I thought, and I have no doubt that a great many more of them think with me now; and I have the greatest confidence that in a very short time the whole State of Delaware will think on these questions very much as I do, and I am not without hope that the Senator from Delaware will himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, we are told that

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

[Laughter.] "Hope on, hope ever," but you are doomed to disappointment. [Laughter.] Sir, during the shock of this terrible war, with your military power at every polls in my State, with funds enough to accomplish any purpose that could be accomplished with funds; when I and other Democrats had to go to the polls under crossed bayonets and deposit our ballots; when with my own eyes I saw your military driving honest voters from the polls and running them into the woods, when to my certain knowledge they had to sleep out and did sleep out in the pine thickets for three nights in succession, you were not able to carry the State of Delaware. The child is yet to be born and grow gray-headed that will ever see the State of Delaware become the disciple of Massachusetts. We are not like a certain distinguished gentleman, who was once a flaming Democrat, and has figured largely, not on the field of battle, but as the accuser of others, who left the State of Kentucky and went to Boston, as he said there in a public speech, to drink in liberty at its fountain. We do not drink liberty from any such fountain. We remember the great and the good men who have left for our instruction lessons of wisdom and of patriotism. We follow the light of their example. No modern rush-lights attract us. We are a staid people; if the honorable Senator please, we are a conservative people, and we wish to preserve the Constitution of our country as it was handed down to us by our fathers. We wish to preserve the form and system of government which they established. We want not the old house torn down and a new house built up by modern architects. We, and our ancestors before us, have lived in the temple of liberty which the great architects of revolutionary times built. It afforded shelter, comfort, and protection to our fathers and to us. Though folly and madness drove a portion of the people of the States into armed resistance against the Federal authority, we did not follow their example. We advised kindness, conciliation, and compromise, for the sake of the Union which our fathers formed and for the sake of the liberty which they bequeathed us. And now, sir, that opposition to the Federal authority has been suppressed, that nowhere, in the language of the honorable Senator, does a hostile foot tread American soil; now that no hostile flag floats in the breeze challenging admiration and comparison with our own national flag, we say that the true policy of the American people is to come back to that system of government which their fathers established, and to the administration of that Government in the spirit which the fathers practiced.

Mr. President, if we shall follow their example, happy, fortunate indeed, will it be for the whole country. Surely there has been enough of animosity, unkindness, bitterness, and hatred to satisfy the keenest spirit of revenge. Let now the same spirit of kindness and conciliation which characterized the annual message of the President of the United States be shared by the members of the two Houses of Congress, and soon, although war has trod the earth with the crushing step of a giant, peace, harmony, and prosperity will everywhere prevail.

Mr. WILSON. A single word. The Senator from Delaware says that

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

I think that Senator must be a disciple of that school, or he could not indulge the hope of the revival of the Democratic party. [Laughter.] The gentleman says that Delaware does not drink at the same fountain of liberty with Massachusetts. I am aware that she has drunk at another and a different fountain in the past; but as the fountain of liberty from which Massachusetts drinks is that pure fountain from which the wise and the good of all countries and all ages have drunk, I am not without hope that little Delaware will drink deeply at that fountain in the future.

Sir, the Senator objects to my remark about conservatism. I have studied somewhat carefully the political history of the country during the last fifteen or twenty years, and I have always noticed that when I heard a man prate about being a conservative and about conservatism, he was about to do some mean thing. [Laughter.] I never knew it to fail; in fact it is about the first word a man utters when he begins to retreat. The Senator speaks of the "old fogies that made the Constitution." If he uses that language as his own, be it so; but I hope he does not impute it to me or to those with whom I act.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only used the language that I supposed would be used by those who were so constantly engaged in amending the work of the sages who formed the Constitution, not because I considered them in that light.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I think the men who landed at Plymouth rock and founded the first Christian and democratic commonwealth in America were radicals, not conservatives; that they ran away from conservatism and became radicals in America. The men who promulgated the Declaration of Independence were denounced in their day and generation as radicals, as nobodies; they made themselves somebodies, however, by being radicals. The men who made the Constitution were those same radicals who had carried us through the fire and blood of the Revolution and founded a nation. Those men were radical enough to provide that the men of other generations could amend the work of their hands; and we, like our radical fathers, accept the living truths of the present, and we incorporate into the fundamental law of the land what is necessary to make the country what its founders intended it should be—that is all. The Senator thinks there will be more Democrats here if we amend the Constitution, as the other House yesterday proposed to us to do, by providing that the debts incurred to destroy the country shall not be paid. I hardly think any Democrat will ever enter this Chamber upon that issue. But, sir, I shall detain the Senate no longer.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We ought to have an executive session; there are executive papers on the table that ought to be referred.

Mr. WADE. I withdraw my motion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After some time spent in executive session, the Senate adjourned. Under the resolution of the two Houses, the adjournment is until Friday the 5th of January, 1866.

Resolved, That no State, or any number of States confederated together, can in any manner under their connection with the Federal Union, except by a total subversion of our present system of government; and that the President in enunciating this doctrine in his late message has but given expression to the sentiments of all those who deny the right or power of a State to secede.

Resolved, That the President is entitled to the thanks of Congress and the country for his faithful, wise, and successful efforts to restore civil government, law, and order to those States whose citizens were lately in insurrection against the Federal authority; and we hereby pledge ourselves to aid, assist, and uphold him in the policy which he has adopted to give harmony, peace, and union to the country.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the resolutions be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions have not yet been received; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] asks unanimous consent to submit them at this time.

Mr. THAYER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the settlement of private land claims in the Territory of Arizona, and for the survey thereof; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

JEFFERSON DAVIS AND OTHERS.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution, upon which I desire action at this time:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House any report or reports made by the Judge Advocate General, or any other officer of the Government, as to the grounds, facts, and accusations upon which Jefferson Davis, Clement C. Clay, Stephen B. Mallory, and David L. Yulee, or either of them, are held in confinement.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that this resolution should be addressed to the President, asking for the reasons why he, as the head of this Government, keeps these persons in confinement, and not ask the reasons of the Judge Advocate General.

Mr. CONKLING. That is a separate subject of inquiry not embraced in my resolution. This simply calls for the reports on file.

Mr. KASSON. Is the gentleman willing to add, "and all other information," so that the President may not be confined exclusively to reports?

Mr. CONKLING. I will agree to that.

Mr. JOHNSON. I must object to the introduction of the resolution at this time.

LAND TITLES.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to authorize the issue of patents for lands in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McRUER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill confirming the title to certain lands in California, and provide for the survey of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

E. W. EDDY, PAYMASTER UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. McRUER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of the estate of E. W. Eddy, late paymaster United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PILOTS AND PILOT REGULATIONS.

Mr. McRUER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill relating to pilots and pilot regulations; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN OREGON.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill providing for the payment of expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities in the Territory of Oregon in 1854; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

POST OFFICE, NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill providing for the appointment of a commission to purchase a site and erect a building for the post office in the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution, upon which I ask action at this time:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the volunteers who entered the Army of the United States in the year 1861, and faithfully served therein, should be paid a bounty equal to the highest sum given by any act of Congress to those who subsequently enlisted.

Mr. THAYER. I object. I do not think there is a quorum present.

Mr. CONKLING. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the calling of committees for reports.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] will withdraw the call for the regular order till we can present bills for reference. There is a slim House this morning, and we might as well spend the time in the presentation of bills.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, I withdraw the call.

Mr. McKEE. I renew the call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the calling of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GEORGE C. JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, House bill for the relief of George C. Johnson, and Ewing & Clymen; which was laid on the table.

PENSIONS FOR HUNDRED DAYS' SERVICE.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution to grant pensions to relatives of soldiers who enlisted for one hundred days and died in the service, and to move its reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The calling of committees for reports was continued, and no further reports were presented.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the calling of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Indiana, under which call bills may be introduced on leave.

PART OWNERS OF FORFEITED PROPERTY.

Mr. KERR introduced a bill for the relief of loyal and innocent part owners of personal property forfeited on account of the criminal acts of other part owners of it; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. VOORHEES offered the following resolutions, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the message of the President of the United States, delivered at the opening of the present Congress, is regarded by this body as an able, judicious, and patriotic state paper.

Resolved, That the principles therein advocated for the restoration of the Union are the safest and most practicable that can now be applied to our disordered domestic affairs.

Resolved, That no State or number of States confederated together can in any manner under their connection with the Federal Union, except by a total subversion of our present system of government; and that the President in enunciating this doctrine in his late message has but given expression to the sentiments of all those who deny the right or power of a State to secede.

Resolved, That the President is entitled to the thanks of Congress and the country for his faithful, wise, and successful efforts to restore civil government, law, and order to those States whose citizens were lately in insurrection against the Federal authority; and we hereby pledge ourselves to aid, assist, and uphold him in the policy which he has adopted to give harmony, peace, and union to the country.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to the gentleman that he had better not insist upon having the House act upon these resolutions now. There are so few members here that I suppose that we should not be able to act to-day on anything if it comes to a test. The gentleman can allow the resolutions to be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state to the gentleman that my only fear in pressing the matter is that we may develop the fact that there is not a quorum present; and I do not desire to interfere with any business which the House may desire to transact.

Mr. STEVENS. That is what I fear myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has counted the members present, and there are only about eighty—less than a quorum. There may possibly be other members in the outer rooms. There might perhaps be a quorum, if all the members in the Capitol were in the House.

Mr. STEVENS. There may be some other members in different parts of the Capitol; but if the gentleman calls for the yeas and nays, we will find ourselves without a quorum. Let the gentleman postpone its consideration until after the holidays.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will do so. I do not want to interfere with the business of the House, and on the statement that there is no quorum present I will let it go over until after the holidays. I would of course like to have an expression on it now.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not yielded the floor. I move that the further consideration of the resolutions be postponed until the 9th of January next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were postponed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union so that we may call committees for reports. There may be bills which perhaps ought to be printed and put upon our tables when we meet after the holidays.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the gentleman from Rhode Island to withdraw the motion to adjourn so that I may offer a resolution personal to myself and a friend. I can give the reasons why the resolution should be introduced.

Mr. JENCKES. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Indiana is the State now in order, and Kentucky will be the next State called.

DELEGATE FROM THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NIBLACK submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be directed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the election and the admission into this House of a Delegate from said District, with powers and privileges equal to those of Delegates from organized Territories of the United States; and to report by bill or otherwise.

EXCUSED FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, I find that I have as much as I can do on two other committees, and I ask that I may be excused from further service on the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ARKANSAS.

Mr. SMITH. I ask leave to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That James M. Johnson, member-elect of the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the third district of the State of Arkansas, be admitted to the privileges of the floor of the House during the pendency of his claim as a member thereof.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman will strike out all reference to his being a member from the State of Arkansas, I think there will be no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SMITH. He was here during two sessions of Congress, allowed the privilege of the floor, and drew his pay and mileage. There is no mistake of that. He is here again after having served three or more years in the service of the United States in the late war, and it will be unjust to him not to admit him now to the privileges of the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Is there anybody else here claiming to represent the State of Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to state that I am acquainted with Colonel Johnson, and I am happy to say that I know him to be a devoted loyalist; one who has fought for three years and more in our Army against the rebellion. He did as much as any man in Arkansas to sustain our cause there; and I think that it would be a reflection alike upon us and him to refuse him the privilege of the floor. I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see what that amounts to, except that he shall not be hanged. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I will strike out the words "member-elect" and insert "whose credentials have been presented."

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask why this gentleman, loyal as he is, is selected rather than any other good loyal citizen of that State to be admitted to the floor, except it be that he comes here claiming a seat as a Representative? I do not understand why, as a matter of courtesy, we should permit any loyal man to exercise the privileges of the floor, except there is a distinction between his case and that of others; and if there be any such distinction here, is it not because he claims his seat as a Representative?

Mr. SMITH. I have no objection to the admission of any loyal man, who claims a seat upon this floor, to its privileges. It is a courtesy I would extend to any one.

I had the honor of presenting the credentials of this gentleman, and of offering a resolution at the time, asking this privilege for him. No other credentials of members-elect from the State of Arkansas were here at the time, nor was I requested to present any. I told Mr. Johnson that I would offer this resolution, and in good faith to him I have done it.

I did it because at the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress he was admitted to the privileges of this floor; his case was referred to the Committee of Elections, was examined by that committee, and this House acted upon their report. At the second session of the same Congress the same thing occurred, and he drew mileage, by the consent of the House, for both those sessions.

He comes here now with credentials bearing the great seal of the State of Arkansas, as member-elect to this House. He is a loyal man, one who has devoted his whole time for three years and a half to the interests and salvation of his Government. He merely asks the poor boon of being recognized as a gentleman and a claimant upon this floor; it is the duty of this House in honor to give it to him, and I demand it in his behalf.

Mr. CONKLING. I dislike very much to interpose an objection, but the effect of all this is simply to break up the House. I make the point of order that this resolution having given rise to debate, goes over under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has demanded the previous question, and no further debate is in order.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. As the resolution gives rise to debate I am willing that it shall go over. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. Then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution lies over under the rule.

REPRESENTATIVES-ELECT FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. SMITH. I now offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of the House resolution as refers the credentials of the Representatives-elect to the Thirty-Ninth Congress, from the State of Tennessee, to the joint committee of fifteen be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, and that said credentials be referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SMITH. If there is any objection to the resolution I am willing that it shall lie over.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to it.

Mr. CONKLING. I submit the question of order to the Chair that no gentleman has a right to offer more than one resolution under the call of States. The gentleman from Kentucky did not offer his first resolution by the unanimous consent of the House but under the regular call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order in part and overrules it in part. The rule is as the gentleman from New York states it, but the gentleman from Kentucky stated that he desired to offer a resolution that was somewhat personal in its character, and did not want to be precluded thereby from offering a resolution under the regular call. No gentleman objected and the Chair understands that the House in bound by that tacit agreement.

Mr. CONKLING. Was the question put to the House?

The SPEAKER. It was put by the gentleman from Kentucky to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] and the Chair did not understand any gentleman as objecting. The Chair desires to carry out the understanding of the House, and therefore sustains the gentleman from Kentucky in his right to offer the resolution.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ROSS. I rise to debate the resolution, and it therefore goes over.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to its going over.

Mr. SMITH. Then I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me for a moment. I have a resolution which is of some importance, not to the great, but to the poor and humble.

Mr. LOAN. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me to allow me to ask to be excused from serving on a committee.

Mr. SCHENCK. There seems to be a general disposition to offer papers. I will, therefore, withdraw my motion for twenty minutes, and then I will move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to allow my colleague [Mr. FINCK] to make his speech.

T. T. GARRARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, introduced a bill for the relief of T. T. Garrard and others; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

TAXES, IMPOSTS, ETC.

Mr. RITTER submitted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas the Constitution declares that the Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; and all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That each citizen of the United States should be taxed an equal amount in proportion to the value of their property, to enable the Government to pay all their just debts or claims that now exist or may hereafter be brought against the Government of the United States.

Resolved, That all the property taken from loyal citizens by the authority of the President, or by the military authority, or by act of Congress, or where the value of property was greatly diminished or destroyed for the purpose of enabling the Government to put down the rebellion, should be paid for at such price as said property would have sold for in cash before it was so taken, or its value diminished or destroyed.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the gentleman better send his resolutions to a committee, and I would suggest the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RITTER. I had hoped that the House would have consented to act on these resolutions now. But I will not object to their reference.

The preamble and resolutions were accordingly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES AND PENSIONS.

Mr. McKEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency and justice of so amending the laws paying bounties and pensions to soldiers, their widows and heirs, so that there shall be no distinction on account of color; and also of repealing all laws now in force for the payment of bounties to the masters of those who were in slavery at the date of their enlistment, to the end that the bounties shall be paid directly to the soldier, or, in case of his death, to his widow or heirs, in the same manner as the law now makes payments to white soldiers; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

PAYMENT FOR HORSES LOST IN SERVICE.

Mr. McKEE introduced a bill to amend the act to pay officers and soldiers for horses lost in the service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting accounts of Indian agents having in charge the Creeks, the Chickasaws, and Seminoles, for the second quarter of the year 1865; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MARINE HOSPITAL, PADUCAH, KENTUCKY.

Mr. TRIMBLE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of rebuilding the marine hospital at Paducah, Kentucky, and report by bill or otherwise.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. O'NEILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill relative to the payment of the $100 bounty, provided by the act of July 22, 1861, to the legal representatives of men who enlisted without a bounty during that year, and who left their commands without authority, but subsequently returned, and were killed in battle, or died from wounds received while in the service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HENRIETTA L. ELDRED.

Mr. JOHNSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Henrietta L. Eldred, widow of James E. Eldred, who was a lieutenant of the sixty-seventh regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for the regular order of business, that I may have the opportunity to introduce a bill merely for reference.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCHENCK. I appeal to my colleague [Mr. SPALDING] to withdraw his motion to adjourn, as it will inevitably break up the House.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to break up the House.

Mr. JENCKES. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] withdraw his motion to adjourn with this understanding, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINCK] shall take the floor, and that no other business shall be done, and no other person heard?

The question was upon ordering the yeas and nays upon the motion of Mr. SPALDING to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BALDWIN, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. It is understood that no business is to be done, and no other speaking but by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINCK.]

Several MEMBERS. Oh yes!

Mr. SPALDING moved a call of the House. The motion was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. BALDWIN was agreed to. So the rules were suspended, and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BOUTWELL in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message, upon which Mr. FINCK was entitled to the floor.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. FINCK. Mr. Chairman, when the Thirty-Eighth Congress adjourned, large armies were in the field resisting the authority and jurisdiction of the United States. We were then in the midst of the most terrible civil war that has ever afflicted any people. Sir, I congratulate you, and I congratulate the country, on the fact that this war has terminated successfully to the arms of the Federal Government, and that today there is not a single arm raised to resist the authority of the United States, within the limits of the Republic. Peace once more blesses the American people. But, sir, allow me to inquire why it is that the States which have not been represented here for the last four years, still continue unrepresented on this floor? Is it possible that, having failed successfully to resist the jurisdiction of the United States, and break up the Union, that they now stubbornly refuse to send representatives to the national Legislature, and to return to their duties and obligations to the Federal Government? No, sir; such is not the case. The people of these States, having failed in the mad schemes organized by their leaders, have wisely and really abandoned all further resistance, and have, with a unanimity and frankness worthy of the highest commendation, determined to yield a cheerful obedience to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and to discharge their duties and obligations as loyal citizens. Why, then, sir, are they not represented on this floor?

Sir, during the continuance of the late terrible struggle, I looked forward with the most hopeful expectations to the period when the war should cease by the complete vindication of the national authority, and all the States be represented once more in this Hall. We have, by the blessing of Heaven, lived to see the termination of the war, but we meet in a time of profound peace, and find that eleven of the States of this Union have no Representatives on this floor. Sir, allow me again to inquire why this is so?

Mr. Chairman, it is because there exists within this Union a body of men who are today, as they have always been, opposed to the Union, unless they can mold and shape its policy to suit their peculiar views. Can it be possible, sir, that after a struggle of four years, after the sacrifice of half a million of brave and heroic men, and the expenditure of four thousand millions of treasure, after the war has been brought to successful termination, and the flag of the Union, and none other, floats from the capitol of every State, still nearly one third of the States are to be deprived of representation in the national councils?

Sir, I protest against this attempt to subvert the true principles of this Government, and thus seek to separate States from it which belong to it, and to preserve which, a four years' war has been waged. What was the avowed and proclaimed object of the war? For what did our brave and gallant men fight and die? It was, sir, to preserve this glorious Union, to maintain and vindicate the jurisdiction of the United States. This was distinctly and plainly announced in the resolution passed, by almost entire unanimity at the extra session of Congress in 1861, in these patriotic words:

"That in this national emergency, Congress will forget all feelings of mere passion or resentment, and will recollect only its duty to the country; that the war is not waged on our part in any spirit of oppression, nor in any spirit of conquest or subjugation, nor for the purpose of overthrowing or interfering with the rights or established institutions of those States, but to defend and maintain the supremacy of the Constitution and preserve the Union with all the dignity, equality, and rights of the several States unimpaired; and as soon as these objects are attained the war ought to cease."

The great issue submitted to the settlement of the sword was that of the Union. The insurgents sought to break it up, and the United States sought to preserve and maintain it. Our arms triumphed, and our purpose was accomplished, namely, the preservation of the Union.

The States which passed ordinances of secession, and attempted to withdraw from the Union, have failed in their purposes. They have never been out of the Union, but have always continued to be, and are to-day, States within the Union.

This doctrine I understand the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] controverts; and in his speech delivered on last Monday, takes the same ground which he announced in his speech, delivered in this House two years ago, namely, that the insurgent States, by their acts of secession and organized rebellion, became a separate government; that they were outside of the Union; and their armies having been defeated and conquered, we now hold these States as conquered territories, and that this Government has the right, by the law of nations, to treat the people of these States as a subjugated people; and that before they can resume their former relations with the General Government, these States must be readmitted into the Union as new States.

Sir, the distinguished gentleman by his argument has admitted that secession was an accomplished fact, and has added another example to the common saying, that extremes meet; for his views on this point coincide with those of the most rabid secessionists.

The gentleman has recognized by his argument, that most dangerous of political heresies, the right of secession, which is at war with the safety and perpetuity of the union of these States. I deny, sir, that these States, or either of them, were ever out of the Union. The Union has never been, and I most earnestly trust never will be, dissolved. The ordinances of secession were invalid and unconstitutional, and no force which was brought by those in rebellion to sustain these acts could give them legality.

The gentleman has quoted from writers on the law of nations, to show that a war between two nations annuls and abrogates the treaties which had existed between the belligerents. Sir, these States were not held together by the force of treaties, but by a Constitution adopted, and assented to, by each of them, and by their people through their conventions.

It is however true, that when a civil war breaks out between different members of the same Government, the contending parties are each entitled while the war continues to the rights and usages of war, as against each other. This, sir, is a rule of necessity, and is dictated by the soundest principles of humanity and Christian civilization. The doctrine is thus laid down by Mr. Wheaton in his learned work on International Law, page 520:

"A civil war between different members of the same society, is what Grotius calls a mixed war; it is according to him public on the side of the established Government, and private on the part of the people resisting its authority. But the general usage of nations regards such a war as entitling both the contending parties to all the rights of war as against each other, and even as respects neutral nations."

But I deny that there is anything in this sound and necessary principle of public law which implies in a case like ours, that the late insurgent States were outside of the Union, or constituted a distinct or foreign nation. In all our cartels for the exchange of prisoners, we were governed by the principles laid down in Wheaton.

But the gentleman would have us to believe that it was just as absurd to say that the States could not go out of the Union, because the Constitution forbids it, as it would be to say, in a case of deliberate murder, that no murder was committed, because the law forbids that crime.

Sir, I most respectfully submit that the cases are not at all similar; and the illustration does not in the least aid the gentleman's argument. In the case of murder which he puts, the crime was actually committed, and the murder had taken place. If it had been a mere assault with intent to commit murder, and the person assaulted was not killed, it would not have constituted the crime of murder. So in relation to these States. It was on their part an attempt to withdraw from the Union, which was resisted and prevented; and the act of secession was not, and could not, be consummated, except by the success of the rebellion, but that having been defeated, the secession of these States was thus prevented from becoming a consummated act.

But when the gentleman further argues that we have conquered the people of the late insurgent States, and have the right by the law of nations to impose upon them such conditions as may be imposed by the conqueror on a subjugated people, he forgets the real character of the late struggle. It was not a war with a foreign nation. It was a struggle to preserve the just power and jurisdiction of the United States, and maintain the Union. Our jurisdiction had been ousted over a portion of the Republic by an armed and organized force; and we exerted force to remove this resistance, and reassert our rightful jurisdiction, which had thus been invaded. We have successfully overcome that resistance, and can now enforce the laws of the United States in every portion of the Union. We have not by the war gained a particle more jurisdiction or power than we enjoyed and exercised before the war commenced. We have merely vindicated the right to exercise that jurisdiction and authority which we asserted before secession was attempted. It is not at all similar to a war with a foreign Power, in which we have conquered territory from the enemy. In such a case we would have obtained power and jurisdiction over a territory and its inhabitants, which we did not have at the commencement of the war; but in our late struggle we have acquired no new power or jurisdiction, but simply have regained firmly the power and jurisdiction of which the insurgents sought by the rebellion to deprive us.

While the war lasted, it became necessary, in the true interests of humanity, that it should be conducted according to the rules of enlightened Christian nations; but now that the war has ended, and the people of these States have submitted to the rightful jurisdiction of the United States, and returned to their duty, the rules of war no longer are to be invoked; but we are to look to the more appropriate and peaceful remedies, for all that remains yet to be done, to the Constitution of the United States. Sir, we do not hold these States as conquered territories, because they have always been, and continue still to be, States within the Union.

While I must admire the boldness and consistency of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in adhering to his cherished doctrine, that these States were out of the Union, yet I would fail in my duty to myself and my constituents, if I did not denounce it, as most dangerous to the prosperity and harmony of this Union.

After the war commenced, and after the several States had passed their ordinances of secession, repeated acts of Congress were passed based on the principle that all the States were in the Union.

Allow me to refer to the act approved March 4, 1862, fixing the number of members for the House of Representatives from and after the 3d day of March, 1863:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the 3d day of March, 1863, the number of members of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States shall be two hundred and forty-one; and the eight additional members shall be assigned one each to Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Vermont, and Rhode Island."

Let me inquire how this number of two hundred and forty-one is made up? We have not two hundred and forty-one members in this House. Sir, it was by allowing Virginia eight, Tennessee eight, Georgia seven, North Carolina seven, South Carolina four, Arkansas three, Louisiana five, Mississippi five, Alabama six, Florida one, and Texas four. This act was passed while the rebellion existed, and is the law of the land to-day. Was this law constitutional, and did these eleven States, on the 4th day of March, 1862, compose a part of the Union? Other States are to-day represented on this floor under the provisions of this act of the Thirty-Seventh Congress.

But again, section three, article four, of the Constitution of the United States, provides that—

"No new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of the Congress."

Let me ask how, under this provision of the Constitution, the act admitting West Virginia was passed? If by the act of secession the State of Virginia ceased to be a State within the Union, how could the consent of the Legislature of that State be obtained for the creation of West Virginia? But we find by the act admitting West Virginia that it is recited in its preamble, that—

"The Legislature of Virginia by an act passed on the 13th of May, 1862, did give its consent to the formation of a new State within the jurisdiction of said State of Virginia."

There was, then, at that time, such a State as Virginia recognized, and if I am not mistaken the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania voted for the act admitting West Virginia. I do not say that Virginia did give her consent to the formation of a new State within her boundary. I only refer to these transactions of the past to show that these States, after the acts of secession were passed, and during the continuance of the war, were regarded as within the Union.

But it is unnecessary to cite further instances of legislation to prove the position of the honorable gentleman to be wholly untenable.

There is, however, one instance in our history plain to the American people, and recognized by the whole civilized world, which seems to me to settle the status of these States beyond controversy, and that is, sir, the fact that Andrew Johnson, a citizen of Tennessee, is the President of the United States, and is so recognized by every department of the State and Federal Governments, and by the nations of the world.

Sir, if the doctrine maintained and advocated by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania be sound, then there is no such State as Tennessee within this Union, and Andrew Johnson is not constitutionally President of the United States. Are gentlemen on the other side willing to sanction doctrines which lead to this result? The Constitution provides, article two, section one, that—

"No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained the age of thirty-five years, and been fourteen years a resident within the United States."

At the time of the election of Andrew Johnson as Vice President, he was a citizen of the State of Tennessee, but if the State of Tennessee was not a State within this Union, as the learned gentleman insists, then Andrew Johnson was not a citizen of the United States, and not eligible to the office which he holds.

But what follows if the doctrine contended for by the honorable gentleman is erroneous? Why, that the Union has never been dissolved; that the attempt to break it up has failed; that the sacrifices of our brave and heroic Army have preserved to us this glorious heritage of our fathers; that not a single star has been blotted out, and that the flag which floats over this Capitol of the people of all the States, with every star still blazoned on its ample folds, still continues to be the true emblem of the union of all the States.

Sir, more than this; if these States are in the Union, if they have never been out of it, as I contend, then, sir, they are in the Union as equal States, with all the rights and privileges which belong to States in this Union, and are entitled to be represented on this floor by the same authority as the States of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Sir, there was much in the able speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania which seemed to me not equal to the dignity of the great question which he discussed. His allusion to "copperheads," and the imputation of purposes of bad faith in regard to the public debt, could lend no weight to his argument, and were only calculated to arouse feelings of bitterness and recrimination, which are not calculated to aid in the elucidation of great constitutional questions, or to develop wise and healthy legislation. The allusion of the distinguished gentleman to the late Chief Justice, filled me with pain and surprise. No purer name or more upright and honest jurist adorns the long list of the great men of America, of whom we are so justly proud. With a character unsullied, and a conscientious devotion to duty, he discharged every trust with the strictest fidelity. His eminent learning and services will be remembered and cherished by the good and virtuous as long as our history and American jurisprudence shall be studied.

I am, sir, in favor of the admission of members from the States now unrepresented on this floor. The people of these States, it seems to me, have acquiesced with great unanimity and with sincerity in the condition of things which the war has brought upon them. They have abandoned slavery and surrendered it up as one of the things of the past, never, never again to be reestablished. They have abandoned the claim to any right, or pretense of any right of secession, and with entire unanimity acknowledged the supreme jurisdiction of the General Government in all matters which have been vested in it by the Constitution of the United States. They have resolved for the future to be true citizens of the Union.

And now what should be the conduct of this Government toward these people? Shall a state of discord and acrimonious feeling, almost as intense as that which existed during the war, be continued? Is it by such means as these that fraternal relations are to be restored between the sections? No, no, let all those evil feelings give way before the peaceful smiles of a once more united and patriotic people. Let us as far as possible forget the past, and generously welcome the return of our southern brethren. Let no mean partisan or sectional feelings or jealousies longer keep us asunder. Let it indeed be a union of hearts as well as of hands.

Representing as I do as intelligent, loyal, and patriotic a constituency as any within the Union, I feel it not only a duty, but a pleasure, to give my feeble aid in binding up the wounds of the country, and to make use of every legitimate means of once more cementing the bonds of a Union, which I trust may be perpetual. Sir, the surest means of preserving our cherished Union is in the exercise of mutual charity and forbearance; in a faithful observance of the just rights of the people of the several States, and a considerate regard for the feelings, habits, views, and, it may be, the prejudices of the different sections, so far as the same do not violate the Constitution of the United States.

Sir, slavery is out of the way; pray let us not quarrel about what policy the States may see fit to adopt in regard to the question of suffrage. I have never been the friend or advocate of slavery. I have always regarded it as an evil, but an evil which, in my opinion, the States alone could remove; but it has ceased to exist, and certainly no man who could in the least influence the public mind will be found wild enough to advocate its reestablishment. The discussion of the question of slavery which has for so many years disturbed the deliberations of the American Congress, and which has been the parent of so much excitement and sectional bitterness, should no longer disturb our deliberations.

Sir, no one will be more gratified than myself to witness an advancement in the conduct, intelligence, and virtue of the emancipated race, equal to the most sanguine anticipations of those who have so long demanded their freedom. Whether the colored race, by their industry, morality, and good conduct, shall show themselves worthy to be admitted to the exercise and enjoyment of more political privileges than they now enjoy, is a question which must be left to the exclusive judgment of the States in which they reside. For myself, as a Representative from the State of Ohio, I disclaim any right whatever to interfere in these questions in any of the States; and as a citizen of that State, I am free to say, while I have no ill feeling toward the negro, I shall ever oppose conferring upon him the right of suffrage in Ohio.

But, sir, I repeat it, these are questions which must be left to the exclusive determination of the several States; and the attempt to deprive certain States from being represented on this floor because the negro is not allowed to vote within such States is a bold conspiracy to subvert one of the plainest rights which belong to the States. If you do not intend that these States shall be represented in this Congress, pray, sir, tell me in what Congress they are to be represented? What do you propose to do with them in the mean time? Are they to be held as Poland is held by Russia, as Hungary is held by Austria, or as Ireland is held by Great Britain? Are the principles of the old Constitution to be abandoned, and the whole character of our system of government changed, in order that the white men of eleven States may be disfranchised, and the negro clothed with political rights? Is it possible, sir, that within the limits of our Republic white men will combine to degrade their own race and kindred in order to confer political power into the hands of black men?

Sir, I deny the right of this Congress, or of the Federal Government, either directly or indirectly, to regulate the right of the elective franchise within the several States. No such power has been conferred upon it. We must, if we expect to continue our free system of Government, agree, like frank and candid men, that there is no difference in the rights of the several States of this Union; that each State is the equal of the other, and has the same rights and privileges; and if you can interfere by the General Government, to regulate the question of the elective franchise in North Carolina, you may by the same power regulate the same question in Massachusetts and Ohio.

The Federal Government cannot dictate to the States in this matter of suffrage. The Constitution of the United States, second section of article one, declares that—

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures."

The qualifications of electors of members of the Legislatures of the States have been fixed and regulated from the earliest period of the adoption of government by the American people, by each State for itself, and the section already quoted expressly recognizes this right as belonging exclusively to the States.

Sir, the claim to regulate the elective franchise in the States unrepresented on this floor cannot be sustained upon any other theory than that advocated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, namely, that these States, whose people were lately in revolt, were actually out of the Union; that the Union was broken up and dismembered, and that we have conquered these States, and reduced them to Territories. But again, we have been told that the people of these States must remain unrepresented until they exhibit signs of true loyalty. How long; five, ten, or thirty years?

Charles Sumner tells us that time is necessary. He says in his speech of September 14, 1865, before the Republican State convention of Massachusetts, that—

"For thirty years and more this wickedness was maturing. Who can say that the same time will not be needed now to mature conditions of permanent peace? Who can say that a generation must not elapse before these rebel communities have been so far changed as to become safe associates in a common Government?"

And again, in the same speech, he says:

"As those who have fought against us should be disfranchised, so those who fought for us should be enfranchised." * * * "For awhile the freedman will take the place of the master, thus verifying the saying that the last shall be first and the first shall be last."

Another distinguished citizen of the same State, General Butler, has told us in a speech which he has made somewhere in Massachusetts, that we have full power in our own hands, and that we can refuse to let a State be represented until the State shall permit the colored man to vote. And this seems to be the scheme of the radicals, who are seeking to defeat the policy of a patriotic Executive to heal up the wounds of the country, and bring all the States together again in this House of the people's Representatives. I trust that conservative gentlemen on the other side will not be overawed by the Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Sir, the southern people have erred deeply and terribly, but have they not also most grievously suffered? No brave or gallant man would at a time like this cry out for more punishment upon this people. A magnanimous people, and a great and magnanimous Government will not allow it. Now, that the war has ended, every honest effort should be made by all true citizens to restore friendly relations between the different sections, and cement more firmly than ever the bonds of the Union. All further effort to punish this people by the forfeiture of their political rights should end, except in so far as the public interests may imperatively demand punishment; and then let it be in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the land. If indeed we have peace, let it be a peace in reality. Let our conduct be such as will be approved by that calm, deliberate, and thoughtful public opinion of the Christian and civilized world, which will most assuredly pass its judgment on the conduct of our Government.

Sir, I am glad to be able to say here to-day that in the main I approve the course and policy of the President on this question; and shall feel it my duty to give him my support in every proper and constitutional effort to restore to these States their just rights, and to heal up the wounds which have been inflicted upon the country. It is indeed a high and noble mission in which the Executive is engaged, and I regret to find he has not the cordial support of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, and those who concur in the views of that gentleman as announced on last Monday. Now that the war is over; since we have vindicated before the world the ability of this Government to maintain itself and to preserve the Union, it seems to me that it is the duty of every public man to study, without partisan bitterness, the remedies best adapted to restore quiet and confidence to the country, and to show to the world, that while this Government is determined to maintain the integrity of the Union, cost what it may, and to crush with a strong hand all opposition to its rightful authority, so, too, in the hour of triumph, when the opposition to the Government has surrendered, and given evidence of its return to obedience, that we know how to practice that generous clemency and kindness which cannot fail to win back the affections of these people, many of whom have been misguided and deceived; and thus exhibit to the world that our people are as much distinguished for their magnanimity and forbearance as for their gallantry and courage. Sir, there is great wisdom in the noble language of Edmund Burke, when he exclaimed, that magnanimity in politics is the truest wisdom, and a great empire and little minds go ill together.

But, sir, the great mass of the southern people have been included in the amnesty proclamation of the President, and many who were not so included have since, by the action of the Executive, received special pardons. By what law or principle are you to deprive these men, after they have taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, from the exercise of the right of suffrage, and the great constitutional right of being represented on this floor? Sir, you cannot rightfully thus inflict penalties and forfeitures upon them.

But I insist that by the well-settled principles of public law the great masses of the people of these southern States, who did not engage in organizing the rebellion, and only were carried along with it, after it was organized, because they could not resist it, are not guilty of treason.

It is a well-settled principle of public law that protection and allegiance are reciprocal duties; and that Government which claims allegiance, must afford protection. The majority of the people of the South were opposed to secession. On the direct issue made in Virginia in 1861, there was an overwhelming majority against it, and a fair vote in the other States would have exhibited clear majorities against secession, unless we should except South Carolina. And I ask would it not be monstrous for this Government which failed to protect the great masses of the people of the southern States from the usurpation of those who conspired to break up the Union, now to punish this same people with the most severe and grave penalties, namely, the forfeiture of high political rights, because they submitted to the usurped power which they were unable to resist?

Sir, the great principle of justice, as applied by the common sanction of the civilized world is, that principle already named, that allegiance and protection are reciprocal duties, and the Government which has failed to protect any portion of its citizens from the usurpation of any other power, foreign or internal, cannot, when such power has been overthrown, punish the unfortunate people who for the time being were subjected to such usurped power for yielding it obedience. This doctrine is well settled in England, and clearly laid down by many of her eminent law writers. And has also been solemnly recognized and applied by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. Rice, in 4 Wheaton's Reports, page 246.

Why longer delay the admission of the Representatives from these States? Will it make their people better citizens, and inspire them with more love and devotion to the Government? Every man who understands human nature must know that such a course is only calculated to harass and annoy this people, and divert the public mind from the consideration of other questions of great interest to the country. Why refer this question to a joint committee of the Senate and House, when the Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members? Why this attempt to stifle all debate on a question of so much importance to the States and to the entire Union?

I know gentlemen dislike to give up power, and are alarmed at the idea that power may indeed pass from their hands. They may indeed for a while annoy and interfere with the President in his patriotic efforts to unite and harmonize the whole country, North and South; but gentlemen are mistaken if they believe they can defeat the purposes of the Executive.

Sir, the people will canvass this great question, and will inquire why it is that eleven States of this Union are unrepresented here; and sooner or later public opinion, which will sweep everything before it, will demand that these States shall be represented. The people, sir, will sustain the President in every honest and patriotic effort to discharge the grave and responsible duties which have devolved upon him; and gentlemen cannot long evade the issue which has been so frankly and distinctly made by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania with the policy of the Chief Executive.

But, sir, much of this attempt to disfranchise the white men of eleven States unless they consent to give the ballot to the negro, (and I say it without intending the least disrespect to the able and distinguished delegation from that section,) comes from New England, and finds a zealous and able advocate in the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

New England fears that, unless her policy is adopted, her power to control this nation will be lost forever, and knows that if it is sanctioned and adopted by the American people, she may rule this nation for generations to come.

Sir, there is much in the history of New England which I admire; she has produced many great and noble sons; but there is also much in her history which we have to deplore—much in her intermeddling, narrow, uneasy, and aggressive spirit that is at war with the true interests of the American people. She will not be satisfied unless she can rule and control the policy of this Government. If New England, and New England policy, can regulate and control the question of suffrage in these eleven States, she believes that she may be able to control the financial legislation of this country, and kindly fix the amount of our tariffs, and internal taxes, for the next fifty years to come. Sir, it is a bold attempt and well worth all the effort that her Sumners and Phillipses can exert to accomplish; but it will fail, as it should fail, for if it could succeed, the great principles of our system of government would be overthrown. It is an attempt to disfranchise our own race and kindred, and transfer their political power into the hands of another race. Can it be possible that the prejudices, passions, and supposed interests of one portion of the white men of this Union, shall lead them so far as to attempt to strip their own race of political rights, in order to confer them upon the negro?

Sir, let us endeavor to be equal to the great work before us. Instead of postponing the admission of the members from these States now asking admission, let us generously welcome their return to representation in this common sisterhood of States, and in place of attempting to confer on the negro the right of suffrage let us exert ourselves industriously to heal up all past differences, and labor to ascertain how we may best curtail the enormous expenditures of the Government, and reduce the heavy burdens of taxation, which now press upon the people. Let us recur back to those wise and pure lessons of patriotism and duty taught us by Jefferson in his first inaugural when he declared the principles which he deemed essential to the Government:

"Equal and exact justice to all men of whatever State or persuasion, religious or political; peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none; the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies; the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor is the sheet-anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad; a jealous care of the right of election by the people, a mild and safe corrective of abuses which are lopped by the sword of revolution where peaceable remedies are unprovided; absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principle of republics, from which there is no appeal but to force, the vital principle and the immediate parent of despotism; a well-disciplined militia our best reliance in peace, and for the first moments of war till regulars may relieve them; the supremacy of the civil over the military authority; economy in the public expense; that labor may be lightly burdened; the honest payment of our debts; and sacred preservation of the public faith; encouragement of agriculture and of commerce as its handmaid; the diffusion of information and arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason; freedom of religion; freedom of the press, and freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus, and trial by juries impartially selected."

If these wise principles shall guide us, we may look with confidence for a favorable solution of all the questions submitted to our deliberations; but, sir, if the radical and revolutionary measures which have been introduced into this House since the opening of this session of Congress shall commend themselves favorably to the majority on this floor, then I believe that evils, serious and lamentable, can only arise out of this overreaching and constant attempt to dictate to, and regulate, the domestic affairs of the States. It is incompatible with our whole frame and system of government. I believe this Government can be conducted successfully under our present Constitution, with a faithful observance and respect for the just powers and rights of the States; and so believing, while I will most cordially and sincerely labor to maintain "the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet-anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad," I will also, with the same determination, oppose all attempts at the centralization and consolidation of powers in the Federal Government, which have not been granted to it, and labor to support "the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwarks against anti-republican tendencies."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee of the Whole rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair, when a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announcing that the President pro tempore of the Senate had appointed the following-named Senators as members, on the part of the Senate, of the joint committee on reconstruction: MESSRS. FESSENDEN, GRIMES, HARRIS, HOWARD, JOHNSON, and WILLIAMS.

RECONSTRUCTION—AGAIN.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad, if it meet the sense of those members who are present, to make some remarks upon the general question now before the House; but I do not wish to trespass at all upon their disposition in regard to this matter. I do not know, however, that there will be a better opportunity to say what little I have to say than is now offered; and if the House shall indicate no other wish, I will proceed to say it. ["Go on!"]

I need not say that I have been gratified to hear many things which have fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINGK,] who has just taken his seat. I have no party feeling, nor any other feeling, which would prevent me from rejoicing in the indications apparent on that side of the House of a purpose to concur with the loyal people of the country, and with the loyal administration of the Government, and with the loyal majorities in both Houses of Congress, in restoring peace and order to our common country. I cannot, perhaps, help wishing, sir, that these indications of an interest in the preservation of our Government had come somewhat sooner. I cannot help feeling that such expressions cannot now be of as much service to the country as they might once have been. If we could have had from that side of the House such indications of an interest in the preservation of the Union, such heartfelt sympathy with the efforts of the Government for the preservation of that Union, such hearty denunciation of those who were seeking its destruction, while the war was raging, I am sure we might have been spared some years of war, some millions of money, and rivers of blood and tears.

But, sir, I am not disposed to fight over again battles now happily ended. I feel, and I am rejoiced to find that members on the other side of the House feel, that the great problem now before us is to restore the Union to its old integrity, purified from everything that interfered with the full development of the spirit of liberty which it was made to enshrine. I trust that we shall have a general concurrence of the members of this House and of this Congress in such measures as may be deemed most fit and proper for the accomplishment of that result. I am glad to assume and to believe that there is not a member of this House, nor a man in this country, who does not wish, from the bottom of his heart, to see the day speedily come when we shall have this nation—the great American Republic—again united, more harmonious in its action than it has ever been, and forever one and indivisible. We in this Congress are to devise the means to restore its union and its harmony, to perfect its institutions, and to make it in all its parts and in all its action, through all time to come, too strong, too wise, and too free ever to invite or ever to permit the hand of rebellion again to be raised against it.

Now, sir, in devising those ways and means to accomplish that great result, the first thing we have to do is to know the point from which we start, to understand the nature of the material with which we have to work—the condition of the territory and the States with which we are concerned. I had supposed at the outset of this session that it was the purpose of this House to proceed to that work without discussion, and to commit it almost exclusively, if not entirely, to the joint committee raised by the two Houses for the consideration of that subject. But, sir, I must say that I was glad when I perceived the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] himself the chairman on the part of this House of that great committee on reconstruction, lead off in a discussion of this general subject, and thus invite all the rest of us who choose to follow him in the debate. In the remarks which he made in this body a few days since, he laid down, with the clearness and the force which characterize everything he says and does, his point of departure in commencing this great work. I had hoped that the ground he would lay down would be such that we could all of us stand upon it and cooperate with him in our common object. I feel constrained to say, sir—and I do it without the slightest disposition to create or to exaggerate differences—that there were features in his exposition of the condition of the country with which I cannot concur. I cannot for myself start from precisely the point which he assumes.

In his remarks on that occasion he assumed that the States lately in rebellion were and are out of the Union. Throughout his speech—I will not trouble you with reading passages from it—I find him speaking of those States as "outside of the Union," as "dead States," as having forfeited all their rights and terminated their State existence. I find expressions still more definite and distinct; I find him stating that they "are and for four years have been out of the Union for all legal purposes;" as having been for four years a "separate power," and "a separate nation."

His position therefore is that these States, having been in rebellion, are now out of the Union, and are simply within the jurisdiction of the Constitution of the United States as so much territory to be dealt with precisely as the will of the conqueror, to use his own language, may dictate. Now, sir, if that position is correct, it prescribes for us one line of policy to be pursued very different from the one that will be proper if it is not correct. His belief is that what we have to do is to create new States out of this territory at the proper time—many years distant—retaining them meantime in a territorial condition, and subjecting them to precisely such a state of discipline and tutelage as Congress or the Government of the United States may see fit to prescribe. If I believed in the premises which he assumes, possibly, though I do not think probably, I might agree with the conclusion he has reached.

But, sir, I cannot believe that this is our condition. I cannot believe that these States have ever been out of the Union, or that they are now out of the Union. I cannot believe that they ever have been, or are now, in any sense a separate Power. If they were, sir, how and when did they become so? They were once States of this Union—that every one concedes; bound to the Union and made members of the Union by the Constitution of the United States. If they ever went out of the Union it was at some specific time and by some specific act. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is not now in his seat. I should have been glad to ask him by what specific act, and at what precise time, any one of those States took itself out of the American Union. Was it by the ordinance of secession? I think we all agree that an ordinance of secession passed by any State of this Union is simply a nullity, because it encounters in its practical operation the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the land. It could have no legal, actual force or validity. It could not operate to effect any actual change in the relations of the State adopting it to the national Government, still less to accomplish the removal of that State from the sovereign jurisdiction of the Constitution of the United States.

Well, sir, did the resolutions of these States, the declarations of their officials, the speeches of members of their Legislatures, or the utterances of their press accomplish the result? Certainly not. They could not possibly work any change whatever in the relations of these States to the General Government. All their ordinances and all their resolutions were simply declarations of a purpose to secede. Their secession, if it ever took place, certainly could not date from the time when their intention to secede was first announced. After declaring that intention, they proceeded to carry it into effect. How? By war. By sustaining their purpose by arms against the force which the United States brought to bear against it. Did they sustain it? Were their arms victorious? If they were, then their secession was an accomplished fact. If not, it was nothing more than an abortive attempt—a purpose unfulfilled. This, then, is simply a question of fact, and we all know what the fact is. They did not succeed. They failed to maintain their ground by force of arms—in other words, they failed to secede.

But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] insists that they did secede, and that this fact is not in the least affected by the other fact that the Constitution forbids secession. He says that the law forbids murder, but that murders are nevertheless committed. But there is no analogy between the two cases. If secession had been accomplished, if these States had gone out, and overcome the armies that tried to prevent their going out, then the prohi bition of the Constitution could not have altered the fact. In the case of murder the man is killed, and murder is thus committed in spite of the law. The fact of killing is essential to the commission of the crime; and the fact of going out is essential to secession. But in this case there was no such fact. "I think I need not argue any further the position that the rebel States have never for one moment, by any ordinances of secession, or by any successful war, carried themselves beyond the rightful jurisdiction of the Constitution of the United States. They have interrupted for a time the practical enforcement and exercise of that jurisdiction; they rendered it impossible for a time for this Government to enforce obedience to its laws; but there has never been an hour when this Government, or this Congress, or this House, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself, ever conceded that those States were beyond the jurisdiction of the Constitution and laws of the United States.

During all these four years of war Congress has been making laws for the government of those very States, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has voted for them, and voted to raise armies to enforce them. Why was this done if they were a separate nation? Why, if they were not part of the United States? Those laws were made for them as States. Members have voted for laws imposing upon them direct taxes, which are apportioned, according to the Constitution, only "among the several States" according to their population. In a variety of ways—to some of which the gentleman who preceded me has referred—this Congress has by its action assumed and asserted that they were still States in the Union, though in rebellion, and that it was with the rebellion that we were making war, and not with the States themselves as States, and still less as a separate, as a foreign, Power.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania cited a variety of legal precedents and declarations of principle, nearly all of them, I believe, drawn from the celebrated decision of the Supreme Court pronounced by Justice Grier, in what are popularly known as the Prize Cases. His citations were all made for the purpose of proving that these States were in a condition of public war—that they were waging such a war as could only be waged by a separate and independent Power. But a careful scrutiny of that decision will show that it lends not the slightest countenance to such an inference. Gentlemen who hear me will doubtless recollect that the object of the trial in those cases was to decide whether certain vessels, captured in trying to break the blockade, were lawful prize of war or not; and the decision of this point turned on the question whether the war then raging was such a contest as justified a resort to the modes and usages of public war, of which blockade was one. Justice Grier decided that it was—that, so far as the purposes and weapons of war were concerned, the two parties were belligerents, and that the Government might blockade the ports and capture property within the lines of the district in rebellion, precisely as if that district were an independent nation engaged in a public war. But he said not one word which could assert or imply that it was an independent nation—that it had a separate existence, or had gone out of the sovereign jurisdiction of the United States. On the contrary, everything he said—the very passages quoted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself—imply and assert precisely the opposite. He speaks of them, not as sovereign, but as claiming to be sovereign; not as being separate, but as trying to be separate from the United States. In this paragraph quoted from that decision, for example—

"Hence, in organizing this rebellion, they have acted as States claiming to be sovereign over all persons and property within their respective limits, and asserting a right to absolve their citizens from their allegiance to the Federal Government. Several of these States have combined to form a new confederacy, claiming to be acknowledged by the world as a sovereign State. Their right to do so is now being decided by woe of battle!"—the court asserts precisely the principle which I have already stated—that they were claiming independence, and that the validity of their claim would depend wholly and entirely upon the decision reached in the field of battle. The same misconception is traceable in all the legal citations made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. For example, he says:

"Again, the court say, what I have been astonished that any one should doubt:

"The proclamation of blockade is itself official and conclusive evidence to the court that a state of war existed."

"Now, what was the legal result of such war?"

"The conventions, the treaties, made with a nation, are broken or annulled by a war arising between the contracting parties."—Vattel, 372; Halleck, 371, section 23.

A blockade is evidence that a state of war exists; and a state of war annuls all treaties between the contending parties. But does this warrant the inference that the Constitution of the United States, which is not a treaty, was annulled, or its binding force in the least degree impaired, by the war of rebellion?

But I will not go further in examining these citations. All they show is that the Government, as against the rebels, and in waging the war to suppress the rebellion, had the rights of belligerents, and that the rules and laws of war might and must be applied to this contest although it was not a war between separate and independent Powers. How, then, can this decision possibly be made to convey the idea that the parties to the war were separate and independent States? It proceeds throughout and in every part upon precisely the opposite idea.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] spoke of States forfeiting their State existence by the fact of rebellion. Well, I do not see how there can be any such forfeiture involved or implied. The individual citizens of those States went into the rebellion. They thereby incurred certain penalties under the laws and Constitution of the United States. What the States did was to endeavor to interpose their State authority between the individuals in rebellion and the Government of the United States, which assumed, and which would carry out the assumption, to declare those individuals traitors for their acts. The individuals in the States who were in rebellion, it seems to me, were the only parties who under the Constitution and laws of the United States could incur the penalties of treason. I know of no law, I know of nothing in the Constitution of the United States, I know of nothing in any recognized or established code of international law, which can punish a State as a State for any act it may perform. It is certain that our Constitution assumes nothing of the kind. It does not deal with States, except in one or two instances, such as elections of members of Congress, and the election of electors of President and Vice President.

Indeed, the main feature which distinguishes the Union under the Constitution from the old Confederation is this, that whereas the old Confederation did deal with States directly, making requisitions upon them for supplies and relying upon them for the execution of its laws, the Constitution of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, made its laws binding on the individual citizens of the several States, whether living in one State or in another. Congress, as the legislative branch of this Government, enacts a law which shall be operative upon every individual within its jurisdiction. It is binding upon each individual citizen, and if he resists it by force he is guilty of a crime and is punished accordingly, anything in the constitution or laws of his State to the contrary notwithstanding. But the States themselves are not touched by the laws of the United States or by the Constitution of the United States. A State cannot be indicted; a State cannot be tried; a State cannot be hung for treason. The individuals in a State may be so tried and hung, but the State as an organization, as an organic member of the Union, still exists, whether its individual citizens commit treason or not.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] yield to me a moment for a question?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: by virtue of what does a State exist? Is it by virtue of a constitution, and by virtue of its relations to the Union? That is, does a State of the Union exist, first by virtue of a constitution, and secondly by virtue of its practical relations to the Government of the United States? And further, I would ask whether those States, acting by conventions of the people, have not overthrown the constitution which made them parts of the Union, and thereby destroyed or suspended—phrase it as you will—the practical relations which made them parts of the Union?

Mr. RAYMOND. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] that it is not the practical relations of a State at any particular moment which make it a State or a part of the Union. What makes a State a part of the Union is the Constitution of the United States; and the rebel States have not yet destroyed that.

Mr. KELLEY. The question I propound is, whether a State does not exist by virtue of a constitution, its constitution, which is a thing which may be modified or overthrown?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. And whether these rebellious constitutions or States have not been overthrown?

Mr. RAYMOND. A State does not exist by virtue of any particular constitution. It always has a constitution, but it need not have a specific constitution at any specific time. A State has certain practical relations to the Government of the United States. But the fact of those relations being practically operative and in actual force at any moment does not constitute its relationship to the Government or its membership of the United States. Its practical operation is one thing. The fact of its existence as an organized community, one of the great national community of States, is quite another thing.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me interrupt the gentleman one moment longer. I will ask him whether, if the constitution be overthrown or destroyed and its practical relations cease, there be any State left?

Mr. RAYMOND. Why, sir, if there be no constitution of any sort in a State, no law, nothing but chaos, then that State would no longer exist as an organization. But that has not been the case, it never is the case in great communities, for they always have constitutions and forms of government. It may not be a constitution or form of government adapted to its relation to the Government of the United States; and that would be an evil to be remedied by the Government of the United States. That is what we have been trying to do for the last four years. The practical relations of the governments of those States with the Government of the United States were all wrong—were hostile to that Government. They denied our jurisdiction, and they denied that they were States of the Union, but their denial did not change the fact; and there was never any time when their organizations as States were destroyed. A dead State is a solecism, a contradiction in terms, an impossibility.

These are, I confess, rather metaphysical distinctions, but I did not raise them. Those who assert that a State is destroyed whenever its constitution is changed, or whenever its practical relations with this Government are changed, must be held responsible for whatever metaphysical niceties may be necessarily involved in the discussion.

I do not know, sir, that I have made my views on this point clear to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who has questioned me upon it, and I am still more doubtful whether, even if they are intelligible, he will concur with me as to their justice. But I regard these States as just as truly within the jurisdiction of the Constitution, and therefore just as really and truly States of the American Union now as they were before the war. Their practical relations to the Constitution of the United States have been disturbed, and we have been endeavoring, through four years of war, to restore them and make them what they were before the war. The victory in the field has given us the means of doing this; we can now reestablish the practical relations of those States to the Government. Our actual jurisdiction over them, which they vainly attempted to throw off, is already restored. The conquest we have achieved is a conquest over the rebellion, not a conquest over the States whose authority the rebellion had for a time subverted.

For these reasons I think the views submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] upon this point are unsound. Let me next cite some of the consequences which, it seems to me, must follow the acceptance of his position. If, as he asserts, we have been waging war with an independent Power, with a separate nation, I cannot see how we can talk of treason in connection with our recent conflict or demand the execution of Davis or anybody else as a traitor. Certainly if we were at war with any other foreign Power we should not talk of the treason of those who were opposed to us in the field. If we were engaged in a war with France and should take as prisoner the Emperor Napoleon, certainly we could not talk of him as a traitor or as liable to execution. I think that by adopting any such assumption as that of the honorable gentleman, we surrender the whole idea of treason and the punishment of traitors. I think, moreover, that we accept, virtually and practically, the doctrine of State sovereignty, the right of a State to withdraw from the Union, and to break up the Union at its own will and pleasure. I do not see how upon those premises we can escape that conclusion. If the States that engaged in the late rebellion constituted themselves, by their ordinances of secession or by any of the acts with which they followed those ordinances, a separate and independent Power, I do not see how we can deny the principles on which they professed to act, or refuse assent to their practical results. I have heard no clearer, no stronger statement of the doctrine of State sovereignty as paramount to the sovereignty of the nation than would be involved in such a concession. Whether he intended it or not, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] actually assents to the extreme doctrines of the advocates of secession.

Mr. NIBLACK. I beg leave to inquire of the gentleman whether the theory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which he is combating, would not also, if carried to its legitimate consequences, make those who resisted the confederacy in the insurrectionary States guilty of treason to the confederacy or to those States?

Mr. RAYMOND. I was just going to remark that another of the consequences of this doctrine, as it seems to me, would be our inability to talk of loyal men in the South. Loyal to what? Loyal to a foreign, independent Power, as the United States would become under those circumstances? Certainly not. Simply disloyal to their own Government, and deserters, or whatever you may choose to call them, from that to which they would owe allegiance to a foreign and independent State.

Now, there is another consequence of the doctrine which I shall not dwell upon, but simply suggest. If that confederacy was an independent Power, a separate nation, it had the right to contract debts; and we, having overthrown and conquered that independent Power, according to the theory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would become the successors, the inheritors, of its debts and assets, and we must pay them. Sir, that is not simply a theory or a claim thrown out in debate here; it is one advanced on behalf of the Government of Great Britain as against us. Every gentleman will remember the case in which cotton belonging to the southern confederacy was claimed in Liverpool, and the decision there was—

Mr. JENCKES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. JENCKES. From what information does the gentleman state that that point was taken by the Government of Great Britain?

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, sir, I do not mean to be understood as saying that the point was taken by the Government of Great Britain itself—

Mr. JENCKES. That is a very essential distinction.

Mr. RAYMOND. But that the point was taken on behalf of the claimants in Great Britain, and the Vice Chancellor of England gave a decision which substantially covered that point and asserted the doctrine I have stated.

Mr. JENCKES. But which is not law either in England or in any other country recognizing international law.

Mr. RAYMOND. That is a matter between the honorable gentleman from Rhode Island and the Vice Chancellor of Great Britain. The point I wish to make is simply this, that our Government has denied from the beginning, and denies now, that the confederacy was ever such a corporation, such an independent body of men as could contract debts, whether we are liable for them or not. The declaration of our Secretary of State in his recent correspondence on that subject shows that we have always steadily denied that the confederacy was such a corporation as could contract a valid debt, whether we would be made responsible for it or not. But one thing is very clear, that if we recognize the doctrine that those lately in rebellion against our Government constituted an independent Power, we must concede their ability to contract debts. Whether we as their successors are to pay them or not is another question, but the claim has been made, and denied only on the ground of the incapacity of the rebel confederacy to contract debts or binding engagements of any sort.

Now, sir, I have dwelt upon these points longer than I intended. I do not think that the doctrine I have been combating is held by any considerable number of the people of this country, or, indeed, by any considerable number of the members of this House. I certainly do not think these States are to be dealt with by us as provinces—as simply so much territory—held to us by no other ties than those of conquest. I think we are to deal with them as States, having State governments, still subject to the jurisdiction of the Constitution and laws of the United States; still under the constitutional control of the national Government; and that, in our dealings with them we are to be guided and governed, not simply by our sovereign will and pleasure as conquerors, but by the restrictions and limitations of the Constitution of the United States—precisely as we are restrained and limited in our dealings with all other States of the American Union.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he is entirely sure we have the right to try Jefferson Davis for treason inasmuch as our Government has given to them belligerent rights, has recognized and respected the commissions that he has issued?

Mr. RAYMOND. I have no doubt of it; not the slightest. I do not think that the treason of Jefferson Davis has anything to do with the fact that we conceded humane treatment to our prisoners of war. I merely alluded to the matter—I might have elaborated it—when I said that because we had granted to these States, as a Power waging war, rights usually accorded to nations at war, we were not therefore concluded from proceeding against them as traitors.

The decision of the Supreme Court, to which I have once referred, if I understand it aright, asserts that we have the right to proceed against them as traitors, or rather that we had the right to exercise against them both the powers of sovereignty and of belligerents; that the one did not exclude the other. It would be an extraordinary circumstance if, because we treated them humanely as prisoners of war, we have not the right to hold them responsible to the laws they have broken.

"It is a proposition never doubted"— says Justice Grier, in the decision so often referred to—

"that the belligerent party who claims to be sovereign may exercise both belligerent and sovereign rights. Treating the other party as a belligerent, and using only the milder modes of coercion which the law of nations has introduced to mitigate the rigors of war, cannot be a subject of complaint, [or of claim,] by the party to whom it is accorded as a grace or granted as a necessity."

Now, if according to the view I have presented, we are to deal with those States as States within the Union, the next question that recurs is, how are we to deal with them? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIXCK] who preceded me took the ground that they had only to resume their places and their powers in the national Government—that their Representatives have only to come into this Hall and take their seats without question and without conditions of any sort. I cannot concur, sir, in this view. I do not think these States have any such rights. On the contrary, I think we have a full and perfect right to require certain conditions, in the nature of guarantees for the future, and that right rests, primarily and technically, on the surrender we may and must require at their hands. The rebellion has been defeated. A defeat always implies a surrender, and in a political sense a surrender implies more than the transfer of the arms used on the field of battle. It implies, in the case of civil war, a surrender of the principles and doctrines, of all the weapons and agencies, by which the war has been carried on. The military surrender was made on the field of battle, to our generals as the agents and representatives of the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States. But this is not all. They have still to surrender—

Mr. JENCKES. If the gentleman will allow me I will ask him a question. Was not the surrender of the rebel arms made to the people of the United States?

Mr. RAYMOND. It ought to be, and must be to them through their representatives.

Mr. JENCKES. I made the remark to correct what seemed to be an erroneous impression.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, I do not see any correction in what the gentleman has said, or any error in what I said. The rebels surrendered to the generals of our armies, who were commissioned by the President of the United States, himself the representative of the people.

Mr. JENCKES. Not to the generals as the agents of the President, but as the representatives of the military authority of the people of the United States.

Mr. RAYMOND. Why certainly all authority belongs to the people. It is a mere distinction of words, and scarcely that.

Mr. JENCKES. I beg pardon of the gentleman. It seems to me that it is an essential distinction.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, if it seems important to the gentleman from Rhode Island or to anybody else, I am quite willing to make the addition to my remark which he suggests. I will say then that in surrendering on the field of battle, they surrendered to the generals who were in command of the armies, as agents of the President of the United States, who was and is the representative of the people of the United States. If that explanation is satisfactory to the gentleman I am very happy to make it; and perhaps I am obliged to him for having enabled me to state it a little more specifically and accurately than I did at first.

Now, there must be at the end of the war a similar surrender on the political field of controversy. That surrender is due as an act of justice from the defeated party to the victorious party. It is due also, and we have a right to exact it, as a guarantee for the future. Why do we demand the surrender of their arms by the vanquished in every battle? We do it that they may not renew the contest. Why do we seek in this and all similar cases a surrender of the principles for which they fought? It is that they may never again be made the basis of controversy and rebellion against the Government of the United States.

Now, what are those principles which should be thus surrendered? The principle of State sovereignty is one of them. It was the cornerstone of the rebellion—at once its animating spirit, and its fundamental basis. Deeply ingrained as it was in the southern heart, it must be surrendered. The ordinances in which it was embodied must not only be repealed, the principle itself must be abandoned, and the ordinances, so far as this war is concerned, be declared null and void, and that declaration must be embodied in their fundamental constitutions. We have a right to insist upon this; and it must be apparent that so far as that principle is concerned, this war was a permanent success.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will allow me to make the inquiry whether if that were done to-day by South Carolina, and the people of that insurgent State restored to all their powers in this Union, they could not blot it out to-morrow, by every construction that has ever been given to the operation of the Constitution of the United States upon any State maintaining its relations to this Government? What guarantee would that be?

Mr. RAYMOND. I might as well ask the gentleman whether if this Congress pass a certain law to-day they may not repeal it to-morrow. I do not know anything that any community can do that they cannot undo at some future time.

Mr. BINGHAM. When the gentleman talks of guarantees to the people of the United States, I ask him whether there is not some other method that occurs to him by which these guarantees can be obtained than to submit simply to the will of the insurgent States? Is it not to be done by putting the guarantee in the Constitution of the whole people of the United States, and thus placing it beyond the power of South Carolina to repeal it?

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, Mr. Chairman, there have been a good many things put in the Constitution of the United States which South Carolina did not deem beyond her power, and they undertook to prove that fact, but they did not succeed. My own impression is that whatever is now a part of the Constitution and laws of this country is beyond the power of South Carolina to disturb. I might as well ask the gentleman whether, when the enemy surrendered its ordinance in the field, we ought not to refuse to accept it because they might possibly at some future time come and recapture it.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will excuse me. He talked of new guarantees. The people of the United States undoubtedly demand them. But I wish him to answer intelligibly what new guarantee is given by incorporating in the constitution of South Carolina the mere formula that she by her constitution declares that she has not the right to secede, when she has the power the very next day to strike it out? Is that a new guarantee?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly it is. That has never been in the constitution of South Carolina before. If she puts it there now, it is a new guarantee, is it not? Whether it is an adequate form of that guarantee or not, is another question which I have not discussed. South Carolina has always hitherto asserted the right of secession, and under that assertion she attempted to secede. If she now repudiates or abandons that right, we have certainly that new assurance that she will not renew the attempt. We shall certainly have this tangible admission on her part, that if she does again rebel, it will be in direct repudiation and contempt of her own principles. I will not say that nothing more would be desired or accepted. I am quite willing, if it can be done, to put that acknowledgment into the Constitution of the United States. But I think it is there now, and that it always has been there, and that there is no more doubt about it now than if it were stated in express terms. When I read in the Constitution of the United States, that "this Constitution shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding," I deem that to be as plain as any declaration can be against the doctrine of State sovereignty, and I cannot believe that any form of words on our part would be more explicit or more emphatic. But if the gentleman can get any more explicit denial into the Constitution of the United States, he will find me voting for it every time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then the gentleman admits that there is no necessity for any new guarantee from a State.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have made no such admission. I have said that it was in the Constitution of the United States before the rebellion, and that it is now in the constitution of the State of South Carolina also, where it never was before; and that it is certainly a new guarantee, whether worth much or little.

Now there is another thing to be surrendered by the defeated rebellion, and that is the obligation to pay the rebel war debt.

Mr. SCHENCK. Will the gentleman allow me to inquire whether that guarantee in the constitution of South Carolina amounts to anything more than the signature of an indorser on the back of a note, who may at any time thereafter take his name from the paper?

Mr. RAYMOND. Perhaps not; perhaps you can get better security. If you can, I certainly shall not object. But such as it is, it is at all events something gained, and it is only in that light that I have referred to it. Neither of the distinguished gentlemen from Ohio, [Messrs. BINGHAM and SCHENCK,] able lawyers as they are, will deny that we had the right to demand that of South Carolina. And if it was worth while to demand it, it is hardly worth while, having got it, to say that it is of no value at all. We expose ourselves by so doing to the imputation of trifling in having demanded it at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no doubt at all that the people of the United States, those who maintained the integrity of their Constitution, had the right to demand of South Carolina a perpetual guarantee in the future that she should not even claim the color of authority to secede and set up a government against the constitutional authority of the Government of the nation. And when they demand that, I take it that the people of the United States are not to be told that South Carolina alone is to have the control and keeping of that guarantee. But the people of the United States are hereafter to be the guardians of their own honor, and the protectors of their own nationality, and they will take into their own keeping those great guarantees that are to secure peace and prosperity to every section of the Union in future, and to secure themselves against this work of secession under the pretense of State sovereignty.

Mr. RAYMOND. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] inform me who has ever pretended that the people of the nation are not to take into their own hands the guarantees of their own security and their own honor?

Mr. BINGHAM. Whoever pretends that future guarantees against the pretension of the right of a State to secede is to rest with the State alone, stands simply and solely on the resolutions of Virginia of 1798, out of the pernicious assumptions of which came all our trouble.

Mr. RAYMOND. Will the gentleman say whether I ever took any such ground?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not say that the gentleman has. But the gentleman says that the guarantee is to remain in the constitution of the State.

Mr. RAYMOND. Does that imply that it is never to be anywhere else?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the point.

Mr. RAYMOND. And I want an answer to that point. The gentleman tries to fasten upon me a position that I have never taken. And it required all his ingenuity to reach the point at which he has at last arrived. I said that we have a right to require from the people of South Carolina the abandonment of their doctrine of secession. Now, whether we may not also require that the people of the United States shall reaffirm that and put it into the Constitution of the United States, is a thing about which I have said nothing whatever, except that whenever presented in a proper form it will have my assent.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. For if these guarantees are essential, and the gentleman seems to agree that they are, then it is highly important that the American people should determine them, without being interrupted in the settlement of that question by the intervention of South Carolina under the pretension that she is a State in this Union, with all the reserved rights of a State. What right, I would ask, has she to set up any such pretension?

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must settle that matter with South Carolina.

Mr. BINGHAM. I propose, in cooperation with the loyal people and their Representatives in Congress, to settle it with South Carolina.

Mr. RAYMOND. I can only say on that subject that South Carolina found herself invited by the President of the United States, the representative of the people of the United States, as the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] very properly insists that I shall term him, to cooperate in the restoration of the Union—to resume her functions as a State of the Union, and, as a preliminary step, to repudiate this debt and give this guarantee of her loyalty and good faith.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not think he can find anywhere any authority for the statement that the President of the United States ever invited South Carolina to exercise any voice or vote on that question here. I would like the gentleman to inform us when and where the President of the United States invited South Carolina to do it.

Mr. JENCKES. He invited the people living upon the territory which was formerly the State of South Carolina.

Mr. RAYMOND. The President in his message says:

"I know very well that this policy is attended with some risk; that for its success it requires at least the acquiescence of the States which it concerns; that it implies an invitation to those States, by renewing their allegiance to the United States, to resume their functions as States of the Union."

Mr. BINGHAM. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RAYMOND. That is precisely what I said, and all that I said.

Mr. BINGHAM. That does not touch the point of my inquiry, which is this: has the President of the United States, in any place or at any time, intimated that South Carolina sustains such relations to this Union, notwithstanding her rebellion, that she has the right to interpose here in Congress her voice in this question of settling the adoption of these guarantees, and tendering them to the American people by a vote in Congress? That is what I mean exactly.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, Mr. Chairman, this is wandering considerably from the point. I have said nothing as yet about the admission into Congress of South Carolina, or any other of the States now unrepresented here. The President certainly has indicated to the southern States that he expected them to declare, in their constitutions, that their ordinances of secession were null and void; and in his message he speaks of an invitation to them to renew their functions as States of the Union; and that covers the whole ground that I attempted to speak upon in connection with this point. Possibly, if I am allowed to proceed without interruption, I shall, in due time, reach some other point of this discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no desire to do anything else than to elicit the truth in reference to this matter. I only wish to know the gentleman's position—to ascertain whether it is or is not that South Carolina and other seceding States now sustain such relations to this Union that they have the right to-day, under the Constitution, to have representation upon this floor according to the apportionment of 1862.

Mr. RAYMOND. Without any guarantees or conditions at all?

Mr. BINGHAM. I contend that all guarantees are worthless, unless embodied in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. RAYMOND. I suppose that when we get at the plain English of the matter, the gentleman means to ask me whether I am willing to vote for admitting Representatives from South Carolina unless the annulment of the ordinance of secession is incorporated into the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, sir; I do not ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then I must say that I do not see any practical point in the gentleman's inquiry, and with his permission I will go on with my argument.

Mr. BINGHAM. The only practical point of my inquiry is this: does the gentleman insist that South Carolina has now the right, under the Constitution, to representation in Congress as a State of the Union because her relations to the Government are, under the Constitution, those of a constitutional State in the Union? Is that the gentleman's position, or is it not?

Mr. RAYMOND. I have already said, sir, and said it as clearly and emphatically as I can, that we have a right to demand, and that we are in duty bound to demand, certain concessions from all the States lately in rebellion, as parts of their surrender, and as conditions of their resuming their functions in the Government of the nation. As to their representation in Congress, I should, before determining that question, wish to know something more of the character and position of the men they may send, and of what they have done.

Mr. BINGHAM. So do I; and I think that Congress ought to decide the question.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have not assumed to decide that point. I have not said anything about what the southern States have done. I have simply said what we have a right to require them to do; and the renunciation of the doctrine of State sovereignty is one thing that we have a right to require at their hands. We have a right also to require them to do another thing—to repudiate their obligation for debts incurred in carrying on the war against the Government. This, I am sure, the gentleman does not dispute or doubt. Whether they have done this or not, is another matter, which may come up at another time. We have the right to require this repudiation of their debt, because the money represented by that debt was one of the weapons with which they carried on the war against the Government of the United States.

Mr. BINGHAM. If they should repudiate that debt by State legislation, or by an amendment of the State constitution—I do not care in what form they may do it—does not the gentleman admit that the very next year they might assume to pay that debt?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly, they might.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then, if under the present condition of things they were allowed to resume full relations to the Union, they might the very next year assume the payment of that debt.

Mr. RAYMOND. Possibly they might.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well; I want the American people to understand this issue, and to have the opportunity to say, by amendment of the United States Constitution, whether that power shall not be expressly denied to every State of the Union.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not think the American people are at all liable to forget the fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, they might happen to be misled by the remark of the gentleman, that we should require those States simply to repudiate that debt.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not think they possibly could be, because that does not imply anything about the power of those States hereafter. I am simply speaking of what we have the right to require them to do.

There is another thing which we have the right to require; and that is the prohibition of slavery. We have the right to require them to do this, not only in their State constitutions, but in the Constitution of the United States. And we have required it, and it has been conceded. They have also conceded that Congress may make such laws as may be requisite to carry that prohibition into effect, which includes such legislation as may be required to secure for them protection of their civil and personal rights—their "right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." This I am sure the gentleman will concede to be a substantial guarantee—one placed beyond the power of any State to recall or repeal.

These things the President of the United States has deemed it his right, as Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States, to demand at the hands of the States which have been defeated in their attempt to separate themselves from the Union, as the condition of relaxing the bonds of military authority over them and restoring to them again the control of their local State affairs. He made these the conditions upon which they would be allowed, so far as his rightful authority extended, to resume the practical exercise of their functions as members of the Union, which had been suspended by their rebellion. He has done this in the exercise of his lawful authority as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, and was therefore responsible for the complete suppression of the rebellion and the restoration of peace, order, and loyalty in the regions where they have been for a time disturbed and overthrown. He has done it through agents, exercising a delegated and just authority—acting on his behalf and in his name—just as his military generals prescribed the terms and conditions of the rebel surrender in the field; and the fact that these concessions have been granted, affords at least a fair presumption that those who make them intend hereafter in good faith to abide by all the obligations and fulfill all the duties imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States. It may possibly be wise for us to dismiss all these concessions and all these guarantees given by eight million people, and sanctioned by the most solemn forms of legislation, as utterly worthless and insincere. But that is a matter upon which each individual must exercise his own discretion upon his own responsibility.

Mr. SPALDING. The gentleman from New York has stated that it is right and reasonable the demand should be made of the late rebel States that they should assent to an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting slavery in the Union, and also that it is right and reasonable we should require that they should repudiate all debts contracted in support of the rebellion. Now, I ask the gentleman whether there is any limit to the right to make these requisitions except the good judgment of Congress?

Mr. RAYMOND. I think there is.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask what limit, so that we may understand, and where does it belong? Who has the power to affix that limit?

Mr. RAYMOND. My impression is that these requisitions are made as a part of the terms of surrender which we have a right to demand at the hands of the defeated insurgents, and that it belongs, therefore, to the President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States to make them, and to fix the limit as to what they shall embrace.

Mr. BINGHAM. In regard to that constitutional amendment: without Congress moving first in the matter, and without their action, he would never have had the power at all to demand its ratification by any rebel State.

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly, there are many things which could not be done by the President without the action of Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. Congress is now making further provision that an amendment shall be made to the Constitution that no State shall pay any part of the rebel debt.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman is aware that it was not Congress but the President who required the rebel States to ratify the constitutional amendment as a condition of the resumption of their functions.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is an important question, and I beg leave to say that he would be a bold man who would dare to say that after the loyal States had maintained the supremacy of their Constitution, and more than three fourths of all the loyal States had so amended their Constitution, that their action was void without the consent of the rebel States, and that after their rebellion had been subdued by arms, the States in rebellion might not only repudiate the amendment, but of right might come into Congress to resist the enforcement of its humane provisions by just and needful laws. It was not within the power of the President or any other man on this earth rightfully to assert any such authority or power in the rebel States over the action of the loyal people of twenty-two out of the twenty-five loyal States. The President never said so and never meant to say so.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman concedes that the President has not said it—

Mr. BINGHAM. No, and he could not say it.

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not know that he ever proposed or wished to say it.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, but then there was nothing in the gentleman's remark.

Mr. RAYMOND. I understand that the Government, through the channel designated by law, the Secretary of State, when it was found that three fourths of the States had ratified the amendment, issued a proclamation to that effect, naming the States which had ratified it. There was nothing irregular, certainly, about that.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will note that the President made the requisition long before three fourths of the States had ratified the amendment.

Mr. RAYMOND. The President did it; Congress did not.

Mr. BINGHAM. What I meant to say was this: Congress imposed that obligation upon him backed by the power of the people, and they have a right again to impose like obligations upon him, and have a right to assume that he will cheerfully and faithfully obey their requirements.

Mr. RAYMOND. I am sorry the gentleman seems determined to get up an issue concerning the action, past or future, of the President upon this subject. I am not aware that I have given him any provocation for so doing.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will excuse me. I am sorry to see the gentleman assume that he alone represents the President. I make no issue with the President.

Mr. RAYMOND. I certainly have assumed nothing of the kind; and I am very much surprised to hear the gentleman ascribe to me anything of the sort. I said nothing about the action of the President except to state the facts. I raised no question as to his rights, or as to the power of Congress to impose any action upon him. I do not know that I gave the gentleman from Ohio the slightest occasion to assert here, with so much warmth as he has shown, the paramount power of Congress over the President. I raised no question and made no remark on the subject.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman made the remark here that I was trying to get up an issue with the President. When he said that, I replied, as I might very properly do, that I was surprised that the gentleman should assume to speak for the President.

Mr. RAYMOND. I did not assume, in any way whatever, anything of the kind.

Mr. BINGHAM. And I respectfully deny the gentleman's assertion that I seek to make an issue with the President.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONKLING. Inasmuch as my colleague has been very much interrupted, I ask that by unanimous consent his time be extended. [Cries of "Agreed!"]

No objection was made.

Mr. MORRILL. As the gentleman from New York evidently intended to reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] I hope he will be allowed to go on uninterruptedly.

Mr. RAYMOND. I am very much surprised to find myself involved in such a controversy. I did not rise to create or provoke controversy with any one upon this floor. I rose to express my own dissent from the views propounded here by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and if in anything I said after that, embodying my own opinions, I gave proper warrant for, I will not say attacks upon me, for I do not believe any such thing was meant, but for the questions propounded as to my position on this subject, I am very much surprised, but not the less glad of this opportunity of stating and explaining what it is. I cannot assent to the intimations thrown out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] that the President concurred in the views he had expressed, or that he had handed the whole subject of pacifying the States lately in rebellion, and of restoring the States to the practical exercise of their functions as members of the Union, to the hands of Congress. I can find no warrant in his message for believing that he designs thus to abandon duties which are evidently, in his judgment, devolved upon him as the Executive in the Government, and as Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States. On the contrary, I find him rehearsing, in clear and explicit language, the steps he has taken to restore the rightful energy of the General Government and the States. "To that end," he says,

"Provisional governors have been appointed for the States, conventions called, Governors elected, Legislatures assembled, and Senators and Representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. At the same time the courts of the United States, as far as could be done, have been reopened, so that the laws of the United States may be enforced through their agency. The blockade has been removed and the custom-houses reestablished in ports of entry, so that the revenue of the United States may be collected. The Post Office Department renews its ceaseless activity, and the General Government is thereby enabled to communicate promptly with its officers and agents. The courts bring security to persons and property; the opening of the ports invites the restoration of industry and commerce; the post office renews the facilities of social intercourse and of business."

He has exercised his power of pardon; he has invited the States lately in rebellion to participate in the ratification of the constitutional amendment securing the perpetual prohibition of slavery. "This done," he says,

"It will remain for the States, whose powers have been so long in abeyance, to resume their places in the two branches of the national Legislature, and thereby to complete the work of restoration. Here it is for you, fellow-citizens of the Senate, and for you, fellow-citizens of the House of Representatives, to judge, each of you for yourselves, of the elections, returns, and qualifications of your own members."

All but this has been done in the exercise of his functions and in the performance of his duties, as President of the United States, and as Commander-in-Chief of their armies. The admission of members of Congress, and the restoration of the judicial branch of the civil authority of the Government, are necessarily referred to the deliberations and action of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I am here to act with those who seek to complete the restoration of the Union, as I have acted with those through the last four years who have sought to maintain its integrity and prevent its destruction. I shall say no word and do no act and give no vote to recognize its division, or to postpone or disturb its rapidly-approaching harmony and peace. I have no right and no disposition to lay down rules by which others shall govern and guide their conduct; but for myself I shall endeavor to act upon this whole question in the broad and liberal temper which its importance demands. We are not conducting a controversy in a court of law. We are not seeking to enforce a remedy for private wrongs, nor to revenge or retaliate private griefs. We have great communities of men, permanent interests of great States, to deal with, and we are bound to deal with them in a large and liberal spirit. It may be for the welfare of this nation that we shall cherish toward the millions of our people lately in rebellion feelings of hatred and distrust; that we shall nurse the bitterness their infamous treason has naturally and justly engendered, and make that the basis of our future dealings with them. Possibly we may best teach them the lessons of liberty, by visiting upon them the worst excesses of despotism. Possibly they may best learn to practice justice toward others, to admire and emulate our republican institutions, by suffering at our hands the absolute rule we denounce in others. It may be best for us and for them that we discard, in all our dealings with them, all the obligations and requirements of the Constitution, and assert as the only law for them the unrestrained will of conquerors and masters.

I confess I do not sympathize with the sentiments or the opinions which would dictate such a course. I would exact of them all needed and all just guarantees for their future loyalty to the Constitution and laws of the United States. I would exact from them, or impose upon them through the constitutional legislation of Congress, and by enlarging and extending, if necessary, the scope and powers of the Freedmen's Bureau, proper care and protection for the helpless and friendless freedmen, so lately their slaves. I would exercise a rigid scrutiny into the character and loyalty of the men whom they may send to Congress, before I allowed them to participate in the high prerogative of legislating for the nation. But I would seek to allay rather than stimulate the animosities and hatred, however just they may be, to which the war has given rise. But for our own sake as well as for theirs I would not visit upon them a policy of confiscation which has been discarded in the policy and practical conduct of every civilized nation on the face of the globe.

I believe it important for us as well as for them that we should cultivate friendly relations with them, that we should seek the promotion of their interests as part and parcel of our own. We have been their enemies in war, in peace let us show ourselves their friends. Now, that slavery has been destroyed—that prolific source of all our alienations, all our hatreds, and all our disasters—there is nothing longer to make us foes. They have the same interests, the same hopes, the same aspirations that we have. They are one with us; we must share their sufferings and they will share our advancing prosperity. They have been punished as no community was ever punished before for the treason they have committed. I trust, sir, the day will come ere long when all traces of this great conflict will be effaced, except those which mark the blessings that follow in its train.

I hope and believe we shall soon see the day when the people of the southern States will show us, by evidences that we cannot mistake, that they have returned, in all sincerity and good faith, to their allegiance to the Union; that they intend to join henceforth with us in promoting its prosperity, in defending the banner of its glory, and in fighting the battles of democratic freedom, not only here, but where ever the issue may be forced upon our acceptance. I rejoice with heartfelt satisfaction that we have in these seats of power—in the executive department and in these halls of Congress—men who will coöperate for the attainment of these great and beneficent ends. I trust they will act with wisdom; I know they will act from no other motives than those of patriotism and love of their fellow-men.

Mr. SPALDING obtained the floor; and moved that the committee rise.

Mr. MORRILL. I would ask my friend from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] to add to his motion, "and that the resolutions adopted in committee be reported to the House."

Mr. JENCKES. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his motion for a few moments.

Mr. SPALDING. I will yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] for five minutes.

Mr. JENCKES. Mr. Chairman, I have regretted much that this debate was persisted in to-day. I regret still more that I have not had an opportunity to prepare myself to meet, as this committee should demand of any one who addresses it, the questions that have been suggested and partly argued here to-day by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND;] but I will ask the indulgence of the committee, and of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] to allow me to make a few statements.

I do not know from what source the gentleman from New York derives his knowledge of public law, or its applicability to the present condition of this country. But it seems to me that he has confounded questions of law and questions of fact, which should always be discriminated by those who have to act upon either or both questions.

The gentleman states, and properly, that every act or ordinance of secession was a nullity. Undoubtedly it was. Upon that question of law we do not disagree. But he seems to me to overlook entirely what was the state of facts from the time of the passage of the ordinances of secession until the time of the surrender of Lee's army. During that period what were the relations which all that territory—I will not use the term States, but all that territory—between the Potomac and the Rio Grande sustained to the Government of the United States? Who could see States there for any purpose for which legislation was required by the Constitution of the United States?

At the time of the passage of the ordinance of secession, States were organized there, in existence, in action, known to the Constitution and the constitutional authorities under it. But were they loyal? Did they obey the Constitution of the United States? This is a question that needs no answer other than that which is conveyed to every mind by the recollection of the last four years of war, with their expenditure of treasure and blood. Those States were not destroyed, in the technical language of the law—they simply died out. As their Governors passed out of office, as the terms of their Legislatures expired, who knew those facts? None but themselves. And yet, behind this grand cordon of armies, stretching from here to the Rio Grande, there were States in existence, organized as States, but States in rebellion, occupying the territory belonging to the people of the United States. They were not acting in concert with this Government, but against it. That, Mr. Chairman, is a matter of fact. My eyes are not dimmed or blinded by the parchment upon which constitutions or laws are written. I, like the men who carried the bayonets and planted the cannon, recognize the fact that was before us during all this time. There was a state of rebellion. There were in that part of our territory no States known to our Constitution or the laws that we enact, or the officers whose duty it is to enforce those laws.

I recognize, too, the next fact. Bear in mind, I am simply stating now what I conceive to be the facts. The question as to what may be the law can be reserved for discussion on another occasion. I recognize fully the duties of the Executive. And it was the duty of the President of the United States, as the head of the civil and military power of this great Republic—not "empire;" God forbid that this country should ever be so designated with applause or even with toleration—to beat down armed opposition to it, whether it came from a foreign Power or from domestic insurrection. That was the duty of the President; and he recognized it; and it was not the duty of any one in this Congress to gainsay it. It was written on the face of the Constitution that the President was to see that the laws should be faithfully executed, and the power of this Republic maintained; and he did so.

The next fact—the fact which seems to me to be the one most pertinent for consideration now—is that the military power which was opposed to this Government has been destroyed. It was the duty of the Executive to see that this was done, and to report to the Congress of the United States that it has been done. But what then? Then there comes the third question of fact, intimately connected with the last, and hardly separable from it, because it requires the immediate action of the Executive and of Congress. All the power that existed in the shape of confederated States behind rebel bayonets and fortifications has fallen to the earth. The territory which these States in rebellion occupied was the property of the people of the United States, and never could be taken from us. I hold it to be a question of public law, worthy of consideration by the representatives of the American people, by the President and the Administration generally, to ascertain what existed in the shape of civil constitutions and laws behind the military government that has been overthrown. I hesitate not to say, here or elsewhere, that the Executive of this Government has done his duty in this matter. All conquering nations when they overcome a rebellious people by overthrowing their military power, look, as did the Government of Great Britain when it had overcome the mutiny in India, to see what government of a civil kind has existed or may exist from custom among the people who are conquered.

I see no reason in this view to discriminate between the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the argument of the gentleman from Ohio and the argument of the gentleman from New York. It seems to me that if they will look at the particular questions which are now before us, and which require our action, the differences would be in terms and not in substance. The Executive is doing his duty. I do not wish to make a criticism of the manner in which it is done. That may be done when measures come from the executive department, but we have none now. I wish for myself as a member of the House to say that I wish to do my duty. I do not wish to be compromised by the speech or argument of the gentleman from New York, or the gentlemen from any other State on any question which may arise before Congress when no question is here for discussion or action. When the time to vote comes, when business is in hand, then we may speak and bind ourselves. I think that no one here can speak for a party, and that no one is bound by what has been said by the gentlemen who have spoken. And when the gentleman from New York says, looking at the question of reconstruction, that there resides in the Executive power to impose conditions upon the resumption of the rights of the States which have been in rebellion, I ask him where he finds that power—in the Constitution of the United States or in the public law, the law of war, the law of nations which overrides when it is once called into existence? Is it the power of carrying on foreign war or suppressing domestic insurrections?

Mr. SPALDING obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. MORRILL, who moved that the committee rise and report to the House the following resolutions which were before the committee:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session, together with the accompanying documents, as relates to the finances, to the receipts into the Treasury and the public expenditures, to the revision of the revenue, to the public debt, and the ways and means of supporting and meeting all the public liabilities of the Government, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Resolved, That so much of the President's message and accompanying documents as relates to the subject of reconstruction be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTWELL reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had directed him to report certain resolutions thereon.

Mr. MORRILL demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

FRENCH EXPOSITION.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I have received information from the State Department that it is necessary that the House should accept the invitation the French Government has extended to this Government, to take part in the exposition of the world's industry. If Congress accepts that invitation it should do it now, for when we return after the holidays it will be too late. I therefore move the adoption of the joint resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The joint resolution was read the first and second time.

The first clause of the joint resolution accepts the invitation tendered by the French Government to the United States to take part in the exposition, and approves the proceedings heretofore adopted by the Secretary of State in relation thereto, as set forth in his report accompanying the President's message.

The second clause appropriates the sum of — dollars for the payment of the expenses of freight and shipments of articles intended for exhibition, from the United States to France and return, and for the compensation of the principal agent of the exposition in the United States, at a salary of $3,000 a year, and of a committee of ten professional and scientific persons, at a salary of $1,000 a year each.

The third clause authorizes the employment of a clerical force by the general agent for the exposition in New York; and

The fourth clause authorizes the Secretary of State to prescribe such general regulations as may be proper concerning the conduct of business relating to the part to be taken by the United States in the exposition.

Mr. BANKS. If there is any objection to that clause of the resolution which makes an appropriation, I will waive it, but I beg that the House will permit action to be taken upon the remainder of the resolution. The first branch of the resolution accepts the invitation of the French Government and approves what the Secretary of State has done as set forth in his report to the President, which has been distributed, and which is referred to in the President's message. The other clause relates to the appointment of clerks, which are necessary to carry this object into effect.

If there be objection to that portion of the joint resolution containing an appropriation, I will not press action upon it; but I trust there will be no objection to immediate action on the other portion of the resolution, as that is necessary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of that clause of the resolution embracing an appropriation?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. BANKS. Then I withdraw that portion of it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Was not this subject referred to the Committee on Agriculture the other day on the motion of my colleague, [Mr. WESTWORTH?]

The SPEAKER. The message of the President and the letter of the Secretary of State were referred to the Committee on Agriculture. There was no disposition about to be made of them but to lay them upon the table. They should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the opinion of the Chair, but he entertained the first motion that was made, and they were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I know nothing about it. I only asked for information.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether there is anything in the resolution which will require us to make an appropriation hereafter?

Mr. BANKS. I have withdrawn the portion of the resolution containing an appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL. While I am quite willing that this invitation shall be accepted, I do not desire to preclude the House from any action it may deem proper hereafter as to the amount to be expended for agents or clerks.

Mr. BANKS. That question is not presented in the resolution. The last clause of the resolution simply authorizes the employment of clerks. They may be paid from some other fund, or a fund may be appropriated by Congress. The whole matter will be in the hands of Congress to approve and appropriate money for.

The SPEAKER. The provision in regard to the compensation of an agent was stricken out or withdrawn, objection being made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HARDING.] There is no appropriation in it now.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPLOSION AT THE ARSENAL.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas by the late explosion at the United States arsenal, in the District of Columbia, several Government employes were killed, and others terribly mutilated; and whereas it is alleged that one or more of the killed left large families in destitute circumstances: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be directed to inquire into the matter, and report to this House what relief, if any, should be rendered by the United States Government.

PENNSYLVANIA WAR CLAIM.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for expenses incurred for the pay of the soldiers of that State to repel the rebel invasion of 1863; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. HIGBY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend sections ninety-four and one hundred of an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, requested to inquire, first, as to the construction of the internal revenue act in respect to the assessment of the income tax, whether the regulations of the Department and action thereon in respect to deductions and allowances made are in accordance with the letter and intention of said act; second, whether the amount ($500) allowed by said act for the support of a family should not, in view of the greatly enhanced cost of living, be increased to $1,000.

PENNSYLVANIA WAR CLAIM—AGAIN.

Mr. SCHENCK. There was a motion adopted a few moments ago referring to the Committee on Appropriations a Pennsylvania claim for damages. I move to reconsider that reference with the view of sending the claim to the Committee of Claims. It is not to appropriate money under any law for an existing and acknowledged claim.

Mr. MYERS. I must oppose the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill provides for an appropriation of $900,000. This bill is the same that was reported by the Committee of Ways and Means at the last session of Congress, which passed the House, and failed in the Senate only for lack of time to reach it.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is precisely the reason for my motion, that this bill is an old acquaintance. I would rather submit it to some committee other than that of the Committee on Appropriations, even with the advantage of the counsels of the distinguished member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who is at the head of that committee. We know that it will probably fare very well in the Committee on Appropriations, as it did before in the Committee of Ways and Means. But I wish to have it investigated as a claim, and not as an appropriation, proceeding, as it were, upon the ground that we concede the propriety of making this payment to Pennsylvania. Let it first be looked into upon its merits again by this Congress, whatever former Congresses may have done. My reason for interfering was precisely because I did recognize in it an old acquaintance.

Mr. MYERS. I am sorry the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] objects to the bill because the last Congress saw fit, after full discussion, to pass it; and also, because the distinguished member from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is at the head of the Committee on Appropriations to which it is now referred.

Now I take it there can be no doubt that that committee will act as fairly upon this matter as any committee in this House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not say otherwise. I said I was not willing to send it to the Committee on Appropriations, even though it should have the advantage of the supervision of the chairman of that committee.

Mr. MYERS. That was very delicately said, I know, but it implied at the same time an insinuation that a Pennsylvania member would take better care of her interests than an Ohio member would. I have no doubt that Ohio is opposed to it, though the gentleman says Ohio has a claim just like this of Pennsylvania.

Now the facts are these: there was no other claim presented before this House during the last Congress by any other State, or anybody, for the pay of soldiers who fought in the service of the United States, and who were specially called out for that purpose.

There have been imaginary or fictitious claims for bounties and expenses incurred by various States; but this is no such claim. It was passed by the House at the last session after full discussion; and I doubt not, when it comes before the House again—when an appropriation shall be reported, as beyond doubt it will be reported—the sense of justice of this House will, with very little discussion, recognize the propriety of the appropriation for this claim.

I did not intend at this time to discuss the merits of the bill; and if there had been originally a motion to refer it to the Committee of Claims, I should not perhaps have objected to it; but I object now, because the bill has already been referred to an appropriate committee, and because the gentleman takes exception to it for a reason which I cannot fully understand.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask the gentleman, what is the nature of this claim?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. If it be in order, I will move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. MYERS] has not yielded the floor.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] inquires what is the nature of this claim. If the bill had been read, it would have explained itself. Its object is to reimburse the State of Pennsylvania for money paid to soldiers of that State who were called into the service of the United States to repel the invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania in 1863. The claim was audited in the Treasury Department. Every voucher was presented; and no objection was found to the bill. Let me say, too, with the greatest respect for the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that no other State presented in an authenticated form, ready for payment, any similar claim.

Mr. Speaker, I now make the motion which my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] desired to make, that the motion to reconsider submitted by the gentleman from Ohio be laid on the table.

On the motion of Mr. MYERS, there were, on a division—ayes 17, noes 34; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes past three o'clock p. m.) the House, pursuant to concurrent resolution, adjourned until Friday, January 5, at twelve o'clock m.

IN SENATE.

The Journal of Thursday, December 21, 1865, was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to law, copies of the accounts of the superintendents and agents having charge of the Creek, Chickasaw, Seminole, and Wichita tribes of Indians, for the second quarter of the year 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 28) in relation to the Industrial Exposition at Paris, France.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received and been requested to present to the Senate the memorial of J. W. Downey, of Petersburg, Virginia, setting forth in substance that the petitioner purchased of the late Dr. Mallory, of Norfolk, Virginia, a large and valuable farm about five miles from Fortress Monroe; that the price of the farm was about thirty thousand dollars, on which he paid about eighteen thousand dollars, and gave his obligations for the residue of the purchase price; that during the year 1862 or 1863 the Government took this farm for Government purposes, and dispossessed the petitioner; that about the month of March last the estate was sold under the confiscation act, and purchased by Mrs. Mallory, the widow of Dr. Mallory, of whom he made the original purchase, for the sum of $125,000. Mrs. Mallory, as the representative of her husband, holds the obligations of the petitioner, as he says, for the amount of about twelve thousand dollars, the residue of the purchase price, $18,000, having been paid; and he asks that such action may be taken as shall be fit and proper in the premises, he averring that the sons of Dr. Mallory, who will succeed under the present aspect of affairs to this estate, were officers in the confederate army during the war against the United States, that he himself was conscripted as a private into the rebel army for a short time last spring, but that he shed no blood in the service, and has taken all the oaths and demeaned himself like a peaceable citizen since the peace. This memorial, if there be no objection, will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The memorial was so referred.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of delegates of the colored people of the State of Alabama, assembled in convention at Mobile, and representing four hundred and thirty-six thousand nine hundred and thirty citizens of the United States. They set forth in detail the condition of the State where they reside, and call upon Congress to provide some indispensable means of making their freedom secure. In the course of their memorial, to which I shall simply call the attention of the Senate without reading, they say that in the city where they were assembled in convention several of their churches had been already burned to the ground by the torch of the incendiary, and threats are frequently made to continue the destruction of their property; the means of education for their children are secured to them only by the strong arm of the United States Government against the marked opposition of their white fellow-citizens, while throughout the whole State the right to participate in the franchises of freemen is denied as insulting to white men, and a respectful appeal addressed by some of their people to the late State convention was scornfully laid upon the table, some of the members even refusing to hear its reading. They also state that many of their people daily suffer almost every form of outrage and violence at the hands of whites; that in many parts of the State their people cannot safely leave the vicinity of their homes; they are knocked down and beaten by their white fellow-citizens without having offered any injury or insult as a cause; they are arrested and imprisoned upon false accusations; their money is extorted for their release, or they are condemned to imprisonment at hard labor; that many of their people are now in a condition of practical slavery, being compelled to serve their former owners without pay and to call them "master." They express a hope that Congress may be led to give them an opportunity to verify these statements by suitable testimony, and also further hope that Congress will grant them the protection they need. I move the reference of this important petition to the joint committee of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition from a committee of colored citizens of the State of Mississippi, in which, among other things, they set forth that, owing to the prejudice existing there, they have not been able to assemble in convention, but that they have done as well as they could, through a few of their number to set forth their grievances. They represent four hundred and thirty-seven thousand four hundred and four citizens of the United States, being a majority of nearly one hundred thousand in that State. These people, in a very brief petition, ask Congress to grant them the right of suffrage, that "we may," they say, "the more effectually prove our fidelity to the United States; as we have fought in favor of liberty, justice, and humanity, we wish to vote in favor of it and give our influence to the permanent establishment of pure republican institutions in these United States; and also that we may be in a position in a legal and peaceable way to protect ourselves in the enjoyment of those sacred rights which were pledged to us by the emancipation proclamation." I move that this petition be also referred to the joint committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have also a petition from colored citizens of Colorado—I do not know whether to call it yet a State, or a Territory—protesting against its recognition as a State of the Union, on account of a radical injustice in the constitution which has recently been formed. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a petition from citizens of Philadelphia, calling the attention of Congress to the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States, where it is declared that "the United States shall guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government," stating that in many States such a form of government does not exist, and proposing an amendment of the Constitution in order more effectually to carry out that provision. I offer a similar petition from members of the Union American church in Philadelphia; another one from citizens of Philadelphia; another one from citizens of Chester, Pennsylvania; another one from citizens of Springfield, Pennsylvania; another one from citizens of Norristown, Pennsylvania; another one from citizens of Columbia, Pennsylvania; another one from citizens of Penningtonville, Pennsylvania; another one from citizens of Media, Pennsylvania; all with the same prayer. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of James Larry, praying for compensation for losses sustained by him in consequence of the occupation of his property by the United States Army near Cold Harbor, Virginia, in June, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of F. A. Lewis, praying for compensation for property destroyed during the war by our armies; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Ohio, praying for an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to the effect that it may recognize Christianity; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer the petition of George B. Upton and George B. Upton, Jr., two eminent merchants of Boston, setting forth that a ship of theirs was seized and burned at sea by a cruiser known as the Alabama; that application has been made to the Department of State here to secure compensation for that outrage; that the application has been presented in London to the British Government, and there refused; wherefore, the petitioners say as follows:

"Believing, as your petitioners do, that nations are responsible which, through the want of neutrality laws, or of the proper construction and enforcement of such as do exist, give their support and sanction to piracies committed by vessels built, manned, and fitted out in their own ports, and thus allow their subjects to make war upon those of other nations in time of peace; and believing that no immediate compensation can be obtained by them from the British Government; knowing, moreover, they were in no wise in fault that their property was illegally destroyed, they can only, as a last resource, petition their own Government to pay them the value of their said ship Nora at the date of her destruction, and charge the same to the Government which permitted the outrage."

I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to present joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, adopted by the two bodies on the 21st of March, 1865, in which, in behalf of the people of that State, they express their earnest determination "to do everything in their power to support and sustain the national Administration in all measures for the vigorous prosecution of the existing war, the utter overthrow of armed rebellion, and the punishment of traitors," &c. I move that these resolutions may be printed and laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, asking for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of a ship-canal from Lake Superior to Lac La Belle, so as to form a safe harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of that State, asking for the repeal of the tax on the Holy Scriptures and school books; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the same State in relation to the unsafe condition of the Waugoshance lighthouse in the straits of Michilimackinac; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented the petition of John Burt, John Owen, and other business men of Detroit, Michigan, praying for an appropriation to construct a breakwater at Marquette Bay on Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Jesse Smith and others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the establishment of a tri-weekly mail route from Coopersville, in Ottawa county, to Squire's Ferry, in the county of Newaygo; which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the memorial of the widow of Major Thomas C. Fitzgibbon, of the fourteenth Michigan infantry, praying for relief; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAMSEY presented the memorial of the Mississippi River Improvement and Manufacturing Company of Minnesota, praying for an appropriation of the public lands of the United States to enable them to construct a lock or dam at or near the falls of St. Anthony, so as to enable boats navigating the Mississippi river to reach said falls; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POMEROY presented the memorial of Delphine P. Baker, representing that, on the recommendation of Government officers and others, she has purchased the property known as Point Lookout, situated at the junction of the Potomac river with Chesapeake bay, in the State of Maryland, with a view of donating it to the "National Military and Naval Asylum for the benefit of disabled soldiers and sailors," and that she will convey to that asylum the title to her property if the Government will donate to it the buildings thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented the petition of Benton Jones, a citizen of Wisconsin, praying to be reimbursed for moneys expended by him while in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, asking for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of a ship-canal from Sturgeon bay to Lake Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, in favor of dividing that State into two judicial districts, and to create a western judicial district; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of the Union League Club of the city of New York, praying Congress to appropriate and pay to the family of the late President Lincoln the salary for his full term of office; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Indiana, on the subject of foreign interference in Mexico, and the rule of neutral and belligerent rights; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a remonstrance from citizens of East Saginaw, Michigan, against any renewal of the reciprocity treaty. I ask that it may be read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of East Saginaw, Michigan, humbly but earnestly remonstrate against the renewal of the so-called reciprocity treaty with the British Provinces, and against the formation of any new treaty which shall grant special favors to the people of those Provinces not granted to other friendly nations, and not consistent with our system of raising a revenue by duties on imports and at the same time protecting our own industry.

Land and labor being lower in the Provinces than in the United States, they produce all products of the farm cheaper than we can, and so undersell our farmers. Stumpage being high in the United States and merely nominal in the Provinces, they can undersell our lumbermen on all the products of the forest. Any treaty, therefore, which allows the free exchange of the products of the farm and the forest sacrifices the interests of our farmers and lumbermen to those of the Provinces. It also sacrifices their rights, for since the price of almost everything they buy is enhanced by our general system of duties, to allow free trade in the products of their labor is injustice. They have the same right to protection as the manufacturer of cotton, woolen, iron, leather, and any other of the thousand articles which are protected. We bear with what patience we can the high taxes which the necessities of the nation have compelled. We shall feel these taxes to be oppressive if the Government neglects to moderate them by taxing the importation of those articles which come in competition with our own productions.

The high price of gold for a few years past has operated as a protection against the competition of the Provinces; but as gold falls this protection will cease, and any renewal of the reciprocity treaty would be disastrous.

The Provinces contend that their raw material should be admitted free of duty in exchange for the great concessions they make to our fishermen; but, in fact, they get their fish admitted into our market free of duty, and therefore our fishermen are opposed to the treaty.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask leave to present a memorial from one hundred and thirty-eight colored citizens of the city of Denver, in the Territory of Colorado, remonstrating against the admission of that Territory as a State into the Union, on the ground that great injustice has been done to the colored citizens there in the formation of the State constitution. They close their remonstrance by saying that they are taxed in that constitution without representation; they are even taxed to support public schools to educate the children of the white people, while they are excluded from those schools themselves. I ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred if there be no objection.

Mr. SUMNER. The other petition that I offered on this subject was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Territories will have nothing to do with the question of admitting the State of Colorado, I reckon.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, then, the petition that I presented should go to the same committee. I presumed it was an appropriate subject for the Committee on Territories.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Committee on Territories could consider the subject mentioned in this petition I would have it referred to them, but they cannot consider it. If the question of the admission of Colorado is considered at all, it must be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary; and it is to that committee that I ask the reference of this petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be ordered, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a memorial of the Sisters of Mercy of the city of Chicago, Illinois, praying for an appropriation of $20,000 for the enlargement of the Mercy Hospital in that city, have directed me to report adversely to the prayer of the memorialists, and to move the indefinite postponement of the memorial. In doing that I desire to say in behalf of these petitioners that the object for which they pray is highly meritorious, and they found their claim somewhat upon their services rendered to the soldiers during the war and aid given to soldiers as nurses in various parts of the United States. While the committee feel grateful and Congress undoubtedly feels grateful to these Sisters of Mercy for the kind assistance they have afforded the soldiers, we do not see any power that Congress has to grant their prayer, which is for the appropriation of $20,000 to enlarge their hospital.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the report?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will put the question on the report of the committee, which is that the further consideration of this petition be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. NESMITH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 58) granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Corvallis to the Aquama bay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and in making the motion I desire to call the attention of my excellent friend, the chairman of that committee, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] especially to this bill. It is now fourteen years since I first introduced it into this body; I have pressed it upon every Congress since; and I hope I may not press it in vain upon this Congress. It is time that this measure was accomplished. We ought to have the statutes of the United States reduced to a readable form in a single volume so that everybody can understand them. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 60) to enlarge the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As the bill contains provisions relating to the exercise of judicial functions by the officers and agents of the Freedmen's Bureau, under certain circumstances, in States which have been in insurrection and where civil rights are denied to portions of the inhabitants. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 61) to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights and furnish the means of their vindication; which was read twice by its title, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 62) to amend an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FOOT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 63) in relation to the office of Naval Judge Advocate General and of Solicitor of the Navy Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 9) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the protection of the national debt and the rejection of any rebel debt; which was read twice by its title, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONDITION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one hundred thousand copies of the late message of the President on the condition of the States late in rebellion, with the reports of Lieutenant General Grant and Major General Carl Schurz, and the letters annexed thereto, be printed for distribution.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNORS.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to the Senate copies of all papers or proclamations designating certain persons as provisional governors of States, and an account of the salary, if any, they may have been allowed, the oaths, if any, they may have taken before entering upon their duties, and if they did not take the oath of office prescribed by Congress for officers of the United States, then why they did not take the same; also all instructions with regard to their duties, and communications between them and the President, telegraphic or otherwise; also copies of any communications in his possession from such persons to any convention or Legislative Assembly in their respective States; also copies of any constitution, articles, or laws, purporting to have been adopted in such States, so far as the same affect the present condition of such States, and the rights of persons therein.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why adjourn till Tuesday?

Mr. RAMSEY. The House meets on Tuesday.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The House meets to-day. I really hope that there will be a disposition now, after this long recess, to turn our attention to the business that we have assembled to transact. It seems to me there is no occasion now for adjourning over until Tuesday.

Mr. RAMSEY. With the consent of the gentleman, I will amend my motion by substituting "Monday" for "Tuesday."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 28) in relation to the Industrial Exposition at Paris, France, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 5, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Thursday, December 21, was read and approved.

BENJAMIN G. HARRIS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of December 20, 1865, a copy of the record (including the testimony, &c.) of the court-martial for the trial of Hon. BENJAMIN G. HARRIS; which was referred to the Committee of Elections, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF SOLDIERS BY STATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House of December 13, 1865, a statement of the number of soldiers furnished by each State since April 1, 1861; which, on motion of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, was referred to the select committee on the war debts of the loyal States, and ordered to be printed.

VOLUNTEER AND REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, information as to the number of men and officers now in the regular and volunteer service of the Army of the United States, where employed, and the number of officers, volunteer and regular, receiving pay, who are unemployed or who are without commands corresponding to their rank; and also the estimated annual expense of the Army as now organized and distributed.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for information, addressed to one of the Executive Departments, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

NAVIGATION OF ROCK RIVER, ETC.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to improve the navigation of Rock river and the upper and lower rapids of the Mississippi river; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. PIKE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas by the navigation laws of the United States an American ship has no advantage in any particular over foreign ships in either American or foreign ports, but is obliged to compete with foreign shipping on terms of perfect equality.

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of drawbacks of duties paid on materials entering into the formation of such vessels, to the end that American ship-builders may compete with foreigners in this branch of industry more nearly upon an equal footing.

REGISTERING FOREIGN VESSELS.

Mr. PIKE also submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the statute of 1852 providing for registering foreign vessels; and also to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that no American vessel which surrendered her register and took foreign papers during the late war shall under any circumstances again receive an American register.

CAPTAIN JOHN C. CARTER.

Mr. SCOFIELD introduced a joint resolution providing for the restoration of Captain John C. Carter, United States Navy, to the active list; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ERIE HARBOR, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SCOTFIELD submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce is hereby instructed to inquire into the propriety of making an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Erie, in Pennsylvania, and report by bill or otherwise.

HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas it was the purpose of the Government, in the application of the homestead law to the arable portions of the public domain, not only to provide independent homes to the masses of the people at a nominal cost, but to prevent the monopoly of large landed estates in the hands of aristocrats and speculators, as anti-republican in tendency and antagonistic to the general prosperity and independence of the people, the States, and the nation; and whereas such monopolies have occurred, do now exist, and may be greatly extended in the southern sections of the country, while millions of the toiling masses are left landless, homeless, and houseless, except as eked out to them by heartless speculators and oppressive landlords; and whereas there are of the public domain, still undisposed of, in the State of Alabama about six million seven hundred thousand acres; in the State of Mississippi four million seven hundred thousand acres; in the State of Louisiana six million two hundred thousand acres; in the State of Arkansas nine million three hundred thousand acres; and in the State of Florida about twenty million acres, making in the said five States a total of about forty-six million nine hundred thousand acres; and whereas the true interests of the said States, and the people thereof, as well as of the nation at large, will be best promoted by the appropriation of said lands to the exclusive use of actual settlers and cultivators thereon: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they hereby are, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that all the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida shall be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead act, so called, and not otherwise; and also as to the propriety of limiting homesteads in said States to eighty acres or less; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. NIBLACK objected.

REPORT OF MAJOR GENERAL HOWARD.

Mr. ELIOT submitted the following resolution; which was read, and, under the rules, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the report of Major General Howard, Commissioner of the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands, be printed for the use of the bureau and distribution among its agents.

VETERAN RESERVE CORPS.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire and report to this House how many there are, including officers, in the Veteran Reserve corps at the present time, and whether they cannot be employed to advantage in the Freedmen's Bureau, or some other department of the military service, so that it would be injudicious to disband a body of men who have suffered so much, and whose services have been of such signal benefit to the country.

Mr. ANCONA. By the terms of that resolution it is directory on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I amend the resolution so as to provide that the Committee on Military Affairs shall inquire into the expediency, &c.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

CONDITION OF THE LATE REBELLIOUS STATES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, such documentary information relative to the condition of the States lately in rebellion against the United States which may be in his possession, including especially the reports of Lieutenant General Grant, Major Generals Howard and Schurz, and Hon. Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary are hereby instructed to inquire whether or not any further legislation is necessary for the suppression of the abominable system of polygamy which is now rampant in the Territory of Utah, and in case the committee find that the existing laws are insufficient, then inquire what further legislation is necessary for the speedy enforcement of the laws on that subject, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. STEVENS moved that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. HOGAN, by unanimous consent, offered the following preamble and resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged that many regiments, batteries, and detached bodies of volunteer troops have been mustered out of service at places far distant from the States in which they were mustered into the service; and whereas it is also alleged that said troops have been really in the military service until sent home and finally paid off, but that such only received pay up to the time of their muster-out instead of to the time when they were paid off and discharged, which is not deemed fair to those thus dealt with: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, requested to inquire into the facts of such case, and, if found true, to make such provision as may be proper for doing justice to such troops, and report by bill or otherwise.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. VOORHEES. I present the credentials of Hon. ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE as a member from the third district of the State of Louisiana. His former credentials were in some respects informal, and hence I submit these.

Mr. HOLMES, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill authorizing the issue of an American register to the schooner Forest Queen; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RELIEF OF VOLUNTEER OFFICERS.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and they are hereby, directed to inquire into the practicability and expediency of legislating for the relief of such officers of the volunteer service as during the first and second years of the war, through want of proper blanks, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, failed to make proper returns of ordnance, ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, camp and garrison equipment, or other public property, for which such officers were responsible, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

ADMINISTRATION OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SHELLEBARGER asked unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the House express its confidence in the fidelity to American rights and interests, as well as in the ability, wisdom, and moderation which, during the late war, characterized, and which still distinguishes, the administration of the foreign affairs of the Government, and this House hereby expresses its determination to continue, in all matters of executive control, to extend to the Executive in its administration of these affairs undiminished support; and that this is expressed in the confidence that the justice and moderation of this Government, and its non-interference in the political affairs of the other hemisphere will not only preserve the friendly relations which this Government so much desires to preserve with all foreign Governments, but will also speedily secure in the future, as it has in the past from the Governments of both hemispheres, "that system of non-interference and mutual abstinence from propaganda which is the true policy for the two hemispheres."

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, objected.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. COOK. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the terms of the second section of the article proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, by joint resolution approved February 1, 1865, confer upon Congress the power, by appropriate legislation, to secure to the people of the United States, of whatever race or color, the enjoyment of the rights of freemen, and to protect them from involuntary servitude, (except as a punishment for crime,) under whatever pretext such involuntary servitude may be imposed, and no Legislature of any State, in ratifying said amendment, can attach any condition to such ratification which will in any manner restrict or modify the effect of said section.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know whether I shall object to that resolution. I dislike to. But I rather think it is in conflict with the opinion of the Secretary of State. We all know that the second section is restraining.

Mr. VOORHEES. As I see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] wants it objected to, I will object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask the gentleman to allow me to offer a resolution.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will have an opportunity hereafter. I must insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the President's annual message, upon which Mr. SPALDING was entitled to the floor.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman: Our republican Government, after being exposed for three fourths of a century to the derisive doubts of carping critics abroad, and to the more insidious and cruel assaults of ambitious men at home, has, at length, "by wager of battle," vindicated its claim to be ranked as first among the nations in all the elements of stability and power.

This proud stand-point has not been reached without unparalleled sacrifices of blood and treasure on the part of our loyal fellow-citizens, but as the recuperative energies of the American people are known to be adequate to any probable exigencies, it is not so important that we dwell upon the havoc and cost of the war, from which we have so recently emerged, as that we try to profit by the injunction of Roman patriotism, and "take care that the Republic receive no detriment" therefrom.

To the end that we may approach the discharge of this duty with a just appreciation of the character of that Government which originated in the wisdom of our fathers, and is now sanctified by the blood of their sons, I propose to examine, in a somewhat cursory manner, that dogma of Mr. Calhoun which has been the prolific source of much of our intestine troubles—"that the Government of the United States is the Government of a community of States, and not the Government of a nation." Upon this political heresy hangs the whole claim of the "nullifier" and the "secessionist," which has plagued our country more than thirty years, and finally resulted in the most devastating war known to the history of mankind.

I am not wanting in respect for the transcendental abilities of the "great Carolinian," but it is painful to notice how "Wild ambition loves to slide, not stand,

And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land."

I propose to bring this notion of a copartnership of States to the touch-stone of the Constitution itself, as well as its contemporaneous history, and then leave to impartial minds the just conclusion.

As early as the 8th of April, 1787, James Madison, then a member of the Congress of the Confederation, sitting in New York, wrote to Governor Randolph, of Virginia, and thus succinctly gave his views in regard to the proper action to be taken by the Convention about to assemble in Philadelphia to revise the Articles of Confederation:

"I hold it for a fundamental point that an individual independence of the States is utterly irreconcilable with the idea of an aggregate sovereignty. I think, at the same time, that a consolidation of the States into one simple republic is not less unattainable than it would be inexpedient.

"Let it be tried, then, whether any middle ground can be taken which will at once support a due supremacy of the national authority and leave in force the local authorities, so far as they can be subordinately useful."

This letter of Mr. Madison very truly depicts the constitutional Government which he afterward assisted to frame, and which he administered for eight years as the immediate successor of Thomas Jefferson in the presidential chair.

The Constitutional Convention was organized at Philadelphia on Friday, the 25th day of May, 1787. On Wednesday, May 30, the Convention, while in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, adopted the following significant resolution with but one State (Connecticut) voting in the negative:

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this committee that a national Government ought to be established, consisting of a supreme legislative, judiciary, and executive."

This was the first resolution adopted by the Convention, and its author was Edmund Randolph, the gentleman to whom Mr. Madison had written the letter of the 8th of April to which allusion has been made.

It forms the first of a series of resolutions which were subsequently placed on file in the Department of State by President Washington.

The distinguished lawyer, Luther Martin, of Maryland, who was a member of the Convention, and who was strongly opposed to the adoption of the Constitution by the people, thus speaks of this resolution in his address to the Legislature of his own State:

"Nay, so far were the friends of the system from pretending that they meant it or considered it as a Federal system, that, on the question being proposed that a union of the States, merely Federal, ought to be the sole object of the exercise of the powers vested in the Convention, it was negatived by a majority of the members, and it was resolved, that a national Government ought to be formed."

Chief Justice Yates, of New York, in his notes of the secret debates of the Federal Convention, says, under date of Tuesday, May 29, 1787:

"His Excellency, Governor Randolph, a member from Virginia, got up, and in a long and elaborate speech showed the defects in the system of the present Federal Government as totally inadequate to the peace, safety, and security of the Confederation, and the absolute necessity of a more energetic Government."

"He closed these remarks with a set of resolutions, fifteen in number, which he proposed to the Convention for their adoption, and as leading principles whereon to form a new Government. He candidly confessed that they were not intended for a Federal Government. He meant a strong, consolidated Union, in which the idea of States should be nearly annihilated."

On the following day, and when said resolution in respect to a national Government was under consideration, in Committee of the Whole, "it was asked," says Justice Yates, "whether it was intended to annihilate State governments?" It was answered, "only so far as the powers intended to be granted to the new Government should clash with the States, when the latter were to yield."

Hon. Elbridge Gerry, in a letter to the Legislature of Massachusetts, assigning reasons for withholding his signature from the Constitution, says:

"It has few, if any, Federal features, but is rather a system of national Government."

Hon. John Jay, in an address to the people of the State of New York, urging the adoption of the Constitution, uses this remarkable language:

"The Convention concurred in opinion with the people, that a national Government, competent to every national object, was indispensably necessary."

I could multiply the declarations of eminent men who were upon the stage of action at the time the Constitution was framed and adopted, all to the same purport, but I feel the necessity of appropriating some portion of the hour allotted to me to the consideration of the evidence furnished by that instrument itself. It purports, on its face, to be a transfer of governmental power directly from the people to certain constituted authorities, involving the exercise of the higher, attributes of sovereignty. It gives "Congress" power "to make war and to make peace; to raise and support armies and navies; to coin money and regulate the value thereof; to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises." On the other hand, it effectually interdicts the exercise of powers, by the States respectively, that shall in anywise interfere with these and other high prerogatives of Congress.

For that purpose, it provides that—

"No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; grant letters of marque and reprisal; coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts."

Moreover, it provides that—

"No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

Also, that—

"No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign Power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay."

And, as if to make "assurance doubly sure," the second clause of the sixth article of the Constitution speaks this language perpetually:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Here I pause, and hail with respectful gratitude the enunciation made by the President in his annual message:

"The sovereignty of the States" is the language of the Confederacy, and not the language of the Constitution."

Thus far I have attempted to show that the framers of the Constitution contemplated the creation, "by the people of the United States," of a national Government, and not a Confederacy of States.

This national Government was approved and ratified by the people, assembled for the express purpose of considering it, in their respective State conventions.

I have next attempted to show that the national Government is invested with the exercise of many of the high powers incident to sovereignty, while the exercise of similar powers is expressly denied to the States.

It is doubtless true that both governments exercise important functions, and, in their respective spheres of action, each is independent of the other. But both are limited, and neither is "sovereign." If I be asked, "Where, then, may sovereignty, in our country, be found to reside?" I answer, unhesitatingly, IN THE PEOPLE. Look where you will, throughout all the ramifications of Government, State and National, and you will find it, happily, so ordered that all power, executive, legislative, and judicial, returns, periodically, to its only true source—THE PEOPLE.

The President of the United States, whose official position is infinitely more dignified than that of any potentate in Europe, is only an agent of the people for a term of years. And so of the Senators and Representatives in Congress; while the Justices of the Supreme Court are all the time "on their good behavior." I am made strong in this position by calling to my support the highest authority. Chief Justice Jay says in the address to which I have once alluded, as an argument for the adoption of the Constitution:

"The proposed Government is to be the Government of the people; all its officers are to be their officers, and to exercise no rights but such as the people commit to them. The Constitution only serves to point out that part of the people's business which they think proper, by it, to refer to the management of the persons therein designated. Those persons are to receive that business to manage, not for themselves and as their own, but as agents and overseers for the people, to whom they are constantly responsible, and by whom only they are to be appointed."

Hon. James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, too, in addressing the convention of his own State, assembled to deliberate on the propriety of adopting that Constitution, to the excellence of which, he had, by his consummate wisdom and virtue, contributed so largely, thus expatiated upon this branch of my subject:

"There necessarily exists in every Government a power from which there is no appeal; and which, for that reason, may be termed supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable. Where does this power reside?"

"Perhaps some politician who has not considered with sufficient accuracy our political systems, would answer that in our governments the supreme power was vested in the constitutions. This opinion approaches near to the truth, but does not reach it. The truth is that in our governments the supreme, absolute, and uncontrollable power remains in the people."

"As our constitutions are superior to our Legislatures, so the people are superior to our constitutions. Indeed, the superiority in this last instance is much greater, for the people possess over our constitutions control in act as well as right. In this Constitution, all authority is derived from the people."

And so the President very justly declares in his message:

"Our Government springs from and was made for the people; not the people for the Government. To them it owes allegiance; from them it must derive its courage, strength, and wisdom."

It has been claimed, however, that notwithstanding the General Government, in all national matters, is supreme in its authority, and although the individual States have not the shadow of a right to secede peaceably from the Union, yet, if any one or more States resort to armed force to accomplish that purpose, the strong arm of the national Executive is paralyzed; and for the reason that "the Constitution nowhere delegates to the General Government the power to declare and make war against a State."

I hold this objection to be puerile in the lowest degree. As well may the citizen of a State, when arraigned at the bar of the court of his county for the commission of a crime, demand an exhibition of the war power, on the page of the State constitution, before he can be subjected to punishment for his offense. The nation does not declare war against its dependencies; it, nevertheless, exerts sufficient force to restrain them, when they madly attempt to revolutionize the Government.

The true theory, however, is that the General Government, like the State government, acts upon the individual citizen, and it may always use the degree of force necessary to secure obedience to law, whether resistance be offered by one citizen, or all the citizens of a State, or the citizens of a dozen States combined.

It is often said, by the friends of the doctrine of "secession," that the Convention refused to insert in the Constitution a clause authorizing the exertion of "the force of the Union against any member of the same, failing to fulfill its duty under the articles thereof." It is doubtless true that such a resolution was offered in Convention, and that the same was, for wise reasons, indefinitely postponed. It is equally true that a proviso was offered, in Convention, to the third section of the third article of the Constitution, which defines the crime of treason. It was in these words:

"Provided, That no act or acts done by one or more of the States against the United States, or by any citizen of any one of the United States, under the authority of one or more of the said States, shall be deemed treason."

tion or punished as such; but in case of war being levied by one or more of the States against the United States, the conduct of each party toward the other, and their adherents respectively, shall be regulated by the laws of war and of nations."

This provision "was not adopted," says Mr. Martin, "and the consequence is that the State, and every one of its citizens who acts under its authority (in making war upon the Government of the nation) are guilty of a direct act of treason." (Elliot's Debates, vol. 1, page 382.)

I receive this construction of Mr. Martin as a correct exposition of the constitutional provision in respect to treason, with the understanding that the word State is used by him as synonymous with the words "all the citizens of a State," which is really the only true significance of that term when used in connection with moral responsibility.

This national Government, which it has been my endeavor to elucidate, was in operation seventy-two years, bringing "order out of chaos," and changing an impotent "Confederacy" into a great republican empire whose banner, illustrative of unity—"E pluribus unum"—floated in every breeze, and afforded protection to every citizen in every land. Under its benign influence, the bounds of dominion had been extended to the Pacific ocean, and the country had increased in wealth and population to an extent unparalleled in the annals of nations.

Over the heads of its citizens it had shed the blessings of peace and personal security; and overflowing prosperity was seen everywhere to abound.

"I look upon this country, with our institutions," said Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, in November, 1860, "as the Eden of the world—the Paradise of the universe." It was to break down and destroy this beneficent Government, to blight this earthly paradise, that the serpent of secession entered into the garden of our national prosperity.

On the 20th of December, 1860, an ordinance of secession was adopted by the delegates of the people of South Carolina, declaring that the Union then subsisting between that and other States, under the name of the United States of America, was thereby dissolved; and one of the distinguished actors in the treasonable work, had the impudence to exclaim:

"We have now pulled a temple down that has been built three quarters of a century. We must clear the rubbish away to reconstruct another."

In quick succession five other States followed the example of South Carolina; and in February, 1861, the much-vaunted southern confederacy was formed at Montgomery, in Alabama.

On the morning of the 12th of April, under orders from L. P. Walker, confederate secretary of war, the rebels at Charleston opened fire upon Fort Sumter, and thus inaugurated a civil war which, in four years, cost the nation half a million lives, and an amount of wealth beyond the measure of reasonable computation.

The people of eleven States had formally absolved themselves from all allegiance to the Government of the United States, and had made use of all their material resources to effect its full and final overthrow. They had marshaled mighty armies in the field. They had sent armed ships to prey upon the commerce of the country in distant seas. They had sent their emissaries, with torches, to burn the dwellings of loyal citizens, and with the seeds of pestilence to destroy their lives. They had resorted to starvation to thin the ranks of captive soldiers. In fine, they had used every means, practiced by civilized or barbarous nations, to break down and destroy the constitutional Government of the United States, and were only prevented from accomplishing their work by the heroic endurance and patriotic valor of our citizen soldiers. They had refused terms of pacification unless accompanied by what they claimed as a sine qua non—the acknowledged independence of the southern confederacy.

At length their armies were discomfited in the field and compelled to surrender. Their chief executive was captured and thrown into prison; and their "confederacy" was dissipated "like the baseless fabric of a vision." The fragmentary population of eleven revolted States, acknowledging their defeat in the ordeal of battle, but showing no signs of regret for their gigantic treason against the best rights of man, now unblushingly claim an immediate restoration to a full participation in the councils of the Republic. Their advocates insist that their ordinances of secession were nullities, and, consequently, "they were never out of the Union." Hence, their Senators and Representatives are entitled to seats in Congress, in an equal degree with those from States whose sons gave their lives to save the nation.

Another class of politicians claim that the rebellious communities of the South voluntarily abjured all allegiance to the United States, and, having set up and fought to maintain another and distinct government, they had ceased to exist as States in the American Union. Perhaps a middle ground may be entered upon, that will reconcile these extreme views without doing especial violence to either. There is obviously in our complex system of government a power that governs and a subordinate power that is the subject of government. The States, when in harmony with the Constitution and represented in Congress, may properly be called the governing power of the nation. The Territories and the District of Columbia are no less in "the Union" than the States just mentioned, but they form no part of the governing power of the nation; they are governed by the Congress. A community may be in the Union in one sense of the word and not in the Union in another and different sense. A State may be in the Union as the subject of government, when, by reason of its misconduct, it has forfeited its privileges as a part of the governing power. In this last sense it is not in the Union. I know not but the President means the same thing when he says—

"The States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired but not extinguished; their functions suspended, but not destroyed."

Indeed, it would be shocking to our sensibilities, to hear it soberly claimed that the rebel States, after abjuring all allegiance to the Government of the nation, and carrying on a furious war for its overthrow, had a constitutional right to appear in its halls of legislation, and take part in the enactment of its laws, by simply acknowledging their inability to contend with it in arms.

If a State once in the Union is always in the Union, as a branch of the governing power, how would it have operated if, while the Thirty-Eighth Congress was striving, in the face of a formidable opposition in its own body, to raise the necessary supplies to enable General Grant and his patriotic braves to "fight it out on the line" from the Rapidan to Richmond, Senators and Representatives had appeared from enough of the rebel States to overcome, by their votes, the patriotic majority in Congress? The bare statement of the question shows the utter absurdity of the proposition.

I now assume, for the sake of argument, that the President is correct when he takes the ground that "the vitality" of the rebellious States "is impaired, but not extinguished; their functions suspended, but not destroyed." Where does the Constitution of the United States lodge the power to prescribe an effective remedy for this impaired vitality, and to restore to healthy action these suspended functions? My learned friend from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] thinks it is lodged in the hands of the "President as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States." I maintain that it is given to the Congress of the United States by force of the last clause in the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, which provides that Congress shall have power—

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers [those already granted] and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

This clause vests the instrumentality by which all "implied powers" are called into action expressly in Congress, even such as may be necessary to carry into effect those expressly delegated to the President. In time of war, and when the life of the Republic was in danger, this high officer of the Government was, at times, necessarily in the exercise of dictatorial power. In time of peace, he can rightfully exercise no power unless it be expressly vested in him by the Constitution, or by act of Congress. Of this there can be no reasonable doubt. The discretionary powers of the Government were intended to be lodged in the members of Congress, who are responsible to the people of their respective States and districts, and to them alone, for the manner in which they discharge the solemn trust.

It is high time, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the United States should insist that the "ship of State" be overhauled and put in constitutional trim. She has been exposed to tempestuous gales and angry billows; but now, having weathered the storm of secession and strife, and being brought, by skillful pilots and a gallant crew, into a peaceful haven, it will be no more than an ordinary precaution to "sound the pumps."

I have great confidence in that self-taught statesman who now, to a great extent, wields the destinies of the American Republic; and I here make my humble protestation against the attempts of any man or set of men, in Congress or out of Congress, to place the majority of this House, with whom I feel it an honor to act, in an attitude of hostility to the President so long as he confines himself to the exercise of his own just prerogatives. Shall we, for slight causes, distrust him who, not unlike the seraph portrayed by Milton—

"Faithful found,
Among the faithless, faithful only he;
Among innumerable false, unmoved,
Unspaken, unselected, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal?"

Thus far I do believe he has most conscientiously followed in the footsteps of his martyred predecessor. Although I am decidedly of opinion that it would have been right and proper in calling the first legislative bodies into action, in the rebel States, to have used the suffrages of all loyal freemen, without respect to color, and to have rejected the votes of all who had participated in the war against the Government, I do not see but that a contrary precedent was established by Mr. Lincoln in his amnesty proclamation of December, 1863. So, also, the reconstruction bill passed by Congress in 1864, provided for the enrollment of "white male citizens" only, as voters.

In the matter of appointing provisional governors, and in advising the conventions of delegates, by them assembled, to abjure slavery and the rebel debt, I find no good cause for complaint. As to the ratification of the amendment to the United States Constitution, I am disposed to hold that the action of the so-called Legislatures of the rebel States, did "neither good nor harm." The amendment was fully ratified by three fourths of all the States represented in Congress, and acting in harmony with the Government, at the time the two-thirds vote was given in that body, and no additional sanctions were wanted, as none in fact could be given by assemblies of men having no share in the governing power of the nation. I regret exceedingly that the President did not wait for the action of Congress, which was being matured with all due respect to his high privileges as a coördinate branch of the Government, before he dismissed his provisional governors and turned over to men, lately dyed in the blood of our sons, the executive duties of the rebel States. But that is a matter of no vital importance so long as a portion of our Army remains to guard the lives of Union men.

It remains to be seen whether now, when confessedly the time has arrived when the war power is to be laid aside and the civil power is to resume its functions, the Congress of the United States is to be respected as the depository of "all legislative powers" granted by the people in the Constitution we have sworn to uphold. It is not only the privilege but the constitutional duty of the President "to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and to recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient, from time to time." But the power "to admit new States into this Union;" "to guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of Government, and to protect each of them against invasion and domestic violence;" "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States;" "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over" the District of Columbia; "to make rules concerning captures on land and water;" these, and all similar powers, express or implied, belong to the Congress exclusively.

It has been strangely enough suggested that the President would seek to control the action of Congress in this great matter of restoring the revolted States to their original status in the Union, by withholding executive patronage from such Senators and Representatives as could not conscientiously fall in with his favorite policy. I respectfully beg pardon of the President and of the public for stating so scandalous a rumor upon this floor. I pronounce it as false as "secession" itself, and I find for the scandal no tangible authority except the following article, which I cut from the Newbern (North Carolina) Times of December 16, 1865:

"FUTURE HOPES.—The hope is expressed with all diffidence, still there is ground for the hope, that our future prospects for admission into full fellowship with the heretofore loyal States are growing brighter. The stand taken by President Johnson in reference to reconstruction is being fully maintained by that patriotic officer, and not even all the combined forces of radicalism have been able as yet to move him. Like a great rock he has withstood the shock of the angry waves of opposition, and he stands proudly erect to meet them again.

"There is evidence that the enemies of the conquered South are getting a little shaky. A sort of 'Stephen Hopkins' tremor is coming over them, for they have counted more upon their own strength than that of the national Executive. They are beginning to remember once more that the President of the United States has the appointing right as well as the veto power, and that the warmest friend of a radical Congressman may lose his little sinecure of an office whenever the President so wills. Patronage is a big thing—a fact fully recognized by the ultraists—but in their greed for the full control of it they have overlooked some of the little particles which have a great deal to do with the grand aggregate.

"We repeat there are brighter prospects ahead than events of the past had permitted the South to hope for. It is even possible that conservative influences will so far prevail as to bring about total reconstruction before the final adjournment of this Congress."

Thus the southern traitors, not content with ascribing to the President such base motives to action as would bring him beneath the contempt of the loyal masses who elected him, most impudently and arrogantly attempt to appropriate him to their own vile purposes—

"Like gypsies, lest the stolen brat be known, Defacing first, then claiming for his own."

I know not if the President has any fixed policy in regard to the guarantees which the loyal people of this country may exact before the States in revolt shall be restored to all the functions of governing States in the Union. Sure I am, he can have no desire to throw obstacles in the way of the deliberate and well-matured action of Congress, which may well be presumed to reflect the wishes of a great majority of the people. I have, at this time, no means of determining for myself what course will be taken by Congress, but I will venture to say that the substance of the following propositions, if adopted, will be satisfactory to the bulk of my constituents in Ohio:

1. Extend a qualified right of suffrage to the freedmen in the District of Columbia.
2. Amend the Constitution of the United States in respect to the apportionment of Representatives and direct taxes among the several States of the Union, in such manner, that "people of color" shall not be counted with the population making up the ratio, except it be in States where they are permitted to exercise the elective franchise.
3. Insert a provision in the Constitution prohibiting "nullification" and "secession."
4. Insert a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the repudiation of the national debt, and also prohibiting the assumption by Congress of the rebel debt.

5. Provide in the Constitution that no person, who has, at any time, taken up arms against the United States, shall ever be admitted to a seat in the Senate or House of Representatives in Congress.

Let these guarantees be given to loyalty, and I will try to forgive—I can never forget—the injuries received by my country from TRAITORS.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. STEVENS, (at twenty-five minutes after one o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 8, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 13, 1865, further information in relation to persons in the employ of that Department who have not taken the oath prescribed by law; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUFFRAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the mayor of the city of Washington; which was read by the Secretary, as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, D. C.,
MAYOR'S OFFICE, CITY HALL,
January 6, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor, in compliance with an act of the Councils of this city, approved December 16, 1865, to transmit through you to the Senate of the United States the result of the election held on Thursday, 21st December, "to ascertain the opinion of the people of Washington on the question of negro suffrage," at which the vote was 6,626, segregated as follows:

Against negro suffrage.....	6,591
For negro suffrage.....	35

Majority against negro suffrage.....	6,556
--------------------------------------	-------

This vote, the largest with but two exceptions ever polled in this city, conclusively shows the unanimity of sentiment of the people of Washington in opposition to the extension of the right of suffrage to that class; and that its integrity may be properly appreciated by the Senate, I give the aggregate of the vote cast at the five elections immediately preceding for mayor:

1856.....	5,840
1858.....	6,813
1860.....	6,975
1862.....	4,816
1864.....	5,720

No others, in addition to this minority of thirty-five, are to be found in this community who favor the extension of the right of suffrage to the class and in the manner proposed, excepting those who have already memorialized the Senate in its favor, and who, with but little association, less sympathy, and no community of interest or affinity with the citizens of Washington, receive here from the General Government temporary employment, and having at the national capital a residence limited only to the duration of a presidential term, claim and invariably exercise the elective franchise elsewhere.

The people of this city, claiming an independence of thought and the right to express it, have thus given a grave and deliberate utterance in an unexaggerated way to their opinion and feeling on this subject.

This unparalleled unanimity of sentiment which pervades all classes of this community in opposition to the extension of the right of suffrage to that class engenders an earnest hope that Congress, in according to this expression of their wishes the respect and consideration they would as individual members yield to those whom they immediately represent, would abstain from the exercise of its absolute power, and so avert an impending future apparently so objectionable to those over whom, by the fundamental law of the land, they have "exclusive jurisdiction."

With much respect, I am, sir, your own and the Senate's obedient servant.

RICHARD WALLACH, Mayor.

Hon. L. F. S. FOSTER,

President of the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What order will the Senate take upon the communication?

Mr. CLARK. Let it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest that the committee have had that subject under consideration and have already reported. Perhaps, therefore, the paper had better lie on the table. I move that it be ordered to lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOOT presented the petition of Peter Anderson, praying that he may be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLARK presented a memorial of the faculty and students of the medical department of Georgetown college, in the District of Columbia, praying that the same facilities may be furnished to the faculty and students of the medical colleges in the District of Columbia for procuring bodies for dissection that are now furnished by the laws of the several States to medical colleges within their limits; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I rise to present a memorial of a company incorporated under the laws of the State of New York by the name of the "Institute of Reward for Orphans of Patriots," of which Professor Horace Webster is President; and Frederick De Peyster, Esq., General Prosper M. Wetmore, Moses M. Vail, Esq., Dr. Edmund Fowler, E. P. Whitmore, Esq., and Rev. S. B. Bell, are Vice Presidents; Arthur F. Willmarth, Treasurer; and William A. Hoeber, Recording Secretary; and Dr. David P. Holton, Corresponding Secretary. The memorial sets forth that the organization is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York for the purpose of educating orphan children of patriots who had given up their lives in the war for the Union; and they now ask Congress to extend to them some aid in order to educate the orphan children of Indians who have also fought in the war for the Union. This memorial comes from gentlemen of the very highest standing; Mr. Webster, the president of the institute, is at the head of the Free Academy in the city of New York, a gentleman of the very highest intelligence and standing, and in whose judgment I have as great confidence as in the judgment of any man living. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of William Bell and John Hughes, praying for the issuance of an American register for the ship Patrick Henry; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, praying for the passage of a law to exempt northern creditors from the operation of southern State statutes of limitation for a certain period. These memorialists represent that at the outbreak of the late civil war the merchants of the city of New York held claims to a large amount against citizens of the southern States for money loaned, and for goods sold and delivered. It is believed that the aggregate amount of these claims did not at the date specified fall short of $150,000,000; that only a small portion of the amount has since been liquidated, and a large proportion of the residue has been, or soon will be, barred by the operation of the statutes of limitation. In the opinion of the memorialists, statutes of limitation to suits on contracts are reconcilable with justice only on the supposition that the parties have had an opportunity to enforce their claims through the usual courts of law; and inasmuch as during the late civil war it has been impossible for loyal creditors to take measures to collect their debts in the southern States by any civil proceedings whatever, justice requires that all the period of the rebellion should be excepted from the time fixed for the limitations of actions in those States. Such is the substance of this memorial. It relates to a matter of considerable importance, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented a petition of non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates who have been disabled in the service of the United States, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. COWAN. I presented a few days since a protest and papers in relation to the election of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON.] As the committees were not then organized, they were laid upon the table for the time being. I rise to present the credentials of Mr. RANDALL HUNT, who appears by the certificate of the Governor of Louisiana to have been elected one of the Senators from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1865. ing the districts of Arizona and southern California to suffer no arms or munitions of war to be exported over the frontier; whether this discrimination is a breach of our neutrality toward our sister republic of Mexico; and whether the Government has taken any action in the premises.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the joint committee on reconstruction be allowed to appoint a short-hand writer to act as clerk of that committee, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The motion must be made in one House or the other, and it may as well be made here.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSIAH O. ARMES.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Josiah O. Armes.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 16) for the relief of Josiah O. Armes was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Josiah O. Armes the sum of $9,500 in full for damages sustained by him in consequence of the burning of his buildings and the destruction of his property at Annandale, Fairfax county, Virginia, by the United States troops.

Mr. CLARK. This is the same bill (or a bill in like words and for a like amount) that passed the Senate at the last session, and which failed to become a law by reason of a mistake of the engrossing clerks. The bill passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, but by a mistake was not properly engrossed, and failed to receive the signature of the proper officers of the two Houses and the President.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER stated that the resolution called for executive information, and if objected to must, under the rule, lie over for one day.

Mr. BLAINE objected; but afterward withdrew his objection.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 34, noes 16; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. SMITH and UPSON.

The House was again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 32.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORED VOLUNTEERS.

Whereas the twenty-fourth section of the act of Congress of the 24th February, 1864, requires that "the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission in each of the slave States represented in Congress, charged to award to each loyal person to whom a colored volunteer may owe service, a just compensation, not exceeding $300 for each such colored volunteer, payable out of the fund derived from commutation;" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War inform this House whether he has appointed said commission in any of the States referred to; and, if so, in which of them; and in which State, if any, he has failed to make said appointment, and the cause of such failure; and that he also inform this House the amount of said commutation fund on the said 24th of February, 1864, and what disposition, if any, has since been made of said fund in whole or in part; and what amount of said fund now remains on hand and subject to the provisions of the act aforesaid.

Mr. DEMING objected, and under the rules the resolution was laid over.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I rise to a question of privilege. By referring to the Globe of December 20, I find that on the vote on the bill introduced by the Committee on Commerce, to regulate the commerce between the States, I am recorded as voting in the negative. I was not in my seat at the time the question came up, and I am quite sure that you, Mr. Speaker, will recollect that heretofore, when a question similar to the one involved in that bill came before the House, I not only voted in favor of it but discussed the question, and I have seen no reason to change my mind. I am quite unwilling that it should go before my constituents that I have now voted against a bill of which I have always been in favor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Journal does not give the gentleman's name as voting on either side.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I only speak as far as the Globe is concerned. I presume the clerks of the House are correct, as they always are. I am not willing to have my name go out to the country as having voted against a bill which every true man ought to vote for.

The SPEAKER. Corrections of the Globe are not questions of privilege. Corrections of the Journal come under that head.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. WELKER offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act granting pensions to disabled soldiers serving in the Union Army in the late rebellion as to give pensions to all soldiers who have been or may be permanently injured or disabled by accidents on their way home by the usually traveled route after their discharge, and report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Is it in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not after the previous question is seconded.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I would like to have the resolution amended so as to include sailors.

Mr. WELKER. I accept the amendment.

The main question was then ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

ENLARGING THE HARBOR OF BALTIMORE.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of deepening and widening the harbor of Baltimore, and of rendering the ship channel navigable for vessels of the largest tonnage, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. ANCONA offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be requested to inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the redemption of mutilated, defaced, and worn out fractional currency by the United States internal revenue collectors, or other financial agents of the Government in the several collection districts of the country.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

BOUNTIES TO VOLUNTEERS OF 1861.

Mr. MILLER offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that all volunteers who entered the Army of the United States in the year 1861, and faithfully served therein, should be paid a bounty equal to the highest sum given by any act of Congress to those who subsequently enlisted.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the gentleman to allow it to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROOKS. I would inquire of the gentleman, what probable amount will be paid out of the Treasury under such a provision?

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate, which is not now in order.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will then go over, under the rules.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand that the amount paid will be $634,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the previous question, and move that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGAL-TENDER NATIONAL BANK NOTES.

Mr. STROUSE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the notes issued to and hereafter to be issued to the national banks of the United States legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, except duties on imports, and thus place the national bank notes upon an equality with the Treasury notes, generally known as greenbacks; the said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of instructing the Secretary of the Navy to accept from the city of Philadelphia, on behalf of the Government, the title to League Island, and to provide for the sale of the site of the existing navy-yard at Philadelphia as soon as it can be abolished consistently with the public good, and to report by bill or otherwise.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. O'NEILL introduced a bill granting bounty and additional bounty to soldiers, seamen, and marines, in the war of 1861, or their heirs; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MILITARY FORCE IN SECEDING STATES.

Mr. WILLIAMS offered the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That in order to the maintenance of the national authority and the protection of the loyal citizens of the seceding States, it is the sense of this House that the military forces of the Government should not be withdrawn from those States until the two Houses of Congress shall have ascertained and declared their further presence there no longer necessary.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. NIBLACK moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay the resolution on the table—ayes 28, noes 75.

Mr. DAWSON demanded the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 27, not voting 61; as follows:

During the roll-call,

Mr. DRIGGS said, regretting the introduction of the resolution, I vote aye.

Mr. MARSHALL said, my colleague, Mr. THORNTON, has been called home, and is not yet in his seat. If he were here he would doubtless vote against this attempt by the House to usurp the duties of the Executive.

The result of the vote having been announced, Mr. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to authorize the issue of bonds for funding the obligations of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time; recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

The morning hour having expired, the Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of December 21, 1865, a report of the amount expended in the permanent establishment of the Naval Academy at Annapolis; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE TEST OATH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 5, 1866.

SIR: I herewith transmit a copy of a letter recently received from the assessor of internal revenue for the third district of Georgia, and request attention to its contents, as showing the difficulties which now embarrass the revenue service in consequence of the oath required of office-holders.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. S. COLFAX,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRINNELL. I desire to have the accompanying letter read.

Mr. STEVENS. We all know what it is. I do not think it ought to be read.

Mr. BROOKS. Let it be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

ASSESSOR'S OFFICE, U. S. INTERNAL REVENUE,
THIRD DISTRICT OF GEORGIA,
Augusta, December 20, 1865.

SIR: I am constrained to write you in relation to the repeal or modification of the test oath so far as it relates to the internal revenue officers, at least the assistant assessors in southern States. I have labored assiduously to find competent men, who could take the oath, for assessors; and have to report that I have failed to find any such, except in a single instance, in my district, comprising twenty-three of the most populous counties of the State of Georgia.

I have organized my district by allowing the assistants to take the oath of office and allegiance, and proceed to the discharge of their duties, trusting to Congress to provide for their payment as directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Many of these men are very much reduced in circumstances by the war, and stand in imperative need of their pay in order to provide for their families. Indeed, some of them will be compelled soon to resign their places in order to engage in some business that will yield them ready money on which to live. I am satisfied that unless something is done in this matter immediately, I shall be unable to assess the tax in my district.

If Congress would so modify the oath as far as it relates to officers of the internal revenue and Post Office Departments, down here, I am sure it would be regarded everywhere and prove to be a patriotic measure, one in which both North and South are equally interested. Unless something of the kind is done, I am at a loss to know what we are to do.

Respectfully,

J. BOWLE,

Assessor Third District of Georgia.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move that this communication, with the accompanying paper, be printed and referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] amend his motion so as to instruct the committee to report within thirty days?

Mr. SCOFIELD. I think that will not be done. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. SCOFIELD's motion was then agreed to:

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVENUE ON CUSTOM-WORK.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the revenue law as to exempt within certain limits the custom-work of mechanics, such as blacksmiths, shoe and boot makers, saddlers, harness makers, wagon makers, tailors, tin-smiths, tanners, carriers, and others from the payment of internal revenue taxes.

BRANCH MINT IN IDAHO.

Mr. HOLBROOK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas the recent discoveries of the vast and extensive mineral fields of the interior, which the patient and laborious toil of miners has developed, demonstrate that the deposits of precious metals in the Territory of Idaho are unsurpassed in richness and extent by those of any other country, and which it will take the continued labor of ages to exhaust; and whereas the unnecessary delay, expense, and danger attending the transportation of said precious metals a great distance for the purpose of coinage would be entirely removed by the construction of a United States branch mint in the immediate vicinity of this great mineral center, would tend to a rapid and full development of the mineral resources, and be of incalculable advantage and benefit to the inhabitants of that section of our country as well as a source of revenue to the Government: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining be instructed to inquire into the expediency of changing the location of the United States branch mint from the Dalles, in the State of Oregon, to Boise City, in the Territory of Idaho; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

REDEMPTION OF FRACTIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution providing for the redemption of mutilated, defaced, and worn-out fractional currency in the general collection districts of the country; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PUBLIC LANDS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Whereas there are of the public domain still undisposed of, in the State of Alabama about six million seven hundred thousand acres; in the State of Mississippi four million seven hundred thousand acres; in the State of Louisiana six million two hundred thousand acres; in the State of Arkansas nine million three hundred thousand acres; and in the State of Florida about twenty million acres, making in the said five States a total of about forty-six million nine hundred thousand acres; and whereas the true interests of the said States, and the people thereof, as well as of the nation at large, will be best promoted by the appropriation of said lands to the exclusive use of actual settlers and cultivators thereon: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they hereby are, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by law that all the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida shall be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead act, so called, and not otherwise; and also as to the propriety of limiting homesteads in said States to eighty acres or less; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object.

REDUCTION OF RAILROAD RATES, ETC.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be instructed to inquire and report, by bill or otherwise, whether the unreasonable and oppressively high rates now exacted for transportation of passengers and freights by railroad and other transportation agents, may not be reduced and removed by so graduating a tax upon fares and rates that low and reasonable rates shall be encouraged and high rates suppressed; and whether, by this or other means, relief may not be promptly afforded to the suffering farmers and others whose crops are more than one half consumed, and the profits of agriculture entirely swallowed, by a combination among transportation companies to exact exorbitant charges for transportation, &c.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object.

CLAIMS AGAINST UNITED STATES FOR DAMAGES.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to inquire into the expediency of reporting an act conferring on the Government of the United States the benefit of a statute of limitations providing that after the lapse of six years from the time the injury was sustained no suit shall be brought before the Court of Claims, nor any claim be entertained by Congress, for any damages, or for compensation for or on account of the same.

CAPTURE OF JOHN MORGAN.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire what further legislation, if any, is necessary to authorize the payment of claims for horses and other property impressed by the military authorities of the United States, for use by them in the pursuit and capture of John Morgan and his band of insurgents, during their raid through the States of Indiana and Ohio, in July, 1863; with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

TRIAL OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, As the deliberate judgment of this House, that the speedy trial of Jefferson Davis for the crime of treason, and his prompt execution when found guilty, are imperatively demanded by the people of the United States in order that treason may be adequately branded by the nation, traitors made infamous, and the repetition of their crime, as far as possible, be prevented.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

SURRENDER OF THE SHENANDOAH.

Mr. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, what order, if any, he has taken in relation to the reported surrender by the British Government of the Anglo-rebel pirate vessel called the Shenandoah, fitted out in its own harbors, with its own capital and its own crews, and alleged to have been sailing under its own flag, to prey upon American commerce; and further, to communicate any correspondence that may have taken place between the two Governments, or with the diplomatic or consular agents of this nation, in relation thereto.

COLORS SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ROLLINS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas in the District of Columbia rents are excessively high, and the means of educating the children of colored citizens are extremely limited: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of causing to be imposed a special tax of twenty per cent. upon all rentals of buildings which exceed $600 annually, the fund so raised to be applied under the supervision of a board of commissioners, independent of the existing local District authorities, for the support of common schools for the education of the children of the colored citizens of the District; said committee to report by bill or otherwise at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER stated that a motion to suspend the rules was now pending, made before the holidays by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WARD] for the introduction of a resolution relative to polygamy.

REPORT OF GENERAL CARL SCHURZ.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifty thousand copies of the report of General Carl Schurz on the condition of the late rebellious States be printed for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. ANCONA. I should like to amend that by including the report of Lieut. General Grant.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand the House has already taken action on that subject.

Mr. ANCONA. We have taken no action except to call for them.

Mr. CULLOM. I accept the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman also to provide for the printing of the accompanying documents.

Mr. CULLOM. I also accept that amendment.

The resolution as amended was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

INDIAN TRIBES.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask the unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas the time has arrived when the interests of the country, and the protection of the lives and property of many of our people, demand the removal of the various Indian tribes from the rich mineral lands of our northwestern Territories, and their permanent location in a section of country where they can remain unmolested, and subsist upon the game of the prairies; and whereas it is of the greatest importance to both our white population and the Indians that such location for their future abode be as remote as possible from the mining districts and great public thoroughfares of the Northwest, and at the same time in a section of country that is adapted to agriculture, and affords the greatest natural resources for the support of an Indian population, and where ample protection to the Indians and white population of our frontiers can be afforded by the Government:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing by treaty for the early removal of all the Sioux tribes (except the Yanktons) together with the Gros Ventres, Mandans, Arikarees, Assiniboines, and Crows from the mineral lands of the northwestern Territories, and for their location upon that part of Dakota and Montana Territories lying within the following described boundaries, namely: beginning on the line which separates the United States from the British possessions on the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, thence south to the forty-fifth parallel of north latitude, thence east to the Medicine Knob river, thence down said river to the Missouri river, thence up the left bank of the Missouri river to Plum island, thence west to the western boundary line of Dakota Territory to the point where it is intersected by the south line of Montana Territory, thence west along the south line of Montana Territory to Powder river, thence down Powder river to the Yellowstone river, thence down the Yellowstone river to the Missouri river, thence up the left bank of the Missouri river to the one hundred and sixth degree of west longitude, thence north to the line of the British possessions, thence east to the place of beginning; and for the purpose of making said treaty the sum of $150,000 be appropriated; and until such a treaty is made and ratified, and the said Indians shall be removed and located upon the above-described territory, no more moneys shall be paid to them or expended for their benefit by the United States, other than to redeem the pledges (if any were made) by the commissioners sent to treat with said Indians in 1865.

Mr. KELLEY. I object to the gentleman's preamble. It makes allegations to which I do not agree. If he will abandon the preamble I will not object to a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I will modify my resolution so as to omit the preamble.

The resolution as modified was adopted.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the report of Major General Howard, Commissioner of the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands, be printed for the use of the bureau and distributed among its agents.

The resolution was adopted.

HARBORS, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, a report on the present condition of the harbors of the United States, where public works have been built, &c.; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, in answer to a resolution of the House relative to enemy's property taken by the Government, &c.; which, on motion of Mr. STEVENS, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POLYGAMY.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be on the motion to suspend the rules made by Mr. WARD for the introduction of the following resolution:

Whereas certain inhabitants of the Territory of Utah, in violation of the laws of the United States, have been and still are sustaining the abominable system of polygamy, and the numbers who practice it and the crime and abomination consequent thereon are largely on the increase; and whereas for reasons not understood the law against polygamy has not been enforced, and in the judgment of this House this great and remaining barbarism of our age and country should be swept (like the twin system of slavery) from the Territories of the Republic, and that means adequate to that end should be adopted: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire and ascertain what means, civil or military, may lawfully be resorted to to effectually eradicate this evil from the land, and what legislation is needed, if any, to effect that object, and what reasons exist why the laws against polygamy have not been executed; and also to ascertain whether the United States officials in said Territory are seeking to enforce the laws, and to inquire into their conduct generally so far as relates to the discharge of their public duties in relation to this system, and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The rules were suspended, and the resolution was adopted.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the President's message, on which the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. If there be no objection, I will yield the floor to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. LATHAM,] who desires to proceed to-day.

There was no objection.

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of the important issues now under consideration, it may be well for us to recur briefly to first principles; and I feel gratified that the honorable and learned gentleman from Ohio has given us so lucid and able an exposition of the polity of our Government. The people of the United States constitute a nationality; the Government the machinery by which or through which they exercise the powers of the national sovereignty. The operations of this sovereignty are not affected by State lines—no State Legislature, Executive, or convention, having the right to alter, annul, repeal, or hinder the execution of any constitutional law of Congress, or to change the practical relations of the citizens within its limits to the national Government.

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties, &c., shall be the supreme law of the land," * * * "shall be the supreme law of the land," * * * "any thing in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."—Constitution of the United States, Article 6.

The so-called ordinances of secession adopted by the people of some of the southern States are of no more legal effect by way of dissolving their allegiance to the General or national Government than the blank paper upon which they are written; otherwise they might be plead in bar of a prosecution by the Government for treason against any citizen who had his residence within the limits of such State—a defense which I presume even the chief of secessionists would not now gravely offer. No citizen can expatriate himself and yet remain within the territorial limits of the Government to which he owes allegiance. An individual becomes or is a citizen of the United States by virtue of his relations to the national Government, and not by virtue of his being a citizen of one of the United States. The Union is the nation, and to the Government of the Union within its constitutional scope and authority is our allegiance due. It is, nevertheless, true that we owe an allegiance to our State governments acting within their limits as prescribed by the Constitution of the United States.

These principles being true, it follows that the rebellion was never limited by State lines. Its limits were never defined by legislation, but its authority was extended as far as its power could carry it, whether over entire States or parts of States, or whether the people of those States had ever adopted the farce of an ordinance of secession or not. The right of separate State secession we never recognized. It never did and does not exist in our form of Government. No Government ever did, ever will, or ever can vest anywhere the power to destroy itself, for the more vesting of such power would be its destruction. We were compelled, however, for four long and dark years, to accord a respect, however reluctant, to the power of the rebellion. There is a disposition, with some, to attach to these ordinances of secession a legal importance to which they are by no means entitled. The President in his restoration policy takes up the several State governments which were overthrown by the rebellion as they stood immediately prior to the adoption of these several ordinances, confirming all that was done by them prior to this time, and repudiating all that was done subsequently. This may not be positively objectionable, provided we are not misled by it into an undue respect for those ordinances, considering them as only the starting points, the acts of rebellion, by which the several State governments were overthrown or perverted from their proper relations to the national Government. This is a convenient prominent act from which to date the rebellion in the several States in which such ordinances were adopted, but is not sustained by the facts as the first act, in any such State, of organized rebellion and treason.

The organizing of a military force hostile to the United States, and appropriations for their payment, the seizure of United States forts and other public property, and other acts of violence in all the States comprising the late so-called confederate States of America, preceded the adoption of the ordinances of secession. Thus Georgia State troops seized Forts Pulaski and Jackson, and the United States arsenal at Savannah, January 2, 1861, though the ordinance of secession was not passed until January 19, 1861. In Alabama, Fort Morgan and the United States arsenal at Mobile were seized January 4, and the ordinance of secession adopted on the 11th. The Louisiana forts and arsenal were seized by State troops on the 11th of January, though the ordinance of secession was not adopted until the 26th. And so on throughout the entire catalogue. The act was not an original act of or attempt at secession, but was originally an act of rebellion and secession, and was subsequently brought to its aid as one means of giving it strength by uniting the people in its support, just as the military despotism, the reign of terror, inaugurated by the leaders, was another means, looking to the same end.

These ordinances could not bind the conscience nor determine the allegiance of individuals, nor extend the authority of the rebellion to State lines, when the power of the rebellion was not sufficient to maintain it there; and individuals are none the more or less traitors, and the people were none the more or less in rebellion because such ordinances were or were not adopted in their States. The people of the State of Virginia adopted an ordinance of secession; the people of the States of Kentucky, Missouri, and Maryland did not; yet the northwestern portion of Virginia, comprising most of what is now West Virginia, was more truly loyal, maintained its relations to the national Government better, and rendered to it a more cheerful support in its measures and policy for crushing the rebellion, than certain districts in each of the other three States mentioned. The people of Virginia adopted an ordinance of secession, but those of northwestern Virginia never rebelled. The people of Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri never adopted such ordinances, but those of portions of each joined the rebellion; and it is certainly attaching a legal importance to these ordinances not justified by the principles and polity of our Government to subject the people of loyal West Virginia to pains and penalties from which those of the disloyal and rebellious portions of those other States are exempt, as was done in the case of returning rebels, after the surrender; and for no reason except that the people of Virginia adopted an ordinance of secession.

Certain of the State governments were overthrown by the rebellion just as was the national Government wherever the power of the rebellion extended. The States were not, and could not, be parties to the rebellion, because they are not subjects of the national Government. Individuals, citizens, you and I, are subjects of the Governments, both State and national. We may commit treason against either or both, and may overthrow either or both by different or the same overt act, by which we subject ourselves to the pains and penalties of treason, and forfeit the rights of citizenship—ay, the right to life itself—under either or both; but the rights and powers of the Government are in no way affected by our treason, except so far as they may be paralyzed for a time by the blow we strike at their life; and the doctrine that the States have committed felo de se, or self-murder, is not only monstrous within itself, but subversive of the vital principles of our Government, and fraught with many dangers. We must preserve the ancient landmarks for our own security and protection, for we know not how soon we may need to use them in our own defense. We know not in what form, or in what direction, the next attack may come, if come it ever shall, which Heaven forbid. But I warn you that this doctrine is too near of kin to secession for us to take it to our bosoms; and that self-interest and personal aggrandizement are more potent influences with ambitious and unprincipled men than climate, soil, or latitude.

As before stated, the authority of the rebellion was extended wherever its power could carry it; and I here protest against the use of the expression, so common, that States were in rebellion. A certain disaffected portion of the people of the United States, extending over a large section of its territory, go into a rebellion, under the auspices and power of which they inaugurate a government in lieu of that of the United States, and subvert the State governments within the extent of their usurped jurisdiction, and make them subservient to their purposes. The States (as such) of Virginia, Tennessee, and Arkansas, were no more in rebellion, when overrun by rebel hordes, than were those of Maryland, Kentucky, Missouri, and of Pennsylvania, under similar circumstances; and if the constitutional and legal rights of loyal citizens of the United States in the States and districts in which a majority of the resident population joined the rebellion, differ in any wise from those where all were loyal, (if such could be found,) but overrun for a time, I confess the distinction is too refined and metaphysical for my comprehension. The governments of Maryland and Pennsylvania were never absolutely under rebel control, but the people of certain districts within those States know what it is to obey rebel orders; their local municipal regulations, both State and national, were for a time overthrown, but immediately upon regaining the power they were "restored," and who questioned the authority of the loyal people to restore them? The governments of Kentucky and Missouri were overthrown, were in the possession and under the control of those engaged in the rebellion—at least they had, for a time, possession of the capitals of those States, and among them those whom they recognized as the Governors of these States with their Legislatures—and they never had any government anywhere recognized by any power on earth except themselves. And if I am not mistaken, these States were, at some time, by some one and in some way, annexed to the confederacy. At least I well remember, that when campaigning down South, the rebel ladies, in singing "the Bonnie Blue Flag," did most emphatically claim that the constellation had grown from one to thirteen stars; and that to make these they did count Kentucky and Missouri; and my impression is and always was, that "the Bonnie Blue Flag," asserted by such authority, was and is as binding upon the citizens of Kentucky and Missouri as ever were the so-called ordinances of secession upon those of Virginia, South Carolina, or Texas; and that they all deserve to be subjected to equal disabilities. And then, you know, they raised a terrible wail for "Maryland, my Maryland," to such an extent that, if I remember correctly, General Lee did annex it, by proclamation, during one of his raids. I have no information as to whether John Morgan and the St. Albans raiders annexed Indiana, Ohio, and Vermont to the confederacy or not, but if they did not they were certainly very forgetful of their duty as conquerors; but whether they did or not, I conceive, does "neither good nor harm."

But who questioned the right of the loyal people of these States to reestablish their governments in their respective capitals when they recovered the power to do so? And where is the difference in the principle involved in the condition of these States and of those yet unrepresented upon this floor? Those yet unrepresented were a while wholly instead of partially overrun, and were longer under rebel control; but are the rights of loyal citizens destroyed by "the law's delay," or by the inability of the Government to which they bear allegiance to extend to them, for a time, its protection and support? In what, then, consists the difference in principle, except it be in the single fact that in the one class ordinances of secession (so called) were adopted, and in the other were not?

Sir, those who accord to those ordinances an importance so essential and vital as this, are, in my humble opinion, not one whit less disunionists in theory and principle than those who adopted them. But we are seriously told upon the floor of this House, by those claiming to be par excellence the friends of the Union, that these States are out of the Union! Look, sir, and count the stars and stripes upon that flag. Does this House indorse a flaunting lie in its presence every day, hour, and minute of its sitting? Why floats in the breeze that banner untorn from the top of this Hall, attracting the gaze of admiring multitudes for miles around, if eleven of the States represented thereon have ceased to be States, and are no longer members of this Union? Is it to deceive foreign nations through their representatives at your Government? Go, sir, and ask the honest tar in your navy-yard, or upon the wide ocean, or in a foreign port, if the flag floating from his mast-head flaunts a lie—is a deception and a cheat! Ask the returning veteran, scarred and maimed, who risked his life and shed his blood to save and perpetuate the Union, if "the war has been a failure," and if the flag he bears so proudly homeward is all that is saved from the wreck of his dismembered country! Sir, I leave the reply to your imagination; and I would not envy the gentleman who champions this doctrine the pleasure of a tour over this country, charged with the duty of cutting the representatives of eleven States from that flag which has become a household god in every loyal family throughout the land.

To restore these State governments, then, is, in my opinion, to reinstate them as they existed when overthrown by the rebellion, subject only to such changes as are necessary to conform them to the present status of the national Government. During the suspension of the proper practical relations between the people of these States and the national Government, the institution of African slavery has been abolished, and upon resuming these relations, they are now required to conform their organic law to this very important change, not because their State constitutions are not republican in form without this change, but because the Constitution and laws of the United States are supreme, and those of the several States must conform to them.

I need not stop here to discuss the operation and effect of the emancipation proclamation in the absence of further sanction; for though important in the day of its active operation, it is now superseded, or rather confirmed, by the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery, which is now a part of the supreme law of the land. This amendment gives Congress the power and makes it its duty to guaranty the freedom given. This power I feel assured Congress will exercise, and in the same manner and to the same extent, subsequent to the admission of the representatives of these States as prior to such admission. It is a power to be exercised by Congress, not on or through the agency of the several State governments, but, as in the exercise of all its other powers, directly upon the subject. No issue then, even with the aid of special pleading, can be made up here on this question. We hear a great deal, however, said with reference to compelling the people of these States to adopt this measure or that measure as a condition precedent to the admission of their representatives into Congress. Sir, if they are States, Congress has no more right to compel them to adopt any measure than it has to adopt it for them and transfer it to their code. If they are not States they have no right to act upon these questions, and their action is consequently without significance or the sanction of public law. But in either event, admitting the power of Congress to require such action, and the right of the States to act upon these questions, what respect would the gentlemen now contending for such action give to it, thus wrung from them under duress? Or what evidence would it give to any one upon which to base an opinion as to the actual condition or prevailing sentiment of these people? The convention in one State declines to repudiate the rebel debt; the President tells them they must do it before they can hope for representation in Congress; they then reconsider and reverse their former decision! Now, what importance can be attached to this action? The honorable gentleman from Ohio remarked with significance, that in his opinion it did neither "good nor harm;" and I am confirmed in the opinion that if it does no harm, it at least does no good. The policy to be pursued respecting the qualifications of electors in these States, during reorganization, is, I presume, so far determined and conceded as to be no longer involved in the direct issues now affecting this question. Then I come to the all-important question of guarantees.

We have now waiting action by Congress possibly less than twenty guarantees proposed as amendments to the Constitution of the United States. I do not propose now to discuss the merits of these several propositions, and do not know with sufficient certainty what they are to enter upon such discussion, but suppose there will be an opportunity to investigate them, unless they should be acted upon under the operation of "the previous question," and without being printed. I will say, however, that I doubt the necessity of so much constitutional amendment, and that if it is really necessary, we had best have a convention at once; for to give to so many questions, of such importance as we are told these are, the consideration they deserve when becoming part of the organic law of the land, would require the time of an ordinary session of Congress, and I think we should not form the habit of changing that sacred instrument for slight causes or with too much facility. Gentlemen manifest more fear now for the safety of the Constitution and the Union than when there were five hundred thousand rebels arrayed in arms against it. I confess I am unmoved by such fears. Some of the proposed amendments, so far as I understand them, seem unobjectionable, and when brought to a vote I now see no reason for not voting for them. If you can frame an article which more positively refutes the dogmas of nullification and secession than the second clause of the sixth article, before quoted, the fifteenth clause of the eighth section of the first article, which provides "for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions," and the first clause of the third section of the third article defining treason, I will vote for it; but I can conceive of nothing plainer upon this point than the Constitution as its framers made it. And I know of no such verification of, or commentary upon, the Government under it, as is found in the legislation of Congress, and the action of the Executive, during the rebellion. But if you can frame an article which will give more than "the last man," and mortgage more than "the last dollar" to save the Union, I will vote for it. The proposed amendment concerning the national and the rebel debt, as I heard it read once from the Clerk's desk, appeared unobjectionable, and has passed this House. But what I do object to, and most solemnly protest against at this point, is the determination, upon the part of some, to refuse representation to the people of these States, regardless of their condition, until these amendments are secured. And why? Because, say they, their adoption is necessary in order to secure the permanent ascendancy of the present dominant party, and if the people of these States are admitted to participation in the ratification of these amendments they will be defeated.

Sir, I wish as much as any one that the present dominant party may long control the administration of affairs in this country; they deserve to do so, and will do so if in their administration they act wisely and justly; but if the principle just indicated is persisted in and prevails, I ask you, what is your written Constitution worth, what the value of any guarantees that may or can be incorporated into it beyond their subserviency to party purposes? If the dominant party can keep the minority from participation in the affairs of the Government until the Constitution can be amended to their prejudice, from the day this principle becomes incorporated into the polity of our Government, the Constitution, instead of the chart of our liberties, becomes only an instrument of oppression, with which to bind more firmly the tyrannical will of a popular majority, by which the rights of minorities are unknown or unrespected, and to be changed with each revolution of popular sentiment. Better, far better, abolish it at once, and let us look to the law, to custom, and to necessity for the landmarks to our liberties, than that it be prostituted to such base purposes. Besides, sir, without pretending to prophetic wisdom, the people of this country will never make a Constitution looking only to the interests of any party. They are loyal and yet national; looking to the interests of the country, and of the whole country, jealous of the rights of minorities and the provisions for their protection; remembering, from personal experience, that political or party ascendancy is among the uncertainties of this world. In a word, sir, the people are just, and will repudiate any party which attempts to trample upon these principles.

I have said that to restore the State governments which were overthrown by the rebellion was to reinstate them as they existed before overthrown, and in harmony with the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery. Acting upon this policy, let us see what guarantees can and would be required.

1. The applicant claiming a seat upon this floor must be loyal; and I would not accept whitewashed loyalty, or loyalty of a recent growth; he must have been loyal all the time—all the way through. He must be able to take, and must take, what is popularly known as "the test oath;" and I would not even accept that as conclusive, as barring further investigation, which might contradict the presumption raised by it. And I care not, so far as this question is concerned, whether the test oath be decided constitutional or unconstitutional; while it is a part of the law of the land, I would use it as a means of arriving at a knowledge of facts upon which the claims of the applicant should be decided. If it should cease to be law, I would arrive at a knowledge of the same facts by other means, and the result should be the same. No man, after the commission of treason against the United States, was ever admitted to a seat upon the floor of Congress; and no such one, with my sanction, ever shall be. And Congress has expelled members, after admission, for disloyalty, in the absence of overt acts which would support a prosecution for treason; and under similar circumstances, and for the same cause, I would sanction such action again.

2. I must know that the constituency from which the applicant comes is of sufficient loyalty to preserve or maintain, as against home disaffection, a republican State government in harmony with that of the United States, without the support of the military power of the country, and that his credentials are signed by a Governor constitutionally elected and administering such State government, which must no more recognize, as legal or binding, anything done in aid of the rebellion, than it did before the rebellion was inaugurated. Then each several application must stand upon its own individual merits.

Judging of the people of these States by this rule, from what is publicly or officially known of their condition, I should determine that it is not such as to entitle them, at present, to representation. They have been declared by proclamation of the Executive in rebellion—as waging war against the United States; and I am yet notified of no proclamation of peace, or that martial law has been superseded by civil in any or either of them. From what is known privately and unofficially of them I am of the opinion that some of them are in a condition to entitle them to representation; and that if an investigation of the facts proves their condition to be such as before indicated their loyal representatives should be permitted to qualify at the earliest day possible. I need not tell you that the condition of our country, especially with regard to our finances and in view of our foreign relations, demands that we be united at the earliest day practicable consistent with the public safety, which is always a paramount necessity. With regard, however, to the people of most of these States, I am free to say, that so far as I am able to judge of their condition and of public sentiment in them, from the tone of their press, and the general character and antecedents of those recently elected to offices of honor and trust, they are far, very far indeed, from being what they were before the rebellion—of filling what I should consider prerequisites for the admission of their representatives; and until these prerequisites are met and satisfied, whether it be one year or ten years, or more, I would govern them by martial law and without representation; and if necessary to preserve the territory in the interest of loyalty—if the present population should prove incorrigible—I would sweep their landed estates from them by confiscation, and recolonize the country with loyal citizens. I am happy, however, to say that, in my opinion, a resort to such extreme measures will not be necessary; but at the same time I must say that restoration has been retarded, and the questions involved in it complicated, by permitting power to get too soon into the hands of whitewashed rebels, instead of placing it exclusively in the hands of Union men, and organizing upon them as a nucleus; the consequence of which is that they (the Union men) are now as much proscribed, if not actively persecuted, throughout the great portion of the South as they were during the rebellion. I would love just here to enter a plea for the Union men of the South, but must forego that pleasure for the present.

But I hear it said that we must reconstruct upon a basis which will forever preclude the possibility of another rebellion. I confess, however, my astonishment at the serious entertainment of such an idea. Why, sir, the Almighty himself cannot organize a Government with provisions or guarantees which shall preclude the possibility of a rebellion against it. The only guarantees against rebellion of which I am aware are—

1. To lodge within the Government the right to use all its resources to crush rebellion, which is an essential prerequisite, expressed or implied in every Government; and

2. A wise, just, and equitable administration of the Government by the party in power, by which the affections of the people are confirmed in favor of its preservation. Let it be administered in an oppressive and tyrannical manner, and so soon as sufficient numbers become estranged toward it in their affections, and fail of redress or justice through peaceable measures, so soon will they appeal to the God of battles; and guarantees—I care not what they are—will be thrown to the winds. I appeal to the history of the world, and of the Government of the universe, moral and political, in verification of the truth of this doctrine. All history proclaims it, and all men who have read intelligently know it.

I trust, sir, that the administration of this Government by "the party of the Union" will be so wise and so just as, first, to give the party favor with the people and thus long continue the administration of affairs in their hands, and second, to seal the affections of the people to the Government, by which, together with a little time and the social friction incident to American society, we may confidently hope and expect soon again to see the people of this great country united, not only in theory and by law, but in feeling, in sympathy, and in the great work of civil and religious liberty, of human progress in all its material interests, and of freedom, looking with increased veneration to the Constitution and Government of our fathers as the common guardian, and to the old flag as the emblem of all, and rejoicing again in the proud title of AMERICAN CITIZEN.

Mr. DEMING moved that the committee rise.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw it. I will occupy only ten minutes.

Mr. DEMING. I withdraw it.

BASIS OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. BLAINE. Since the beginning of the present session, Mr. Chairman, we have had several propositions to amend the Federal Constitution with respect to the basis of representation in Congress. These propositions have differed somewhat in phrase, but they all embrace substantially the one idea of making suffrage instead of population the basis of apportioning Representatives; or in other words, to give to the States in future a representation proportioned to their voters instead of their inhabitants.

The effect contemplated and intended by this change is perfectly well understood, and on all hands frankly avowed. It is to deprive the lately rebellious States of the unfair advantage of a large representation in this House, based on their colored population, so long as that population shall be denied political rights by the legislation of those States. The proposed constitutional amendment would simply say to those States, while you refuse to enfranchise your black population you shall have no representation based on their numbers; but admit them to civil and political rights and they shall at once be counted to your advantage in the apportionment of Representatives.

The direct object thus aimed at, as it respects the rebellious States, has been so generally approved that little thought seems to have been given to the incidental evils which the proposed constitutional amendment would inflict on a large portion of the loyal States—evils, in my judgment, so serious and alarming as to lead me to oppose the amendment in any form in which it has yet been presented. As an abstract proposition no one will deny that population is the true basis of representation; for women, children, and other non-voting classes may have as vital an interest in the legislation of the country as those who actually deposit the ballot. Indeed, the very amendment we are discussing implies that population is the true basis, inasmuch as the exclusion of the black people of the South from political rights has suggested this indirectly coercive mode of securing them those rights. Were the negroes to be enfranchised throughout the South to-day, no one would insist on the adoption of this amendment; and yet if the amendment shall be incorporated in the Federal Constitution its incidental evils will abide in the loyal States long after the direct evil which it aims to cure may have been eradicated in the southern States.

If voters instead of population shall be made the basis of representation certain results will follow, not fully appreciated perhaps by some who are now urgent for the change. I will confine my examination of these results to the nineteen free States whose statistics are presented in the census of 1860; and the very radical change which the new basis of representation would produce among and between those States forms the ground of my opposition to it. The ratio of voters to population differs very widely in different sections, varying in the States referred to from a minimum of nineteen per cent. to a maximum of fifty-eight per cent., and the changes which this fact would work in the relative representation of certain States would be monstrous. For example, California has a population of 358,110, and Vermont 314,369, and each has three Representatives on this floor to-day. But California has 207,000 voters and Vermont has 87,000. Assuming voters as the basis of apportionment, and allowing to Vermont three Representatives, California would be entitled to eight. The great State of Ohio, with nearly seven times the population of California, would have but little more than two and a half times the number of Representatives; and New York, with quite eleven times the population of California, would have in the new style of apportionment less than five times as many members of this House. California it may be said presents an extreme case, but no more so than will continually recur for the next century under the stimulus to the emigration of young voters from the older States to the inviting fields of the Mississippi valley and the Pacific slope.

But cases less extreme than California will present quite as clearly the injurious working of the proposed change. Take two States—one in the East and one in the West—not greatly differing in aggregate population, for example, Massachusetts and Indiana—the former with 1,221,482 inhabitants, the latter with 1,328,710. Massachusetts has to-day ten Representatives on this floor and Indiana has eleven; an exactly fair apportionment. But Massachusetts has only 227,429 voters, while Indiana has 316,824; and therefore on the new basis, if Massachusetts should retain her ten Representatives Indiana would be allowed about fifteen, and if Indiana should be confined to her eleven, Massachusetts would be reduced to seven. And I might adduce many other instances showing the gross inequalities of representation to which the proposed amendment would subject the loyal States.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. What is the cause of this disparity of men and women in Massachusetts and in the New England States? Is it not that the men go to the western States as emigrants?

Mr. BLAINE. I suppose it is.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well; is not Massachusetts represented there; then?

Mr. BLAINE. Not according to some harangues we hear in this House from gentlemen representing that section on the tariff, as my distinguished friend on the Committee of Ways and Means knows very well. They go there, become identified with what they term western interests, and, I am sorry to say, attack New England and New England interests.

Mr. GRINNELL. Not all of them.

Mr. BLAINE. And there are other objections, Mr. Chairman, to the proposed constitutional amendment. Basing representation on voters—unless Congress should be empowered to define their qualifications—would tend to cheapen suffrage everywhere. There would be an unseemly scramble in all the States during each decade to increase by every means the number of voters, and all conservative restrictions, such as the requirement of reading and writing now enforced in some of the States, would be stricken down in a rash and reckless effort to procure an enlarged representation in the national councils. Foreigners would be invited to vote on a mere preliminary "declaration of intention," and the ballot, which cannot be too sacredly guarded, and which is the great and inestimable privilege of the American citizen, would be demoralized and disgraced everywhere.

And the worst feature of all is, that there is no need whatever of precipitating the evils I have referred to. The great end of depriving the South of the representation which is based on the colored population until that population is enfranchised, can be very readily secured without accompanying it with these offensive inequalities of representation among the loyal States. The Constitution may be amended so as to prevent the one evil without involving others of greater magnitude, and I venture to express the belief that the proposition submitted by me this morning, and on my motion referred to the committee on reconstruction, will, if adopted, secure the desired result. Let me briefly explain that proposition.

The Constitution of the United States, article one, section two, clause three, reads as follows to the first period:

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by (adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other persons.)"

The portion which I have included in parentheses has become meaningless and nugatory by the adoption of the constitutional amendment, which abolishes the distinction between "free persons" and "all other persons," and being thus a dead letter might as well be formally struck out; and in its stead I propose to insert the words following included in parentheses, so that the clause as amended will read thus:

"Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by (taking the whole number of persons except those to whom civil or political rights or privileges are denied or abridged by the constitution or laws of any State on account of race or color.)"

This is a very simple and very direct way, it seems to me, of reaching the result aimed at without embarrassment to any other question or interest. It leaves population as heretofore the basis of representation, does not disturb in any manner the harmonious relations of the loyal States, and it conclusively deprives the southern States of all representation in Congress on account of the colored population so long as those States may choose to abridge or deny to that population the political rights and privileges accorded to others. The adoption of this amendment as a part of the Federal Constitution would, I venture to predict, secure the right of suffrage to the colored population throughout the South in a very few years. And I doubt if in any other mode that right can be secured so speedily, so certainly, and so enduringly.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Chairman, I shall inquire whether the Constitution deals with States. I shall discuss the question whether an organized rebellion against a Government is an organized "State" in that Government; whether that which cannot become a "State" until all its officers have sworn to support the Constitution, remains a State after they have all sworn to overthrow that Constitution; and if I find it does continue to be a State after that, then I shall strive to ascertain whether it will so continue to be a government, a State, after, by means of universal treason, it has ceased to have any constitution, laws, Legislature, courts, or citizens in it.

If in debating these questions I debate axioms, my apology is that there are no other questions to debate in "reconstruction." If in the discussion I make self-evident things obscure or incomprehensible, my defense shall be that I am conforming to the usages of Congress.

I will not inquire whether any subject of this Government, by reason of the revolt, passed from under its sovereignty or ceased to owe it allegiance, nor whether any territory passed from under that jurisdiction, because I know of no one who thinks that any of these things did occur. I shall not consider whether, by the rebellion, any State lost its territorial character or defined boundaries or subdivisions, for I know of no one who would obliterate these geographical qualities of the States.

These questions, however much discussed, are in no practical sense before Congress.

WHAT IS BEFORE CONGRESS.

What is before this Congress—by far the most momentous constitutional question ever here considered—I at once condense and affirm in a single sentence.

It is under our Constitution possible to, and the late rebellion did in fact so, overthrow and usurp in the insurrectionary States the loyal State governments as that, during such usurpation, such States and their people ceased to have any of the rights or powers of government as States of this Union; and this loss of the rights and powers of government was such that the United States may and ought to assume and exercise local powers of the lost State governments, and may control the readmission of such States to their powers of government in this Union, subject to and in accordance with the obligation to "guaranty to each State a republican form of government."

This great question I proceed to consider.

WHAT, BY THE LAW OF NATIONS, IS A STATE?

At the very foundation of this discussion lies the question, what make up the necessary elements of every State in this Union? What properties are they which, if any one be lost by a State, it ceases to be entitled to exercise the powers and demand the rights of a political and governing member of that Union?

The argument I now derive from "public law" is really identical with the one I shall next adduce, and shall base upon the express terms of the Constitution. In this argument—assuming, as I do, two axioms of our law; first, that the law of nations is part of your Constitution, (Const., art. 1, sec. 8, clause 10,) and second, that such Constitution is to its States, at least, as much "supreme law" as the international code is law to the civilized States which are under its sway—I here only show that these law-defying communities in rebellion cannot be "States," unless our Union has lowered and debased the world's "legal idea" of a "State."

What, then, is required to constitute a State by the law of nations?

We answer:

1. "A fixed abode and definite territory belonging to the people who occupy it." (Wheaton, 33.)

2. "A society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by their combined strength." (Ib. 32.)

3. "The legal idea of a State, necessarily implies that of habitual obedience of its members to those in whom the superiority is vested." (Ib. 33.)

This third necessary element of a State is the only important one in this discussion. Hence, I add the following high authorities:

Grotius, (book 3, chapter 3, section 2,) says: "The law, especially that of nations, is in the State as the soul is in that of the human body, for that being taken away it ceases to be a State."

Burlamaqui, (volume 2, page 25,) in defining a State says:

"It is a multitude of people united together by a common interest and common laws, to which they submit with one accord."

I might add to these all the writers on public law for centuries, in confirmation of what is self-evident without proof, that there can be no State where the people do not habitually obey the laws. For four hundred years the unanimous conscience and common sense of the civilized world has refused to recognize the existence of a people who were habitually disobedient to their own laws, or the law of nations. Such a people is blotted out.

Now, surely, if habitual obedience to law "was necessary to the legal idea of a State," even under the vague and general precepts of the international code, it will not be insisted that habitual, persistent, and universal disobedience will be tolerated by the well-defined, express, and rigorous provisions of the American Constitution in the citizens of one of its States.

Shall that position be tolerated which admits that the law of nations will expel from its union and blot from existence an habitually lawless people, and yet the law of our Union permits such a State to govern it? Shall a Union, whose Constitution and laws in every single great attribute of national sovereignty are the supreme law of these States and their people, recognize and be ruled by a people who unanimously, habitually, persistently, and for years disobey and defy these laws?

Can it be that for four centuries the united conscience and judgment of the civilized world shall prohibit the existence upon the earth of such a monster as a State whose people are habitually lawless, and then shall it be left for our "more perfect Union" to establish "States," which, although they cannot commence their existence until every officer and minister of that State shall swear to support the Constitution of the United States, as the supreme law of the land, yet shall continue to be States after every officer of such State had discarded such oath, and every inhabitant had, for years, defied and discarded these "supreme laws?"

In the lights of the public law of the world let this Congress answer the startling question, whether an organized rebellion has come to be an organized "State;" whether "habitual" treason has come to be "habitual obedience to law;" and whether the legal "idea of a State" has come to be a synonym for chaos, in which are commingled, in unalleviated political ruin, the absolute overthrow of all its "supreme laws," the wreck of all loyal constitutions, laws, and forms of government, and the death or exile of every inhabitant who admitted the existence of such loyal State!

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not too much to say that even under the settled precepts of public law those eleven districts, called "confederate States," ceased to be States. In them, during so many dark years, there was no obedience to law except the law which compelled the defiance of all "supreme laws;" there was no government except that one which consisted in enforcing disloyalty to Government; there was no observance of the "law of nations," unless that is to be found in indiscriminate and remorseless assassination or murder of every loyal man whom their treason could reach either by means of the dagger, the torpedo, the poisoned food, the bandit, the violations of truce, or the systematized destruction of prisoners of war. Their body-politic was one gigantic treason, made up of eleven organized rebellions, combined into one by the force of a relentless military despotism.

But, sir, the unexampled magnitude of these interests involved impel me on to what are, if possible, more conclusive arguments. I go from the public law to the Constitution.

WHAT IS A STATE OF THIS UNION?

Now we proceed to inquire what, if anything more, is required to make a State of this Union than is requisite to constitute a State under the law of nations. Brazil is a State, but is not a State of this Union. That which is required to be added to the properties which belong to every State, in the sense of the international law, in order to constitute a State of our Union, is—

1. Its citizens must owe, acknowledge, and render supreme and habitual allegiance and obedience to the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States in all Federal matters, these being the supreme laws to the States and their citizens. (Constitution, article 6.)

2. All "the members of the State Legislatures, and its executive and judicial officers, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support the Constitution" of the United States. (Article 6.)

3. That the United States shall have so "admitted it into this Union" (article 5, section 3) as to have assumed "to guaranty to it a republican form of government, and to protect it against invasion, and," on application, "against domestic violence."

4. And by such recognition and "admission into this Union" to have secured to it, as a body-politic, or "State," certain rights of participation in the control of the Federal Government; which rights I shall name hereafter. (See also 1 Bishop on Criminal Law, sections 128 to 137, inclusive.)

No one who can read the Constitution will deny that each State in this Union must have every one of these properties before it can commence to exist in the Union; because the Constitution so declares. Now the question I consider is, whether it shall continue to be a State, in the sense that it holds the powers and rights of a State, after it has lost every property which it must have before it could commence to exist in the Union.

DOES THE CONSTITUTION DEAL WITH STATES?

The gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] says:

"The Constitution does not deal with States except in one or two instances, as the election of members of Congress and the election of electors of President and Vice President."

This statement involves an error both of fact and law which, considering its highly intelligent and patriotic source, is amazing. Now, sir, reading English will correct this error. Turn to the Constitution. It deals with States, in the way of imposing restraints and obligations upon them as States, in the following matters: regulating commerce among the States; requiring Representatives, also United States Senators, to reside in their respective States; prohibiting States from entering into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, coining money, emitting bills of credit, making anything but gold and silver coin a tender for debt; passing any bill of attainer, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts; from taxing imports or exports without consent of Congress; from laying tonnage duty; from keeping troops or ships of war in time of peace; from entering into any compact with another State or foreign Power; from engaging in war unless invaded or in imminent danger thereof; from refusing to give full faith to records, &c., of other States; from refusing to surrender fugitives from justice or labor; in requiring States to be tried in the courts of the United States; requiring all their officers to take an oath to support the Constitution; requiring them to pay State's proportion of direct taxes; in prohibiting "either" State from conferring any other emolument upon the President than his salary; in requiring them to furnish, at command of the President, their militia; and in subordinating their "judges," "constitutions," and "laws" to the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States as "the supreme law of the land."

It secures rights and confers powers upon the States as States in each of the following respects. It secures to each the right to elect at least one Representative, to elect two Senators, to cast one vote in ratifying constitutional amendments, and in calling a convention to make such amendments; to cast one vote in electing a President in the House, to appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct electors to elect a President and Vice President, to fill by appointment vacancies in Congress, to demand that "in the regulation of commerce no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another," in securing equal immunities to their respective citizens, in having guaranties to them republican governments, in being protected against insurrection and domestic violence, in securing them from being divided, &c., and in enabling them to define the qualification of electors for United States officers by fixing that of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures.

My object, Mr. Chairman, in reciting these fifty or more supremely important provisions of the Constitution, in every one of which it is evident, both by the nature and express terms of the provisions themselves, and by the innumerable adjudications of the courts, that the Constitution "deals with" the States, as such, was not the frivolous one of showing that there were more than "one or two" of these. My purpose was the higher one of showing how baseless that argument was which was based upon the assertion that the Constitution did not deal with States but individuals only, and that, therefore, not the States, but only individuals could lose their rights under such Constitution. I wanted not only to show the argument baseless but that its precise opposite is the exact truth. I wanted to show that the very body, soul, life, and essence of the Constitution is penetrated, pervaded, and characterized by and with this recognition of the States, and of their high powers as such. I wanted to bring into view the momentous and controlling fact which disposes of this high constitutional question, that the States are not only "dealt with" by the Constitution, but that their powers as States in our Government are absolutely vital. And I separated the obligations and restraints imposed upon the States and their officers from the conferments of rights and powers upon them, that it might appear to all men and to the very children who can read their Constitution, that, in this marvelous great scheme of Government, as in every other wise human Government, as well as in God's, the enforcements of obligation are coupled with and inseparable from the enjoyment of rights; that prescribed qualifications for the attainment of power must be possessed and proceed, and are inseparable, from the exercise of power. I wanted to show that there could be, under the Constitution, none of the rights or powers of a State where there were recognized none of the obligations or duties of a State.

Sir, how long may this nation survive with a Senate elected by rebel Legislatures; or with treaties made by Senators chosen by rebel States; or with a President selected by electors chosen by the Legislature of South Carolina; or with a President elected in a House of Representatives where each rebel State casts one vote; or with a House of Representatives elected by electors whom a rebel legislature would authorize to vote; or with officers over United States forces appointed by rebel governors; or with such constitutional amendments as would be ratified by rebel legislatures; or with a traitor for President whom you could only remove by the impeachment of a Senate elected by rebel legislatures; or with such foreign ministers and other officers of the United States as such a Senate would confirm; or with a prohibition upon your closing the ports of the eleven rebel States to a commerce supplying them with all the supplies of war, unless you also closed all the ports of the other States?

Sir, if the recital of these powers which the States, as such, hold in governing this Union, does not prove that a State in rebellion, and whose government and people are in actual hostility to the United States, is not a component part of this Union, during the continuance of such rebellion, for the purpose of exercising any power, then such recital does prove other things. It proves that "Independence Hall" was a mad-house from the 14th of May to the 17th of September, 1787; and that the madmen there succeeded in devising a framework of Government embodying in it a larger number of separate and fatal instruments of self-slaughter than was ever combined in a Government before, or than was ever dreamed by men who make Utopias, or by them who form governments in Bedlam.

CONGRESS HAS ASSUMED THAT REBEL STATES HAD NO RIGHTS AS STATES.

I admit that the action of this Government was not, at all times during the war, harmonious nor consistent upon the matter of according rights to rebel districts. It would have been strange, indeed, if all such action, done, as it was, in the midst of the awful events of such wars, revolutions, and breakings up of the systems of governments, had been consistent upon any subject. Besides, as mere measures of war, there was constant temptation to err, if at all, in the direction of according to loyalty in the insurrectionary districts every possible protection and power, to the end that it might be developed into support of a Government staggering to its fall under the blows of treason.

But still the most solemn and deliberate action of your Government in all its departments, and recently all its actions, proceeds upon the assumption that these rebel States had lost all the rights of States.

Among these acts may be mentioned those of July 13, 1861, and 30th of same month. These have been held to be acts "regulating commerce," (11 American Law Register, 419,) and they close the ports of the rebel States to all commerce and capture their ships upon the seas. And yet if these southern ports were ports of States having the rights of States, you could not only not close them "in regulating commerce," but you could give no port any preference over them. Again, in every revenue and tariff act which you passed in regulating commerce and the revenue since the war began, you have not only "given preferences" against the southern ports, but you have provided for their being totally shut to all commerce. Could you provide in a tariff bill that the ports of New York shall be open, and those of Massachusetts closed?

These are only examples.

POSITION OF THE PRESIDENT.

The President has assumed that the rebel States ceased to be States in the sense I am considering.

Jefferson Davis was captured May 9, 1865; and the last army of the rebellion was surrendered by Kirby Smith to General Canby, 26th of May, 1865. Then the military power of the rebellion was extinct, and actual war was ended, and the necessity for resort to mere war powers and expedients ceased. Then, too, the laws and constitutions and powers of State governments of these States sprang into life and force if they were only put into abeyance by the war and could all come back into life and force when the war was gone.

On the 29th of May, 1865, these old State constitutions had either come to be in force or they had not. If they were in force at all, then all their provisions were in force and binding, just as much as New York's constitution was; and could only be changed in the mode prescribed by themselves. Is it competent for the United States to order New York to call a convention and change her constitution? Is it competent for the United States to order it changed in a way in total disregard to the modes of amendment which it prescribes as the only ones by which it can be amended?

Now what has happened in these rebel States? Take one example as a specimen of all. On the 29th of May, 1865, President Johnson issued a proclamation appointing Holden provisional governor of North Carolina, and ordered him, under prescribed rules, to call a convention for "altering or amending the constitution of North Carolina," &c. But then that constitution of North Carolina prescribes how alone it can be altered. This mode is by bill read three times and voted for by three fifths of the members of each branch of the Legislature; then this bill must be published for six months before the election of the next Legislature; then the next Legislature, by a two-thirds vote in both Houses, must again approve the amendment; and then it must be approved by a majority of the voters of the State; and then it is part of the constitution. The convention ordered by the President is wholly unknown to and in violation of the old constitution; and if it was in force at all on the 29th of May, it could no more be altered in that way than the constitution of England could. He ordered a convention, he directed who should vote, who should be eligible to sit in the convention, and what oath they should take; every one of which orders would have been in flagrant disregard of the constitution and laws of North Carolina, if, on that day, she had any.

Precisely the same thing, in principle, has occurred in every rebel State except, perhaps, three. By presidential proclamations new governments have been professedly called into existence since the war was ended, and since the old constitutions and laws were revived out of abeyance, if they did revive. In every one the new constitutions and governments have been formed in almost total disregard of the provisions of the constitutions which they profess to amend. Now, it is exactly impossible to comprehend the action of the Executive except upon the assumption that these State constitutions and their governments had not revived so as to control the methods of their own amendment.

No, no, Mr. Chairman, the President himself tells the country, in the notable words of his proclamation, where it is that he deems that he gets this power to order States into existence. His words are, "Whereas the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States declares that the United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government, I, Andrew Johnson, President and Commander-in-Chief," &c. Sir, here is an unmistakable avowal of the source of his power and of the cause that called that power forth. If the old government and constitution of North Carolina had in fact come back to her out of the suspended animation which the rebellion had caused, then she on this 29th day of May already had a republican constitution, and it needed no alterations to make it republican nor to guaranty one to her.

Sir, let me not be misunderstood. I am not pointing to these acts of the President as wrong, but to show that the President has dealt with this great question precisely in the view I maintain, to wit, that these old State governments were so effectually overthrown that they do not come into force at the end of the war so as to furnish the basis of republican governments to these States; and that it has become the business of the United States to guaranty such governments to them. They attack the President who hold that in these acts of the Executive, in creating new constitutions, he did so in violation and disregard of living constitutions and republican governments already there. I do not attack him. If, indeed, these old State constitutions had, on the 29th of May, 1865, resumed their sway over these States, as the new champions of the President in this House allege, then indeed has the man they champion, in disregarding and superseding these constitutions, become usurper. Well may the patriotic executive head of this nation repeat once more the chronic prayer which, in all ages, weak adulation has extorted from men in power, "Deliver me from my friends."

SUPREME COURT'S POSITION.

But I go on. I now show that the third or judicial branch of the Government is, by solemn and unanimous judgments, twice repeated, committed, in principle, to the same exact conclusions.

But in presenting these high arguments—the judgments of the Supreme Court—let me make them at once serve the double end of making utterly conclusive and complete the position that a State may cease to have the governing rights of States by reason of rebellion, and of also answering what is urged so much as to the logical and practical consequences of that position.

An able statement of these objections has been laid on our table. Their effect is—

1. That it admits that a State may secede.
2. That, as a consequence of this, Jefferson Davis cannot be punished for treason any more than the Governor of Canada could be.
3. That if we admit the rebels "were to be regarded as belligerents," then when we take them back we become liable for their debts.
4. That individuals and not the States forfeit their rights by treason.

In enforcing these objections my friend from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] says:

"If they were out of the Union, when did they become so? They were once States in the Union. If they went out of the Union it was at some specific time and by some specific act."

Before the Supreme Court shall be made to answer, as it will, each one of these objections, permit me, Mr. Chairman, to allude to them; and first to this question about the "specific act," which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] asks. In respectfully answering his let me ask and answer some questions of similar legal aspect.

I ask when and by what specific act does "tumult" become "war" in law? I answer, in the language of Chief Justice Marshall, when it, in fact, assumes "warlike array and strength." What in a civil war is the specific act and time which changes, in law, an "insurrectionary party" into a "belligerent?" I answer, in the language of the Supreme Court, when in fact "the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts of justice cannot be kept open." When, in law, does a revolt become civil war? I answer, in the language of Wheaton, when "the insurrection becomes, in fact, so strong as no longer to obey the sovereign, and to be able by war to make head against him." When, in law, and by what specific act, did the entire population of Virginia, including the loyal men, cease to be "friends," and become "enemies of the United States?" I answer, when, in fact, they became "belligerents."

If these answers by the highest authorities in the world do not still answer what "specific act" deprived South Carolina of every right and power of a State, then I further answer him that it was that specific act which turned her citizens into traitors, took from her the loyal courts, statutes, Constitution, tribunals, officers, and Legislature, and which filled their places with treason and kept it there. And if the gentleman still desires to know the specific time when this happened, it will answer all the purposes of my argument to reply that it happened about four years before the time when he has told us it did, to wit, before she "surrendered." The destruction and superseding of all loyal government and law in South Carolina was a fact, not a law. It was this fearful "fact" which made her cease to be a State governing this Union, and not any ordinance of secession.

The distinguished gentleman to whom I have alluded states the fourth objection which I have named in these words:

"The people of a State may, by treason, forfeit their rights, but in a legal point of view they have no power to affect the condition of a State in the Union."

That is, turned out of metaphysics into English, every inhabitant of a State may, by treason, come to have no political rights or powers whatever as individuals except the right to be hung; but the same individuals, put into a bundle and called a body-politic or State, have all political rights and powers, and can govern this Union! Now, a plain man would have difficulty in being able to see a living, acting, ruling State where there was no constitution, court, or law, and where there were no inhabitants, all these having been hung for treason. Such a man would be dull enough to conclude that if you hung for treason all the people required to make up the body-politic called a State the State would at least be in affliction.

But, Mr. Chairman, it was unfortunate for this distinction between the political State and its people that it has repeatedly encountered the ordeal of the Supreme Court and has been utterly discarded by it.

In 3 Dallas, 93, that court says:

"A distinction is taken at bar between a State and the people of a State. It is a distinction I am not capable of comprehending. By a State forming a republic, (speaking of it as a moral person,) I do not mean the Legislature of the State, the Executive of the State, or the judiciary, but all the citizens which compose the State, and are, if I may so express myself, integral parts of it, all together forming a body-politic."

The same repudiation of a distinction between a body-politic and its individual members is in the "Prize Cases" hereafter cited.

Two years before the objections I have quoted were so ably uttered, they had been pressed, with learning, zeal, and ability equal to his, upon the consideration of the Supreme Court in these "Prize Cases," (2 Black, 635,) and had been discarded unanimously by that court, nine judges sitting, including Taney. I say it was unanimous because all the court agree that after the passage of the act of Congress of 13th July, 1861, recognizing the existence of the war, every inhabitant of the rebel States became "enemies" of the United States and "belligerents."

I affirm that the reasoning and judgment of this case settle and establish each one of the following propositions:

1. From the seventh paragraph of the Syllabus (page 636) I quote and affirm that the late "civil war between the United States and the so-called confederate States," had "such character and magnitude as to give the United States the same rights and powers which they might exercise in the case of a foreign war."

2. From the ninth paragraph of the same Syllabus I quote and affirm that "all persons residing within the territory occupied by the hostile (rebel) party in this contest were liable to be treated as enemies though not foreigners."

3. I affirm again, quoting from the opinion of the court (page 673) that "it is a proposition never doubted that the belligerent party who claims to be sovereign may exercise both belligerent and sovereign rights."

4. I affirm that precisely the same objection was urged in this case as those I have quoted; and were stated by the court in these words, "that insurrection is the act of individuals and not of the government or sovereignty," and "that the individuals engaged are the subjects of law," and "that secession ordinances are nullities and ineffectual to release any citizen from his allegiance."

To these objections the Supreme Court replies:

"This argument rests on the assumption of two propositions, each of which is without foundation upon the established law of nations. It assumes that where a civil war exists the party belligerent claiming to be sovereign cannot, for some unknown reason, exercise the rights of belligerents, though the revolutionary party may."

Again the court replies to those objections in the following words, the court italicizing the words:

"In organizing this rebellion they have acted as States claiming to be sovereign over all persons and property."

In December, 1865, the ten judges (2 Wallace, 404) unanimously decided the same thing; that all the inhabitants, guilty and innocent, became belligerents and "enemies" of these United States.

The results of these two decisions are that these rebel States;

1. Acted as States in organizing the rebellion.
2. That all their citizens, innocent and guilty, were thereby made "enemies of the United States."
3. That though they became "enemies" that did not make them "foreign" States so as that when we take them back we must pay their debts.
4. That, as the court decides that the United States may exercise over these people both "belligerent" and "sovereign" rights, therefore we may, as sovereign, try Davis for treason, although we did treat and hold these States as an "enemy's" country.
5. As these States became "enemies" territory, and all persons residing within it became "enemies of the United States," they cannot at the same time have been a people having any political rights to govern in this Union, unless indeed this Union can be governed by a body of people, every one of whom are held by its law to be the "public enemies of the United States."

Mr. DEMING. I would respectfully ask my friend from Ohio if he has any authorities on his minutes for the purpose of vindicating the position that the sovereign in a civil war may exercise both sovereign and belligerent rights?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. If I understand the exact legal purport of the question asked by the distinguished gentleman, (and in reference to pure legal questions he knows as a lawyer right well that he who speaks on legal questions must talk well or not talk at all,) I answer that I find authority in the prize cases to which I allude, that a sovereign may exercise both belligerent and sovereign rights.

Mr. DEMING. I recognize the force of the decisions in the prize cases, but I appeal to my friend for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has fortified that opinion which he expresses, that in a civil war the sovereign may exercise sovereign as well as belligerent rights, outside of the authorities quoted in the prize cases.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I now apprehend the question of the gentleman, and I thank him for asking it, for it furnishes me an opportunity of saying that I have looked through the authorities on this subject, and in the modern and respectable authorities of the world I find no dissenting voice. The doctrine will be found not only in the text and notes of Wheaton, but in Vattel, in Ward, in Halleck, and Bello.

Mr. DEMING. I would ask my friend if he has looked over the notes in Lawrence's Wheaton for the purpose of seeing the conflicting authorities which Lawrence there quotes on this specific point; that is to say, in a civil war it is incompetent for the sovereign to exercise both civil and belligerent rights.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I answer the gentleman that I have looked through those notes carefully and thoroughly, and that while, if my memory is not now at fault, I find some unimportant conflict of authority, I do not find any conflict that at all impairs the force of settled law as established in the prize cases.

Sir, it is a weak and inadequate statement of the truth to say that he mocks the law, offends the loyal sense of the people, and insults their common sense who affirms that that people or those States had any rights of government in this Union, every man, woman, and child of whom have been pronounced by two unanimous judgments of the Supreme Court of the Republic to be, in contemplation of the supreme law of that Republic and of the law of nations, the public enemies of the United States.

Does the gentleman yet ask for "the specific act" that deprived these States of all the rights of States, and made them "enemies"? I once more answer him in the words of the Supreme Court that the specific acts were, they causelessly waged against their own Government a "war which all the world acknowledge to have been the greatest civil war known in the history of the human race." That war was waged by these people "as States," and it went through long, dreary years. In it they threw off and defied the authority of your Constitution, laws, and Government; they obliterated from their State constitutions and laws every vestige of recognition of your Government; they discarded all official oaths, and took in their places oaths to support your enemy's government. They seized, in their States, all the nation's property; their Senators and Representatives in your Congress insulted, bantered, defied, and then left you; they expelled from their land or assassinated every inhabitant of known loyalty; they betrayed and surrendered your armies; they passed sequestration and other acts in flagitious violation of the law of nations, making every citizen of the United States an alien enemy, and placing in the treasury of their rebellion all money and property due such citizens. They framed iniquity and universal murder into law. They besieged, for years, your capital, and sent your bleeding armies, in rout, back here upon the very sanctuaries of your national power. Their pirates burned your unarmed commerce upon every sea. They carved the bones of your unburied heroes into ornaments, and drank from goblets made out of their skulls. They poisoned your fountains, put mines under your soldiers' prisons; organized bands whose leaders were concealed in your homes, and whose commissions ordered the torch and yellow fever to be carried to your cities, and to your women and children. They planned one universal bonfire of the North from Lake Ontario to the Missouri. They murdered by systems of starvation and exposure sixty thousand of your sons, as brave and heroic as ever martyrs were. They destroyed in the five years of horrid war another army so large that it would reach almost around the globe in marching columns; and then to give to the infernal drama a fitting close, and to concentrate into one crime all that is criminal in crime, and all that is detestable in barbarism, they killed the President of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I allude to these horrid events of the recent past not to revive frightful memories, or to bring back the impulses toward the perpetual severance of this people which they provoke. I allude to them to remind us how utter was the overthrow and obliteration of all government, divine and human; how total was the wreck of all constitutions and laws, political, civil, and international. I allude to them to condense their monstrous enormities of guilt into one crime, and to point the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] to it, and to tell him that was "the specific act."

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the combined forces of the Constitution and the Public Law, the obvious dictates of reason, justice, and common sense, and these enforced by the approval of repeated and unanimous judgments of the Supreme Court can settle for our own Government any principle of its law, then it is established that organized rebellions are not "States," and that these eleven distinct political treasons, which they organized into one, and called it "the confederate States," had no powers or rights as States of this Union, nor had the people thereof.

RESTORATION OF THE STATES.

If these States lost their powers and rights as States, by what authority and means are they restored? Is it accomplished by mere cessation of war and the determination of the rebel inhabitants to resume the powers of States; or is this Government entitled to take jurisdiction over the time and manner of their return?

I hold that the latter is the obvious truth.

Let it be admitted that these rebel districts may, without the assent of the United States, and without regard to the state of their loyalty, resume, at pleasure, all the powers of States—this Government having no jurisdiction to determine upon the question of their loyalty or the republican character of the new State governments—then we have this result.

There were, during the first years of the war, twenty-three rebel Senators, including Breckinridge and another. That was more than one third of the Senate. These twenty-three in the Senate are enough to deprive the United States of all power ever to make a treaty, or to expel a member from the Senate, or to remove from office by impeachment a rebel Secretary of War like Floyd, or a rebel Secretary of the Treasury like Cobb, or a rebel United States judge like Humphreys, or an imbecile President who thought secession unconstitutional, and its prevention equally unconstitutional, like Buchanan. How long, sir, could your Government survive with such a Senate, one third rebel? How long can you live deprived of these powers vital to every Government? Not a week, sir.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is precisely what might have occurred at any day during this rebellion if cessation of war entitles the revolted States to resume the powers of States in defiance of the will of this Government; and it is precisely what may occur to-day if these States be indeed disloyal yet at heart. If, after exhausting "all the resources of war" for the overthrow of the Government, and failing, it is, indeed, competent for them to abandon these resources, and resort to "the resources of statesmanship," and resume at once the high powers of States in the Union, without the assent of such Government, then there has not been an hour since the rebellion began, and the hour is not now, in which this Government has not literally been in the power and at the mercy of the rebellion.

Is it replied to what has been said in regard to the power for mischief of disloyal Senators in the case which I have stated, expel them? the reply is vain, because the same twenty-three who can prevent any impeachment or the formation of any treaty are also enough to prevent any expulsion under the Constitution.

Is it again replied, exclude these rebels from the Senate under the clause making each House the judge of the elections and qualifications of its members? the reply is obviously frivolous.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LE BLOND moved that the time be extended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Permit me to express my profound gratitude for this indulgence, on which I will not long trespass.

1. If under this clause you may exclude a Senator duly elected and qualified in every other respect and sense than that he comes from and is elected by disloyal States, then you yield the whole argument, and accord to this Government all the powers of self-preservation which I am insisting upon. The difference is that you find the power of self-protection under a clause by which each House is compelled to judge separately of the election and qualification of its members; and hence you occupy a position where you may have twenty-four States in the Union, in the Senate; thirty-four in the Union, in the House; and Heaven knows how many in the Union for electing a President.

2. If you reply, I will reject these twenty-three rebel Senators, not because their States can elect none, but because they are "rebels," in the case you put; the reply is vain. When Mason, Slidell, Davis, and Breckinridge last took their seats in your Senate, who knew, or could have proved, that they came there to embarrass and destroy your Government? Could either have been excluded from any known or ascertainable personal disqualification?

No, Mr. Chairman, there is no escape. If the United States has no power to decide, as a great and sovereign people acting through their Government, what shall be a "State" in her high Union, and cannot determine when, out of the wreck and ruin of old States, have been formed new republican States, based upon the only foundations upon which a republican State of this Union can be built, that of the general consent and loyalty of its people, then indeed is your Government not so much as "a rope of sand." It is a monster compelled by the organic law of its life to terminate that life by self-slaughter.

But, sir, such is not the law of its life. I have already shown that the President has discarded such conclusions. I now invoke the authority of the highest court of the Republic, and by that I show that it has decided this question also.

I state the effect of this decision in the language of a distinguished law author (see 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, sec. 133.) He says:

"It has been settled by adjudication that it is for the President and the two Houses of Congress to decide whether a particular government within a State is republican or not; and to recognize it if it is, and to refuse to recognize it if it is not, and the adjudication of the matter by them is conclusive and binds the courts and the nation. It is not therefore for any class of persons in a State which has ceased to have a government to set up a government of their own."

The language of the court is, (7 Howard, 42 and 43:)

"Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide which government 'of the two set up in Rhode Island' is the established one, for as the United States guarantees to each State a republican government, Congress must necessarily determine what government is established in a State before it can decide whether it is republican or not. When the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union the authority of the government under which they are appointed is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the Government."

"Undoubtedly a military government established as the permanent government of the State, would not be a republican government, and it would be the duty of Congress to overthrow it."

Mr. Chairman, here I must close.

If it is asked me now, granting your position that these States in revolt ceased to have any powers of government in the Union, still have not new ones been reorganized safe and fit to resume these high powers? I answer, sir, the question, "is it safe, and are they fit," are the stupendous facts now on trial by the American Congress. It was the whole end of the feeble argument which I have concluded to vindicate my Government's power to take jurisdiction of this inquest and hold this trial.

But if I am demanded by what standard of fitness, and what guarantees for safety, Congress shall decide these great facts now on trial, it will serve all the purposes of this argument and this hour to reply that in the true and high sense and spirit of the memorable words of the President of the United States I find a fitting answer. He says:

"No State can be regarded as thoroughly organized, which has not adopted irreversible guarantees for the rights of the freedmen."

Mr. Chairman, let this noble utterance—"irreversible guarantees for the rights" of American citizens of every race and condition—be written with pen of iron and point of diamond in your Constitution. Let it thus be made "irreversible" indeed, by the action of the State, in the only way it can be made irreversible; and then, to establish this and every other guarantee of the Constitution upon the only sure foundation of a free republic—the equality of the people and of the States—make, by the same organic law, every elector in the Union absolutely equal in his right of representation in that renovated Union, and I am content.

Let the revolted States base their republican State governments upon a general and sincere loyalty of the people and come to us under the guarantees of this renewed Union, and we hail their coming and the hour that brings them.

If you ask again, "Suppose such general loyalty should never reappear, shall they be dependencies forever?"

Sir, convince me that the case is supposable, then with deepest sorrow I answer—FOREVER!

Mr. DEMING obtained the floor, and moved that the committee arise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. DEMING, (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. C. B. BOXTON, Chaplain to the House of Representatives.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CHIEF CLERK OF THE SENATE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. FOOT. I offer a resolution which, as it pertains to completing the organization of the Senate, will take precedence, and I ask that it may be acted upon at the present time.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That William J. McDonald be, and he is hereby, appointed Chief Clerk, in the place of William Hickey, deceased.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer a petition from clerks in the Department of State, and signed by all of them, in which they set forth, that owing to the increased expense of living and the depreciation of the currency, they find it difficult to live on the salaries which they have been allowed heretofore; that last year there was an additional compensation granted to the clerks in the Treasury Department; that they have not shared the benefit of any such appropriation; and they now ask Congress to make an additional compensation to them. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a memorial from the National Normal School Association, held at Harrisburg in August, 1865, in which they set forth the educational necessities of the States recently devastated by war; that there are some two million five hundred thousand persons in those States at this moment actually requiring education; and that, at the very lowest calculation, there ought to be now fifty thousand new teachers; and they conclude by asking Congress to furnish assistance to those States out of the public lands for the benefit of education. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am requested to present the petition of James Crutchett, of the city of Washington, who states that a very valuable property of his was taken possession of by the Government in July, 1861, was held by it up to the close of the war, and perhaps is held by it still, and that he has received only some fifty dollars per month, which he received under protest, being without any means of support. I ask that this petition may be referred to the Committee on Claims. A petition of the same purport was presented at the last session, and I ask that the papers in that case be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, there having been no adverse report, and referred to the same committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference suggested by the Senator, of this petition, will be made if there be no objection, and an order to refer the papers named will also be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I present a memorial of the president and directors of the Union Merchants' Exchange of the city of St. Louis, Missouri, praying that Congress cause to be built and maintained on the Mississippi river and its tributaries snag boats, to remove wrecks, logs, and rocks from the main channels of those streams; that it provide to fell timber on falling-in banks, to improve by dam and lock, or otherwise, the rapids of the Mississippi river, to improve Grand Chain on the Ohio river, and to make such other improvements in those streams as to render navigation thereon more safe and expeditious. The memorial represents the number of registered steamboats on the western rivers to be nine hundred and ten, with a carrying capacity of two hundred and ninety-two thousand one hundred and forty-four tons, and valued at $24,556,600. The imports into St. Louis, chiefly by river, during the year 1865, amounted in value to $235,873,875. The imports into Cincinnati during the same period amounted to $312,300,074; those into Louisville, Kentucky, to $100,791,968. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COWAN presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the revenue laws as applied to internal taxation and duties on imports may be so adjusted as to afford the amplest protection to the labor and industry of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of George Ashley, administrator of Samuel Holgate, deceased, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 51) to incorporate the Potomac Navigation and Transportation Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT PARIS.

Mr. SUMNER. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 28) in relation to the Industrial Exposition at Paris, France, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass, and if there is no objection to it, I should like to have it considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will require unanimous consent to consider the resolution to-day. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Whereas the United States have been invited by the Government of France to take part in a universal exposition of the productions of agriculture, manufactures, and the fine arts, to be held in Paris, in the year 1867;

Resolved, &c., That said invitation is accepted.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the proceedings heretofore adopted by the Secretary of State in relation to the said exposition, as set forth in his report and accompanying documents concerning that subject, transmitted to both Houses of Congress with the President's message of the 11th instant, are approved.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the general agent for the said exposition at New York be authorized to employ such clerks as may be necessary to enable him to fulfill the requirements of the regulations of the imperial commission, not to exceed four in number, one of whom shall receive compensation at the rate of $1,800 per annum, one at $1,600, and two at $1,400.

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and is hereby, authorized and requested to prescribe such general regulations concerning the conduct of the business relating to the part to be taken by the United States in the exposition as may be proper.

Mr. CLARK. I think the resolution had better lie over. That second section is very indefinite; at least it will require some attention before we act upon the resolution. I think it had better lie over one day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to the Senator that it has already passed the House, and the desire of the Administration was that it should be expedited.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the fact that the resolution has passed the House of Representatives does not give me any information about the second section, which is very indefinite.

Mr. SUMNER. I am willing to make any explanation the Senator may desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over under the rule.

KIDNAPPING OF FREEDMEN.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution of inquiry, and ask for its present consideration:

Whereas it is reported that persons declared free by the proclamation of emancipation and by the recent amendment of the Constitution are now kidnapped and transported to Cuba and Brazil to be held as slaves, and that in this way a new slave trade has been commenced on our southern coast: Therefore,
Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire if any further legislation is needed to prevent the kidnapping of freedmen and the revival of the slave trade on our southern coast.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. Before the vote is taken I desire to state some of the information which has come to my possession. I have in my hands a letter from Alabama, from which I will read a short extract, as follows:

"Another big trade is going on; that of running negroes to Cuba and Brazil. They are running through the country dressed in Yankee clothes, hiring men, giving them any price they ask, to make turpentine on the bay, sometimes on the rivers, sometimes to make sugar. They get them on the cars. Of course the negro don't know where he is going. They get him to the bay and tell him to go on the steamer to go around the coast, and away goes poor Cuffee to slavery again. They are just cleaning out this section of the country of the likeliest men and women in it. Federal officers are mixed up in it, too."

Mr. JOHNSON. Who writes the letter? Give the name of the writer.

Mr. SUMNER. It is from a person in Alabama, whose name I am requested not to communicate; but the gentleman is well known to members of the other House. I have also a letter from the district judge of Florida—his name is well known and will be found in the official lists of the country—communicating to me a letter which he has received from a person well known to him, and for whom he vouches, in Florida, dated December 14, 1865, from which I read a brief extract:

"I am advised that certain parties here intend to make a business of importing negroes into Cuba. It is said that there has gone two vessel-loads of them already. Titus & Co. have bought a steamer for the ostensible purpose of carrying fish from Indian river to Charleston, but most people think that his will be carried the other way. There have been more gunboats ordered down in that region to look out for the fish-mongers."

Here are two letters from different States, Alabama and Florida. Add to these verbal communications which I have received during the last week from Texas, from Louisiana, and from Mississippi, three additional States, all to the same effect, that in each of those States a system of kidnapping has already been commenced, and a new slave trade on that coast started. I do not know that the laws on our statute-book are sufficient to meet this untold enormity. I desire that our committee, in which we have such confidence, should apply themselves to it and see if there is any remedy for this terrible crime. I desire, also, that every branch of the Government should do its duty in this connection; that the Department of State should address all its agents in Cuba and in Brazil, requiring them to look after the liberty of these people, to which we are pledged; that the Navy Department should give proper instructions to our cruisers; that the War Department should give proper instructions to our troops in that region; and that the President himself should take notice of this terrible crime, and should see to it that sufficient troops are there.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I think it altogether probable that the Yankees have reopened the slave trade. I do not doubt at all that they have done it, or that they will do it if they can make money by it. I am very anxious myself that it shall be suppressed. I hope the motion of the gentleman will prevail.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOSIAH O. ARMES.

Mr. WILSON. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 16) for the relief of Josiah O. Armes, which passed the Senate yesterday, and was sent to the House for concurrence.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to inquire the object of this order.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to have the bill back to allow a motion to be made to reconsider its passage. I want to consider the question involved in it; I believe it is the opening of a call of four or five hundred or a thousand million dollars from the Treasury. I am opposed to it for one, and opposed to any compensation whatever for damages done by our troops in the rebel States during the war.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know that I have any objection to the order if the Senate desire further to consider the matter. I do not wish that any bill should be passed involving any principle against the wish of the Senate.

The order was agreed to.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up Senate bill No. 23 for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 23) giving the consent of Congress to the annexation of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, formerly of the State of Virginia, to the State of West Virginia.

The Committee on Territories had reported the bill with an amendment to insert in the preamble, line fifty-six, before the word "Virginia," the word "West."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. The Committee on Territories, to whom this bill was referred, have had it under consideration, and if Senators have listened to the reading of the preamble of the bill they have found that it sets forth all the facts that are necessary to enable Congress to give its consent to the transfer of these counties. It has had the assent of the Legislatures of the States of Virginia and West Virginia. All that the Constitution seems to require has been complied with. All these facts were before the committee, were proved by documentary evidence of the highest character, so that there is no doubt about them. There was a little question before the committee, whether the assent of Congress in such a case was really necessary; but there is a clause in the Constitution, that every Senator will remember, which denies to any number of States the right to make compacts among themselves, except by the consent of Congress, and, viewing it in that light, thinking it might come under that clause, we thought at all events it would be best that it should have the assent of Congress, because it seemed to be a compact between the Legislatures of two States. They are satisfied with it, and I do not suppose anybody is dissatisfied with it. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. JOHNSON. The question the doubt as to which has been stated was submitted to me about a year or two ago, and I thought the assent of Congress had been granted. Of course there can be no objection to placing that beyond all doubt, as will be done if this bill is passed. I rise, therefore, not with a view to oppose the bill, but to ask that it be laid on the table until to-morrow, as I understand one of the Senators from Delaware not now present [Mr. RIDDLE] takes great interest in the question and desires to be heard upon it. I move, therefore, that it be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. I have no objection to that, if any Senator wants to look into it.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. WILSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to increase and fix the number of men in the regular Army.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. E. H. GRAY, Chaplain of the Senate. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WASHINGTON AND NEW YORK RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER announced the following select committee on military and postal railroad from Washington to New York, authorized yesterday:

Messrs. THADDEUS STEVENS of Pennsylvania, JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, FRANCIS THOMAS of Maryland, AUGUSTUS BRANDEGEE of Connecticut, JOHN F. STARR of New Jersey, JOSIAH B. GRINNELL of Iowa, and WILLIAM RADFORD of New York.

The SPEAKER proceeded, as the regular order of business, to call on committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Military Affairs.

LUCRETIA M. PERRY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred joint resolution of the House No. 24, for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of Nathaniel H. Perry, late purser in the United States Navy, reported the same with the recommendation that it pass.

Also an accompanying report; which was read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The facts are so succinctly stated in the report that I deem it unnecessary to add anything except to say, if it be quite parliamentary, that this identical joint resolution was recommended unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the last Congress, passed this House, and failed in the Senate for want of time to consider it. The Committee on Naval Affairs of this House have also reported it unanimously, and I trust it may pass. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a brief statement.

No objection was made.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a gentleman has inclosed to me an extract from a letter purporting to have been written by a member of this House. I desire to have it read at the Clerk's table.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"CONGRESSIONAL FACTS.—Mr. Baldwin, Representative from the eighth congressional district, in a letter to the Worcester Spy, thus corrects some of the errors:

"I notice that the telegraphic reporter of the Associated Press does not always give you intelligible accounts of what is said and done in Congress. He failed to show you that an effort to have certain Tennesseans allowed to come into the Hall of the House of Representatives, as claimants to seats, was defeated by a movement of Mr. Stevens to allow certain gentlemen to come into the hall as individuals. And he failed to give you a just account of a certain bill touching railroads, introduced by Mr. Washburne, of Illinois; in fact he or somebody else gave the press a false account of this bill. The representation was that the bill was designed to restrain the Camden and Amboy monopoly, while its real but undeclared purpose was to release the Illinois Central Railroad Company from its obligation to carry troops and military stores for the Government free of charge. That road has been constructed chiefly by means of the magnificent grant of lands by Congress; and now its owners seek to escape from the obligations of the contract made with the Government when they accepted those lands. The bill, which went through the House under the previous question without being understood, authorizes every railroad in the country to claim and receive compensation for carrying troops and military stores for the Government; thus not only releasing the Illinois Central Company, but actually rendering null and void the conditions under which similar grants of lands were made to other railroads. I think the bill will die in the Senate."

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I see my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BALDWIN] in the Hall, and I would like to know of him if he wrote that letter.

Mr. BALDWIN. I did certainly write that letter.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I hear the acknowledgment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I am somewhat astonished, I confess, that the gentleman, being a member of the House of Representatives, when he makes such a grave imputation upon members of this House should not do it here in the face of the House and of the country, instead of going off to his paper, where but one side can be heard. The statement made by that gentleman is somewhat extraordinary, and perhaps he may have to deal with some other gentleman besides myself, who must be included in the criticism of his letter.

The bill of which he says the "real but undeclared purpose" is to release the Illinois Central Railroad Company, &c., is precisely the same bill which was reported to this House by the Committee on the Judiciary of the last Congress, and which passed this House. It is the same bill word for word, and the country and the members of this House will be astonished to learn that the gentleman from Massachusetts voted for this bill upon its passage at the last Congress.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, to correct one statement. The bill to which he refers was not reported from the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I stand corrected. I supposed it was. I know a bill somewhat similar was reported from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DEMING. The bill to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes was not the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs reported a specific bill for the purpose of opening the Delaware and Raritan Bay Company railroad, and the bill which was passed was an amendment offered to that bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] which was the identical bill which was passed the other day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The statement of the gentleman from Connecticut is a true statement. The report was originally made from the Committee on Military Affairs, and the bill which finally passed was a substitute which I offered myself for the bill, not as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, but merely as a member of the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I was mistaken in that respect, Mr. Speaker. My recollection was that the bill came from the Committee on the Judiciary. I know that it was offered by my distinguished friend from Iowa, whose ability as a lawyer is only equalled by his vigilance and integrity as a legislator. The bill which the House passed the other day, as I understand it, was word for word the bill which passed the House on the 12th day of May, 1864, and which received the vote of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BALDWIN.] The gentleman from Iowa can now state to the House whether, when he introduced his amendment, it was his object to release the Illinois Central railroad. The gentleman from Iowa, who at the last session of Congress was the author of a proviso to the Army bill, providing that no payments should be made to the Illinois Central railroad, can answer to the House whether that was his purpose.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. SPALDING. As I voted for both bills, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether, in his judgment, this bill does have the effect to cut off the obligations of the Illinois Central railroad to carry the Government's troops, &c.?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will come to that in a moment. I say the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] can answer whether or not he had this purpose. And, sir, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who deserves the gratitude of the people for the stand which he has taken in regard to these monopolies, can state whether, when he introduced this bill, which the Committee on Commerce reported word for word, without any alteration, it was his "real but undeclared purpose" to release the Illinois Central railroad from its obligations. I would like my friend from Ohio who introduced this bill to say if he had any such purpose when he introduced it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I believe the origin of this bill, as embraced in the legislation of last Congress, has been accurately stated by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. DEMING,] my colleague upon the Military Committee of the last session. As he has stated, a local bill was introduced in relation to the Raritan and Delaware Bay railroad; and after a lengthy discussion in the House, an amendment was offered in the nature of a substitute, which was the exact bill I introduced in this House this session, with this exception: there is a difference of a few words in the preamble, taken from the preamble as amended in the Senate. The bill was introduced by me the first week of this session, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. That committee reported it back with a recommendation that it pass, having in view a general law concerning all such monopolies as the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company. And I stated distinctly, here in my place, when the bill was on its passage, that if any gentleman desired to enter into a full discussion of that bill, I was ready to do so then as I had done last session.

There was no sinister purpose, no concealed purpose, but an open and avowed purpose to break down all that class of grasping monopolies represented by the Camden and Amboy railroad; for there is a large brood of humble imitations of this ancient cormorant. If any gentleman knows of any other than an openly avowed purpose, he will do me a favor by declaring it. I regard the document read at the desk a grave and unwarranted imputation against those who voted for the bill, and particularly against those who drafted and introduced it.

Mr. BROOMALL. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] at what time was the offer made to allow a general and full discussion upon this bill? The reason I ask that question is that I myself wanted to discuss the bill and could not get permission to do it. I do not wonder that gentlemen are misconstrued when discussion is not allowed upon these important subjects.

Mr. GARFIELD. The time when that offer was made by me was when the bill was on its passage. I expressed my entire willingness to postpone it to a day certain, so as to allow discussion, or to take the vote on it then. I see no room for misconception in the proceeding.

Mr. BROOMALL. The previous question was called.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Yes, I called the previous question myself.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I beg leave to state that when the bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, after listening to the discussion that occurred on that occasion it seemed to me that the case, as presented by that bill, would be looked upon by the country as a mere picking up of a quarrel between two railway corporations in the State of New Jersey, for adjustment in the Congress of the United States. It seemed to me that the action proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs in the bill reported by them was objectionable in that respect, and for the purpose of avoiding that objection, and of applying a general principle to all railway interests and commerce in the United States, I submitted a substitute for the bill reported by the committee, which substitute was finally approved by the committee, adopted, and passed. I certainly had no intention, either open or concealed, public or private, either made known or kept within my own mind, of releasing the Illinois Central Railroad Company or any other railroad company from their obligations to the Government of the United States embraced in any law concerning them, and I think my action in relation to the appropriations to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has referred, during the Thirty-Eighth Congress, gives sufficient evidence that I had no intention of releasing the Illinois Central Railroad Company from any obligation resting upon it. Instead of having any such intention, it will be remembered by every member of the present House who was a member of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, that I stood out with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] and several others, until almost the very last hour of the session, in insisting that no part of the money embraced in the Army appropriation bill should be paid to the Illinois Central Railroad Company for transportation of troops, supplies, or munitions of war.

And more than that. I not only insisted upon applying that provision to that railroad company, but also to all the railway companies within my own State. And my policy, or the propriety of my course in that regard, was called in question by my colleagues from Iowa, who thought I was too severe instead of being too liberal in regard to those railways; that I was crippling rather than strengthening the railway corporations of my own State by insisting on an observance of the provisions of the grants of land to them as I understood them. And if the language of this bill, by any system of construction, can be made to sustain the views given by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BALDWIN] in the communication which has been read at the Clerk's desk, it certainly falls very far short of my intention. But I certainly do not now think the bill will bear the construction he puts upon it. Whatever the construction may be, I know this—my intention was entirely different from that which has been attributed to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] and, I suppose, by implication, to myself, as I was connected with the preparation of the bill as it finally passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts has not only to answer to these gentlemen, but he has to answer to his distinguished colleague in the Senate of the United States, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] who was the champion of this very bill in the Senate, making a speech, I believe, in its behalf. The gentleman from Massachusetts can settle with that Senator whether, in seeking to do what he professed to be trying to accomplish, his "real but undeclared purpose" was to relieve the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

Let me remark further, sir, that when the gentleman from Massachusetts says, in the article which has been read, that "he, or somebody else, gave the press a false account of this bill," if the gentleman referred to me his assertion was unwarranted and insolent. Besides the question which the gentleman must settle with his colleague, he must settle with himself this question: "Was it your purpose, when you voted for this bill on the 12th of May, 1864, to release the Illinois Central Railroad Company?" There might, perhaps, be some color for such a supposition so far as regards the gentleman from Massachusetts; but I think that as to myself, I will be exonerated from any such purpose by gentlemen who were members of the last Congress, and thus had an opportunity to observe my course on this subject. They know that I strove with all my power to obtain a declaration by Congress against the impudent and stupendous robbery of the public Treasury of more than a half million dollars by the Illinois Central Railroad Company. Sir, as gentlemen know, I resisted to the last the efforts of that company; I fought it at every step. And I cannot conceive what could have induced the gentleman, with his knowledge of that fact, (because he must have known it,) to make such a statement. I am certain that I have given him no occasion for doing so. And let the House understand that, while I was thus struggling, the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the very pinch of the game, left us and went over to the enemy, and voted with the friends of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. Yet he now goes before his constituents, in a newspaper article, giving an entirely erroneous view in regard to this whole matter.

Now, sir, one word with regard to the construction of the bill. Sir, it never occurred to me, it never occurred to any member of the Committee on Commerce, as it never occurred to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] that such a construction as that suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts could be given to the bill. I have not examined the subject closely, but I do not believe the bill is susceptible of such a construction. If I had imagined it to be capable of any such construction I would never, under any circumstances, have given the measure my assent; and now, if any respectable lawyer believes it can by possibility be construed in such a way, I would avoid any question by using my efforts to secure an amendment of the bill in the Senate. With these remarks, I leave the subject.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. SPALDING. It has been suggested to me that the stock of the Illinois Central Railroad Company has risen seventeen per cent. since the passage of that bill. Is that true?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. SPALDING. I do not. I mentioned the matter only because it has been suggested to me.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, in writing that letter, I certainly had no purpose to make any imputation against the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] The mention of his name was incidental. Certainly I did not intend to allude to him in the remark that some one had communicated to the press a false view of the bill. But, Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further, I ask that the Clerk read the bill as passed by this House.

The SPEAKER. The bill which passed the House is in the possession of the Senate; it is not upon the files of the House. The Chair, however, will send to the Clerk's office and obtain the original manuscript from which the bill sent to the Senate was engrossed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, communicated the following extract from its Journal:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 9, 1866.

Ordered, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate bill S. No. 16, for the relief of Josiah O. Armes, which passed the Senate, and was yesterday sent to the House for concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be returned, as requested.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—AGAIN.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that from the very bill itself it will appear the representation I made is the correct one; and in order that that may be seen, I now ask that the Clerk shall read the bill that was passed by this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the bill, and as soon as the original copy is procured from the files of the House, it will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States.

Whereas the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress, in express terms, the power to regulate commerce among the several States, to establish post roads, and to raise and support armies: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That every railroad company in the United States whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, be and is hereby authorized to carry upon and over its road, connections, boats, bridges, and ferries, all passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, freight, and property on their way from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I exonerate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] from any complicity in any effort to impose upon the House or the public, as he was consistently opposed to the claims of that road in the last Congress. I exonerate him from any such purpose as that which I suppose to be in this bill. But plainly by the very terms of the bill itself it does release, not only the Illinois Central railroad from the conditions of its contracts with the Government, but every other road from similar conditions where similar land grants have been made. There are nine other States in which I believe similar land grants have been made and similar conditions made with the several railroad companies, and all these contracts are nullified by the effect of this bill, for it says in express terms that they shall receive compensation for carrying Government troops and supplies.

Now, when this bill was before the House, I sought an opportunity to make the statement that has been read from my letter, and suggest or propose an amendment; but, after a few words had been spoken by one or two gentlemen, the previous question was insisted on, and I found it impossible to do so. The previous question was called and seconded, and nothing could be said to show what seemed to be a great defect in the bill. I would have suggested an amendment to provide for that defect if I could have had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me, I will ask him a question. I would like to know whether he understood that to be the meaning of the bill when he voted for it at the last session of Congress?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, we are now and then compelled to vote some things under the demand for the previous question without being able to understand them. It may have been, too, in this case, as in many others, that in striking a blow in one direction we may have overlooked another effect of it. In straining at a gnat we may sometimes unconsciously swallow a very big camel. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BALDWIN. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I voted for this bill, and I did so under the decided impression at the time that it was leveled against an unjust corporation; and I had no purpose, dream, or imagination that it could be so construed as to release from already subsisting obligations the Illinois Central railroad, or any other railroad corporation of the United States. But after it passed through this House I was amazed and astounded that such a question was raised. To my mind it is plausible from the language of the bill. I felt then, and I take occasion to say now, that it was improper to report a bill and to press it through the House under the operation of the previous question, cutting off all debate and that deliberate consideration which its importance demanded. And I am under the impression now that the bill ought to have been guarded with a proviso excluding in express terms, and settling beyond judicial question, the question now raised—to preclude all operation of the bill from releasing already incurred obligations of the Illinois Central or any other railroad.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add except to repeat that I never intended to charge anything against the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.] I was speaking, in the letter referred to, about the reporter of the Associated Press; and I said that in reporting the proceedings by which certain gentlemen from Tennessee were admitted to the courtesies of this floor he failed to state the case so as to show precisely what was done; in fact, that his report misled the public by omitting some of the votes. Then I proceeded to refer to the bill under discussion, without intending to charge anything against the gentleman from Illinois. The mention of his name was accidental. If it appears that any charge is made, I disavow and withdraw it entirely.

But so far as relates to the representation against the bill, I insist now that the bill does have that effect; and competent lawyers whom I have consulted, and who are impartial in their position with regard to the matter, take the same view of it, without one exception.

It did seem to me at that time, Mr. Speaker, that if we could have had that bill duly considered before the House, and everything presented that occurred to members which was pertinent to this point, we should have had the bill passed by the House in very much better form. It was certainly very improper—we do act sometimes very improperly on important questions here under the operation of the previous question, and I hope we may reform in that respect.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will say that I am entirely satisfied with the explanation he has made so far as concerns myself.

But the point is not in relation to construction. There may be differences of opinion in regard to the construction which may be given to this clause. The point was, the statement in the gentleman's letter that it was the "real but undeclared purpose of the bill" to do that. Now, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts must be entirely satisfied that there was no real purpose of that kind—that it was not the intention, as stated, to pass a bill for the purpose of relieving the Illinois Central railroad. I am glad that the gentleman has done justice in that regard. And I am glad to hear so general an expression of the sentiment of this House on that question. It was not settled at the last session—it is yet to be settled—whether the United States will permit toward a million dollars to go from the Treasury of the United States, against law and justice, into the coffers of that monstrous monopoly, the Illinois Central railroad, which is crushing out the vitals of the people of Illinois.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I venture to make a suggestion, if it be in order, that the Clerk of the House be directed to ask the Senate to return the bill. I think it was passed under some misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent.

No objection being made, it was ordered that the Clerk be directed to ask the Senate to return the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I desired to have this bill brought back because of the rapid manner in which that bill was put through. Of course the House well knows that the State of New Jersey is particularly interested in this bill. I got up here before the House, and was permitted by the indulgence of the chairman who reported the bill to make a few remarks—about five minutes in length—and was then choked off. And to show the precipitate manner in which bills have been passed through under the previous question, in a few minutes afterward an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was passed here without debate. The amendment was passed within thirty minutes after the proposition was made. I think these proceedings with regard to this bill ought to teach the members of the House a lesson, namely, that on grave and important matters the minority of the House ought at least to be heard. Of course our votes on bills of this character, or any other, without the assistance of the other side, can have but little force; but we at least ask an opportunity on questions that interest the people of the whole country to be heard. And I have no doubt whatever, if that bill could have been discussed, that this difficulty which is now perceived would have been seen then, and we would not have passed the bill in the shape in which it was done. And although I am not here to charge complicity upon any member of the House in regard to this bill, I have no doubt that the outside lobby who got it up—the men that usually do the mischief—in getting such legislation through as this understand the real object sought, that it was not only to strike a blow at the State of New Jersey, but also for the purpose of relieving this railroad in Illinois from a liability which it justly incurred.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand the gentleman to say that some outside influence was brought to change the form of this bill. Does he insinuate by that that the Camden and Amboy people have managed it so as to turn it off upon the Illinois Central railroad?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir. The people of New Jersey had no idea of legislation of this kind up to the hour that it took place, and they expected to make opposition, and that opposition would have been confined not to one party in the State. It pervades the whole State. Every member of this House voted against it. The State of New Jersey would lose by such an act $200,000 annually in taxes now paid by the Camden and Amboy railroad. I was not permitted to explain and show the reasons which they desired to urge against its passage.

That is the reason why we protest against this kind of action on measures of this kind, and entreat that when members ask to be heard the only true way to arrive at a proper consideration is to allow the matter to be discussed, that the country may know and members may know what the real objections to the measures are. No man can be expected, when a bill is brought up in this hasty manner, and when he is unacquainted with its merits, to be able at once to arrive at a conclusion how to vote. Bills are run through by caucus machinery in such manner as to take members by surprise. They cannot give an intelligent vote so as to be able to make a satisfactory report to their constituency when legislation is carried on in this manner. It is a pleasure to me to see a disposition upon the part of the majority of this House to give the minority some rights, and I trust that in future when questions of this character, or any other, come up we may have an opportunity to discuss them.

Mr. HALE. I ask if there is any question before the House.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object to any further remarks.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution germane to the present matter. I ask that it be reported for information.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That the previous question was designed as a means of reasonable limitation of debate, and not for the entire suppression thereof, and that, therefore, a regard both for the public interests and the rights of minorities require that no measure involving important questions of principle and policy ought to pass the House without a reasonable opportunity for debate.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to that resolution. The previous question is only ordered by a majority.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say one word in regard to a remark of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. DAVIS. It is by way of personal explanation.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The SPEAKER then resumed the call of committees for reports.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. I desire to state the reasons for the action of the committee.

It is a memorial asking that the statute of limitations may be so amended as to suspend its action during the time of the existence of the rebellion, in order that citizens of the loyal States may not be barred of their right of action against debtors residing within the rebellious States.

During the Thirty-Eighth Congress I reported a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, which passed both Houses and is now the law, and which read as follows:

"That whenever, during the existence of the present rebellion, any action, civil or criminal, shall accrue against any person who, by reason of resistance to the execution of the laws of the United States, or the interruption of the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, cannot be served with process for the commencement of such action, or the arrest of such person; or whenever, after such action, civil or criminal, shall have accrued, such person cannot, by reason of such resistance of the laws, or such interruption of judicial proceedings, be arrested or served with process for the commencement of the action, the time during which such person shall be beyond the reach of legal process shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited by law for the commencement of such action."

In the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary, this act covers the ground embraced in this memorial of the Chamber of Commerce so far as Congress has the power to respond to the prayer of the memorialists.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to state to the House what, in his opinion, is the effect of the statute which he has read in staying or keeping alive remedies in the State courts of the rebellious States in cases between citizens of the State of New York, for example, and citizens residing in those States. I have my own views about it, and I doubt not he has his.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The committee are of opinion that the latter part of this statute is as broad as congressional enactments could provide.

Mr. CONKLING. How broad is it? What is the effect of it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The language of the statute gives it better than any construction I can give:

"The time during which such person shall so be beyond the reach of legal process shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited by law for the commencement of such action."

The point, I believe, to which the gentleman seeks to direct my attention is this: whether this statute will prevent the operation of the statutes of limitation of the States in relation to actions commenced in the State courts. I am not prepared to say that it will go that far, nor was the committee prepared to say that we could provide by law that the statute of limitation in a State could be suspended in its operation upon actions brought in the State courts by congressional action.

The remedy which seemed to be sought by the memorialists was this: that citizens residing, for instance, in the State of New York, having claims against persons residing in the State of South Carolina might have their remedy in the courts of the United States without being barred by the statute of limitation in force during the existence of the rebellion. In other words, they want the statute of limitations suspended during the period of the rebellion. We think the law now does this.

We did not specially consider the question as to the power of Congress to suspend the statutes of limitation of the particular States and prevent their operation upon actions brought in the State courts as distinguished from the courts of the United States held within those States. I think, however, and in this the committee concur, that where the action was brought in a United States court, this statute is broad enough to save the remedy, and reaches as far as we may safely go.

I have merely called the attention of the House to this act for the purpose of calling the attention of the country to the existence of the statute which I have read and which seems not to have been very generally noticed. I have nothing further to add; and I now move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for reports having been concluded, the next business in order is resuming the call of States for resolutions, beginning with the State of Pennsylvania.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. BROOMALL. I submit the following resolution, and call for the previous question upon its adoption:

Resolved, 1. That the termination of the recent civil war has left the inhabitants of the territory reclaimed from the late usurpation in the condition of a conquered people, and without political rights.

2. That as a legitimate consequence the relation of master and slave among them is destroyed, and that it is not within the province of civil law ever to revive it.

3. That the future political condition of these people must be fixed by the supreme power of the conqueror: and that the effect of amnesty proclamations and pardons is to relieve individuals from punishment for crime, not to confer upon them political rights.

4. That it is not the interest of the Government that these people shall remain in their present unorganized condition longer than is necessary for their own good and the good of the country.

5. That Congress should confer upon them the necessary power to form their own State governments and local institutions, but that this cannot be done until the rights of those among them, of whatever caste or color, who remained always true to their allegiance, are effectually protected and guaranteed.

6. That it is the paramount duty of the Government to guard the interests of all within the conquered territory who rendered no willing aid or comfort to the public enemy; and if this cannot otherwise be done, Congress should organize State governments composed of these alone, and forever exclude from all political power the active and willing participants in the late usurpation.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the subject embraced in this resolution relates to the question of reconstruction, and it should therefore be referred without debate to the joint committee upon that subject.

Mr. GRINNELL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROOMALL] to permit this resolution to be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction. It embraces different propositions which, I think, should be considered by that committee.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire of the Chair whether, should the previous question be seconded, a division of the question can be demanded, in order to have a separate vote on each branch of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It can be divided. But the Chair will state that he sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] This resolution relates so evidently to the subject of representation, that it will be referred, under the rule, to the joint committee on reconstruction without debate.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved that the resolution be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President was received by Mr. WILLIAM MOORE, his Private Secretary.

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Military Committee be instructed to inquire into the present condition of the property known as "Arlington Heights," and the expediency of converting said property into a house for disabled and wounded soldiers of the last war, with a view of establishing an invalid corps for the purpose of manufacturing such stores, &c., as may be required by the Army and Navy of the United States.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, submitted sundry papers concerning the election of Representative from the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

THE SO-CALLED EMPIRE OF MEXICO.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, with the accompanying papers.

The message was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 18th ultimo, requesting information in regard to steps taken by the so-called Emperor of Mexico, or by any European Power, to obtain from the United States a recognition of the so-called empire of Mexico, and what action has been taken in the premises by the Government of the United States, I transmit a report from the acting Secretary of State, and the papers by which it is accompanied.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, January 5, 1866.

The message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POLICY OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. VOORHEES. As the morning hour has expired, I call up the resolutions submitted by me before the recess, and postponed to this day after the morning hour.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President of the United States, delivered at the opening of the present Congress, is regarded by this body as an able, judicious, and patriotic State paper.

Resolved, That the principles therein advocated for the restoration of the Union are the safest and most practicable that can now be applied to our disordered domestic affairs.

Resolved, That no States or number of States confederated together can in any manner under their connection with the Federal Union, except by a total subversion of our present system of government; and that the President in enunciating this doctrine in his late message has but given expression to the sentiments of all those who deny the right or power of a State to secede.

Resolved, That the President is entitled to the thanks of Congress and the country for his faithful, wise, and successful efforts to restore civil government, law, and order to those States whose citizens were lately in insurrection against the Federal authority; and we hereby pledge ourselves to aid, assist, and uphold him in his policy which he has adopted to give harmony, peace, and union to the country.

Mr. STEVENS. I raise the point of order that these resolutions relate to reconstruction, and therefore must go to the joint committee on that subject without debate.

The SPEAKER. The point is taken entirely too late, in the opinion of the Chair. These resolutions were introduced before the late recess, were considered by the House, and then were postponed without objection to this day, after the morning hour.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, I arise today to discuss the annual message of the President. In doing so, I am aware that to the majority on this floor I may appear as a meddler in a family concern. It would seem from the remarks of members here, and the comments of the press in various quarters, that the right to approve or disapprove the policy of the Executive is the exclusive monopoly of the two now belligerent wings of the dominant party. Indeed, I believe it is a new and very dangerous phase of disloyalty for one of the minority to have any opinion at all on the subject. I cannot, however, accept this position of silence and inactivity. Not that I wish to bring any reinforcements which are not sought to the aid of either of the jarring factions on the opposite side of the Chamber, but as a citizen loving my country, and as the Representative of a large and enlightened constituency, it is my duty and my right here to advocate what in my sight seems best as a remedy for the evils which surround us. And if this sense of public duty leads me to adopt and defend the policy of the Executive, what offense can it be to his real or pretended friends in this body? How indignant we were in the days of our childhood over that dog in the manger, who would neither enjoy the comforts and blessings of life himself, nor let anybody else do so! And here in our mature manhood we behold the same principle of action adopted by a great party. It refuses to indorse the President of its own election, and growls and fiercely shows its teeth if any one else proposes to perform that neglected duty.

Allow me, sir, another preliminary observation. I have no design on this occasion to violate the divine injunction which says, "Thou shalt not steal." A few days ago, when I introduced the very brief and very plain resolutions now under consideration, it was instantly heralded over the country, and especially in the journal conducted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND,] that I had attempted to "steal the President."

Sir, these hungry and sordid spirits pay a poorer compliment to the President than even they do to me, and I will hasten to quiet their miserable apprehensions. It is no part of my purpose to attempt to step between them and the flesh-pots of public patronage. I have no eye on the public crib at which they have fed so long and grown so fat. I do not covet their offices, their rich commissions, their unfathomable contracts, nor anything that is theirs. We of the minority have lived through storm and darkness and fiery persecutions without such assistance to our patriotism, and at this late day we shall not bend our knees because thrift may follow fawning. Our action will be independent, with no desire, like the adroit animal in the fable, to take advantage of the quarrel which now rages among the victors to snatch away the feast over which they are contending. For my part, as in the past, so in the future, I shall pursue what I conceive to be the right, indifferent alike to the allurements of reward or the terrors of reproach.

And now, Mr. Speaker, what are the issues which are submitted to the country by the policy of the Executive as declared in his annual message? Are they new, strange, or sinister, that they should be received with indignation and alarm? Is it a document bristling with dangerous dogmas hitherto unheard of in the administration of the Government? Does it read like a wide and violent departure from the teachings of our earlier and happier days? Sir, it has been assailed in both ends of the Capitol by the ablest and oldest veterans of the Republican party, as if every line was leprous and every word filled with contagion and death. Indeed, prior to the meeting of Congress, as the policy of the President was developed in his treatment of the southern States, we beheld the indications of an organized conspiracy to assail him with the masked face of friendship but with the treacherous sword of Joab. The insidious kiss that betrays is neither new nor respectable in strategic warfare; and men and parties have often heretofore made kindly salutation, "How is it with thee, my brother?" when their poniard's point was seeking a vital spot under the fifth rib.

We heard during all the summer and fall the murmurs and mutterings of angry dissent, as each new development of the President's plan to restore the Government on its ancient foundations, as nearly as now possible, came before the country. And when my friend and colleague, the Speaker of this body, for whom I entertain none but feelings of personal kindness, came to this city as the acknowledged heir-apparent to the position which he now fills so well, what was his language to the public? Did he give the weight of his voice to the Administration? His words were carefully studied, and yet it would be hard to discover from that famous serenade speech that the Executive had done anything at all toward the pacification of the country. He laid down a policy for Congress, but as nearly as possible ignored the policy and even the existence of the President. His position was the sign and the forerunner of the celebrated select committee, created by the magic wand of the conscience-keeper of the majority, the able and veteran leader from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS]—that potent wand which has evoked from the vasty deep of political agitation more spirits of evil and malignant mischief than generations, I fear, will be able to exorcise and put down. By this movement the whole question of restoration, with entire forgetfulness of the labors and achievements of the Executive, was placed in commission, and intrusted to the keeping of a board of political trade at whose head stands one who asserts that the Union was destroyed by the war, and that it remains so to this day. By this movement we are called upon to transport ourselves back to the chaotic days of last April, and to take no note of time or events since then. We are asked to ravel to pieces all that the President has done and to commence the knitting process of reunion for ourselves. The healing principles of the Constitution are, in my judgment, rapidly doing the needed work of restoration, and yet we are at this stage of the process asked to break again the once fractured limbs, to tear agape the half closed wounds, and to cause the whole land to bleed afresh. Sir, I shall stand by the physician who is working the cure, as against that blind and fatal empiricism which first pronounces the patient dead and then commences giving medicine.

Let us indulge ourselves in a retrospect. Let us lift ourselves to a position which history will occupy some generations hence, and then ask and answer the question which is involved in the issue now made against the President because of his conduct and his policy. I am in no sense his partisan. I did not support him for the office which led to his present position. I dreaded the use he would make of power when he attained it. I feared the operations of a character which I had heard represented as strongly tenacious of a sense of personal injury which I knew he had suffered. But since the day on which he took the oath of office I have beheld the public magistrate, not the private man. And who ever, in all the tide of time, became the head of a great nation under circumstances more appalling to the stoutest heart and the most commanding intellect than those which surrounded him? A war whose tremendous blows had shaken both hemispheres had just closed, and night and chaos hovered over the face of the deep. Battles between brethren had been fought which dwarf and belittle the warlike exploits of all ages, and which startled the invisible world by the flight of disembodied spirits. The people and the States of the whole country, weary, blood-stained, and almost blind from the fury of the conflict, had paused upon an agreement to fight no more. But in that disastrous contest what ancient principles of the Government had escaped profanation? Who had stopped to count how much the object cost for which the wager of battle was joined? Laws, liberties, and constitutions had asserted themselves in vain. And I confess that, as I saw the fierce lightning which civil war engenders strike and shiver again and again the household gods of fireside liberty, and blast almost every sacred fane of American worship, I had my hours of absolute despair—not despair over the unity of our territorial boundaries, but that when those boundaries should be restored they would embrace nothing but the dead, cheerless, and cold ashes of the former bright and glowing fires of freedom. I shrank from the contemplation of a ruined Republic and a triumphant despotism with more unfeigned horror than I ever shrank from the contemplation of death and the grave. And when the sound of the last cannon died away on the sorrowful and stricken fields of Virginia and the Carolinas he who, at the head of affairs, would breathe into the expiring form of legal liberty the breath of life, and by his touch revive and erect again in form and substance the ancient body of the Republic, although bruised, maimed, and in parts defaced, and requiring time to renew its strength—that man, whoever he may be, and whatever may be his political views on other questions, is, in my eyes, the savior of his country.

Sir, history tells a melancholy story of usurpations at such periods. They are the opportunity of tyrants and mad, impracticable innovators. He who wishes to mount to imperial power on the ruins of civil liberty, or by a change in the form of the Government to carry out schemes of private hate or Utopian speculation, would embrace the month of April, 1865, in American history as the point from which to deal destruction. But starting from that point, what direction did the President pursue? There are many matters of minor detail for which subordinate officials are mainly responsible, which I might wish widely different, but I am now dealing with the main question of restoration. Upon his first utterance he gave notice of the doctrine, then as now, that the American Union had never been broken, and that its States had never ceased to exist. This gave assurance to the country at once that he was a conservative, and not a destructive, a restorer of an ancient order of things and not a destroyer in the name of progress and reform. How can I fail to support him in this position, when my own language, March 9, 1864, in the midst of the sound of arms, was as follows? I quote from a speech delivered by me in this House:

"The great leader of the Administration on this floor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] has deliberately here announced, after all our sacrifices, sorrows, and loss, that the Union of our fathers is dead, and that he who attempts its resurrection is a criminal instead of a patriot. He goes further, and admits all the seceded States have ever claimed—their nationality. They have sought in vain in all the four quarters of the earth for recognition. They find it at last at the hands of those who speak for the Administration on this floor.

"Sir, I deny this doctrine. I plant myself on the Constitution, which recognizes an unbroken Union. I shall stand there in every vicissitude of fortune, and if I fall it will be when the people themselves abandon their own Constitution. By the principles of this mighty instrument I expect finally a restoration of the union of the States. Every hour which the party in power prolongs its control of affairs postpones the auspicious day; but as I behold the future it will assuredly come. Material and indestructible interests unite every section except that which prospers on fanaticism. And I here to-day, in the spirit of one who expects and desires his posterity and theirs to live together in the ancient and honorable friendship of their fathers, warn the southern people not to look forward to separation and independence, but to embrace every opportunity for cooperation with the conservative men of the North, who will aid with their lives, if need be, to secure them all their rights and institutions as free and equal citizens of the United States."

This doctrine is the chief corner-stone of the message, and has invited the attack of the theoretical reform, but practical disunion. Shall I stop at this day and hour of American history to discuss the right or power of a State to secede? I never entertained such a principle, nor did even many of the principal leaders of the late attempt to establish the confederacy of the South. They asserted the right of revolution and used the organizations of State governments in aid of that movement. But who now requires an argument on this point? Do we not all understand and know that this theory of dead States is now proclaimed simply because its adoption would give better scope to ulterior designs of vengeance and revolutionary destruction? It is true that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has been consistent in his devotion to it when he stood almost if not quite alone; but that simply proves that he could foresee at a greater distance than his fellow-laborers the means which would be required to accomplish their party ends when the war ceased. He knows that "dead carcasses," in his own striking language, are more easily carved to pieces, torn limb from limb, and devoured by the hungry maw of confiscation than living States. The dead can make no protest when the mutilating knife is applied. Certain beasts of prey, we are told, prefer to find their quarry ready slain, in order to feast upon it in comfort and repose. And so the radical party of the country would find it easier far to make its unnatural banquet on the rights, privileges, laws, liberties, and property of the South by declaring at once that there is no living political community in all that wide region to exclaim against the enormity. Its reasoning on this point is that it is safer and less troublesome to rob a corpse than it is to pick the pockets of the living. This is the highwayman's doctrine of convenience, introduced here now as a party platform. It is more and worse. It is an assertion that the American Union itself is dead.

While it claims that the southern States have destroyed themselves, yet it admits that, like blind Samson of old, in their dying agonies they seized hold of the pillars and tore the temple in ruins to its very foundations, and that they in their desolation to-day are only a portion of the general wreck. It is notice to the world that the war to restore the Union was an utter failure—that the war is over and yet the Union is rent in twain. We have incurred a debt which would absorb for its payment now one fourth of all the taxable property in the United States. Blood has flown like the torrents of the mountains, and lives have been swept away like autumn leaves in a storm, and yet neither people nor States, according to the logic which assails the President, have been brought back into the Union to repay these stupendous sacrifices. But still further. In what attitude before the civilized nations does this pernicious heresy place the Federal Government? If we were waging war on an independent Power, a separate existing nation, how was it that we refused all negotiations for peace except upon the basis of its utter annihilation? Wars between different civilized Powers are made to repair injuries, to resent insults, or to reclaim rights which have been denied; but there is no law of nations which justifies one Government, because of its superior strength, in inflicting obliteration and murder upon its inferior neighbor. This doctrine is one of barbarism, in which the law of force is the law of right. Much pathetic eloquence and many bitter tears have attested the world's sympathy with Poland, with Hungary, and with poor, poor Ireland, and maledictions attend upon their destroyers; but with what curses of indignation would an enlightened posterity and an impartial history assail us for blotting out by sheer force of arms a nation of our own kindred, who simply desired to possess their own in peace and leave us to do the same! Sir, in every aspect the theory which now controls the majority of this House is fraught with death and disgrace to the Republic. I turn from its contemplation to a more cheerful theme. I will contrast against it the conduct and principles of the Executive, for which, I think, he deserves well at the hands of his countrymen.

What was the wish, the hope, the prayer of every heart not fatally bent on mischief, not an enemy to the human race, when the last of the southern forces laid down their arms? Was it that this bitter period of strife should be prolonged and the fires of hate and malice kept alive forever? Was it that at the close of such a hurricane, with the billows yet swelling in angry commotion around us, we were to start afresh upon the long voyage of political discovery and legislative piracy which the bold mariner from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and his radical followers now, like Viking robbers of the ancient seas, point out to us? Was it not rather that the vessel should be brought back and quietly and firmly anchored as nearly as possible at her old moorings? Was it not rather that the corner-stones, boundary lines, and landmarks of the fathers of the Republic should be traced out and restored? I here assert that when the President closed the temple of Janus, refused to go in search of new principles by which to administer the Government, and extended the hand of friendship and assistance to the crippled and bleeding though living, yes, living States of the South, he met the demands of the popular will and laid claims to the gratitude of the present and the future. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] says such a recognition of their existence coming from "a man of respectable standing is something worse than ridiculous." The American people to-day do not think so, nor will their posterity.

It is contended, however, that the Executive had no power to appoint provisional governors. There are those in my own party as well as in the other who assert that this was a usurpation. First allow me to observe that a usurpation, even if it be such, to restore, to build up, to give health and strength to the sick and prostrate, is far easier to be borne than a usurpation to crush and destroy. But I do not view the conduct of the President as a usurpation at all. By his oath he must enforce the laws. He found States without legal officers and unable to move forward in the channel of their duties. A State of this Union when the Federal laws are no longer obstructed cannot be in passive abeyance. It is an integral part of the Federal body, and if the body be sound there can be no paralysis among its members—they must have vitality; and in the performance of his duty the President used the best means in his power to revive and restore their lawful functions. And much more was I reconciled to the use of this power when I saw on whom the selections of the President fell. And I think, too, that with what I was pleased on this point my radical friends were equally displeased. I hailed such names as Sharkey, Perry, Johnson, and Parsons, and, indeed, all the provisional governors, as bright omens of a good administration, as harbingers of peace and happiness to the southern people, and of union, peace, and prosperity to the whole country. But then what a military governor, of South Carolina for instance, that idol of the radicals, General Butler, would have made! Ay, there is the rub. What fat, unctuous, juicy pickings have been lost to the faithful by this cruel policy of the President! What shoals of loyal, hungry sharks swimming around in these northern waters have been cheated out of their anticipated prey! All the wolves and jackals that wait till the battle is over in order to mangle the dead and the wounded snarled their disappointment and rage at the President, but will now open in a full chorus of joy over the delightful vision which arises before them from the formation of the committee of fifteen.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] saw fit to announce that the position of the President in regard to the southern States was "not an argument, but a mockery." I partly dissent. I think it is both. It is an unanswerable argument in behalf of the early and true principles of the Government, and it is also an overwhelming and consuming mockery of the bloody designs, avaricious hopes, and greedy expectations of all those who desired when the war was over to rule the people of the South without the restraint of law; to humiliate them with an iron rod; to confiscate their lands and buy them in at nominal prices; to change the proprietorship of the soil and drive into exile and destitution its present owners until a new population should take control and, by the aid of the enfranchised negro, plant a Puritan ascendancy all over the South; who here now unfurl the banner of "territorial condition," because all these consequences follow its triumph. Sir, this class has been mocked, and God and angels and all good men rejoice in their confusion. Their ascendancy in this land would create a pandemonium of discord and a carnival of all the dark and cruel spirits of hate and revenge for generations to come. The President had them in his mind when in combating the proposition of military governors for the South he says:

"The chief persons who would have followed in the train of the Army would have been dependents on the General Government, or men who expected profit from the miseries of their erring fellow-citizens."

But, Mr. Speaker, allow me to inquire whether this opposition to the Executive is not a new discovery, an afterthought, manufactured for a special purpose on the part of those who adhered to and upheld the late Administration of Mr. Lincoln in regard to the continued existence and vitality of the southern States during the late rebellion. Are they not estopped from this assault, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] says, "both by matter of record and matter in pais?" In more than a hundred ways and forms, by military orders, in his annual messages, instructions to our foreign ministers, in letters and speeches to his own countrymen, and especially by his numerous proclamations, the late Executive always and at all times recognized the enduring existence of all the States over which the American flag had ever floated. I quote a single passage from the proclamation of emancipation, which, in my judgment, was a usurpation of power, but had at least the merit of not attempting to abolish States:

"That on the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1863, all persons held as slaves within any State, or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom."

"That the Executive will, on the 1st day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof, respectively, shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such States shall have participated, shall, in the absence of strong countervailing testimony, be deemed conclusive evidence that such State, and the people thereof, are not then in rebellion against the United States."

This was written and promulgated after the passage of every ordinance of secession; when the party in rebellion occupied and held in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory; had declared their independence; had cast off their allegiance; had organized armies; had commenced hostilities against their former sovereign; and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his present followers uttered no dissent to its doctrines. It was the subject of indiscriminate praise from those very organs which now seek to blast and ruin the same policy in the hands of his successor. There is no escape here. The late chief of the great party of the North dealt with American States, the people whereof were in rebellion, and not with a foreign Power subject to conquest; and if his memory is sacred to his followers, they should not insult it by pronouncing his policy a delusion and a mockery ere his untimely tomb is fairly closed.

Sir, I am aware that many on the opposite side of the Chamber do not indorse the destructive theory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but who are nevertheless assisting to carry its results into practice. They deny his premises that the States are dead, but concur in his conclusion that they shall not be represented on this floor. To my mind their position is the worst of all. They embrace a consequence without a cause. They have reached an end which has no beginning. They are standing on a structure which has no foundation. While the premises of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are unsound, yet his logic is true. But those who refuse to follow him and yet deny representation, have neither premises nor logic. If the States are out of the Union of course their Representatives are strangers to us, but if they are in the Union what power can close these doors against them except the power of lawless, revolutionary force? "Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers." This is the language of the Federal Constitution. It also declares that "each State shall have at least one Representative." Are these States then "included within this Union?" If they are, how can we deny, in the very teeth of the Constitution, to receive their Representatives? What madness is this which proposes to govern the people of eleven American States, States "included within this Union," without representation? Where on this side of the ocean has been found such a monstrous principle of government? Its adoption would carry us back to the days of King George, and as fatally subvert liberty as if Cornwallis had triumphed on the plains of Yorktown.

But the advocates of this doctrine say that this phase of absolute despotism is only to last for a season; that these States are only to go unrepresented for a few years until guarantees, guarantees for the future, are obtained. Guarantees for the future! This vague term is another political convenience like that of "dead States." Under it each innovator, dreamer, and revolutionist throughout the land can demand and require the fulfillment of all his fantastic desires against the South before he is willing to admit her Representatives. It is the cloak for every higher-law purpose now abroad in the public mind. It is a well-filled arsenal from which to shower confiscation, negro suffrage, reapportionment, proscription of persons, and every other missile of torture that was ever leveled at an unfortunate people.

Sir, I deny that a State can be refused her representation for a single moment on such grounds. Peace and obedience to law are the only guarantees for the future which any Government can justly require of its citizens. Where is the power in the Constitution whereby anything more can be demanded? Or has that instrument become a dead letter to us because we have been four years in forcing others to obey it? If we are not released from it, let me see the section on the subject of guarantees which authorizes Congress to close its doors in the face of the representatives of the people until they sign deeds of political capitulation. It may be said that the President himself has required guarantees in his policy of restoration. Even if he did so, I do not understand that he proposed to make their refusal a pretext for violating the Constitution himself. But I have not regarded his advice to the South in the nature of this movement in Congress. On the great question of slavery I hold that the action of the southern States in adopting the constitutional amendment has been wise and beneficent. The system was destroyed already by the force of arms and the operations of war, but it is better for the future dignity and history of the nation that a fact accomplished of the utmost magnitude should have the sanction of fundamental law. It was a vast step, too, toward a speedy restoration, and that alone is a powerful appeal in favor of the counsel of the Executive and the action of the South.

One other subject has been much canvassed under this new-coined phrase of guarantees for the future. The war debt incurred by the southern States in their attempt to establish a confederacy has been shaken in the face of the northern people to incite them to a policy of distrust and severity. Everybody well knows, of course, that it will never be paid. All history tells us that the debt of a defeated revolution is always lost. The government that contracted it is no more, and the ruined and exhausted people gladly turn their backs on the dead and melancholy past and look forward to the future with new hopes, new ties, and a new destiny. As to the victor in arms ever assuming such a debt, no instance is known in the annals of mankind, and such an idea is not respectable outside of an asylum for the insane. I regarded, therefore, the war debt of the South as fit only for one use—the declamation of demagogues and the malign purposes of political agitators. Hence I voted a few days ago that it should be buried out of sight and out of mind in the most effective and conclusive manner. I did not do so because I wanted a guarantee on that subject, but simply because I wished to remove it as an obstacle in the pathway of reunion, and as a means of useless and pernicious discord in the future.

But again, as to the right of representation, immediate and without any other guarantee than obedience to the Constitution. I shall now prove that the refusal to admit the southern representatives arises from a sense of power and not of justice; that while the southern people were in arms no position of the kind was assumed by any department of the Government, and that harder terms are now tendered to a defeated than were held out to a defiant enemy. In the proclamation of the late Chief Magistrate, from which I have already quoted, he clearly and explicitly asserts the right of any State, whose people were then in hostility to the General Government, to be represented in the Federal Congress, and announces that he will consider such fact as an evidence that neither the State nor its people are any longer in rebellion. Where then was the guarantee doctrine? It had not yet been born. We were then wooing and courting representation because it suited our purposes to do so. We are now repelling it for the same reason. The great proclamation was then akin to the gospels of righteousness. Now I challenge the committee of fifteen to report in its favor. It is deserted in the house of its friends, and I am found defending the only healthy and legal spot in it. But, potent as it was considered, yet it was not the only expression that emanated from the high places of the last Administration, which confounds the philosophers of this new faith. On the 6th of February, 1863, Mr. Seward informed Europe and the civilized world that seats in Congress "are also vacant and inviting the Senators and Representatives of the discontented party who may be constitutionally sent there from the States involved in insurrection." Did these vacant seats invite the Representatives and Senators of a foreign nation with which we were waging a war for annihilation? Did the Secretary of State attach any other condition to the representation of the people then in arms against the Government than attaches to the representation of every other portion of the American people? He only asked that it might be constitutionally done, and this requirement is of universal application to the whole country. It means no more in Georgia than it does in New York; it means no more in Virginia than it does in Massachusetts. It interpolates nothing upon the practice of the Government under the Constitution from the hour of its birth down to the day on which an inquisition was sued out in this House, in the shape of a committee of fifteen, in order to discover some means of adopting the old British system of colonial bondage.

But, sir, it may, in answer to these citations, be said that it is not within the province of the executive department of the Government to determine the question of representation in the legislative department. But has not Congress itself made a record on this subject which it cannot ignore and which the majority dare not face? Has it not officially, over and over again, in both branches, assumed the very position which it now seeks with such flagrant assurance to repudiate? The cry is now that we must look to Congress for our policy of restoration. This place has suddenly become a citadel of wisdom, power, and dominion. It is a city of refuge, where all the disappointed spoilers, insane anarchists, bloody Jacobins, promoters of vengeance, disturbers of the peace, self-constituted saints who imagine themselves in partnership with the Almighty to assist Him in punishing the sins of the world, where law-breakers and revolutionists of every shade and color now flee to escape from the wise, successful, and constitutional policy of the President. "To your tents, O Israel!" was the ancient and legitimate cry of alarm. "Look to Congress, look to Congress!" now rings out on the air as a call to battle in behalf of chaos, disorder, and interminable woes. The populace of France, tossed in a tumultuous delirium of hate, drunken with blood, dethroning Deity and reverencing a harlot, shouted, "Look to the Assembly, look to the Assembly!" where the Mountain murdered the Girondists, and where Robespierre, Marat, and Saint Just planned, in the name of public virtue, the destruction of human life and of human society. But, sir, if we must "look to Congress," let me show the wistful gazers a picture of congressional action which will fill their hearts with dismay, and which Congress itself cannot to-day behold without feelings of humiliation and shame over its present position.

Did I not serve here in this Hall during the fury of the rebellion, when the flames of war scorched the very front of the heavens, with Representatives from the State of Louisiana? Were they not admitted to the "vacant seats" which invited their return by the very men who now stand like surly sentries at these doors and answer their hailing sign of entrance either with the response of "Dead States" or "Guartees?" Was Tennessee destroyed or were her people entitled to no voice here because of her ordinance of secession? Sir, her name was called here during more than half the period of the war, and the representatives of her people answered to their names in both ends of the Capitol. The gentleman who in vain sought even a recognition of his own existence in this body when the present Congress was organized, [Mr. MAYNARD,] was then here with the full sanction of the same political majority which now spurns him from the door of its caucus room, and drives him from the protection which the escutcheon of his glorious State, under the administration of law, affords its Representatives in Congress. Shall we now assert that at that time Tennessee was a portion of a foreign Government? Shall we then as the next step of supreme absurdity declare the President of the United States himself an unnaturalized foreigner, a captive to our lance and spear, entitled doubtless to kind treatment, but in no sense a citizen of the United States, inasmuch as he never expatriated himself from the alien and hostile province of Tennessee, and never acknowledged himself subdued to the embraces of the Federal flag as the symbol of a separate nationality? I am prepared to hear even this miserable libel on American institutions asserted. Nothing is allowed to stand in the way of fanaticism. Its purposes are inexorable, and its devotees often deem themselves in truth and honesty the philosophers of their age; but Frederick the Great made a wise observation when he said, "If I wanted to ruin one of my provinces I would make over its government to the philosophers." Their theories are always in advance of their times; and in practical sense and actual utility they meet neither the requirements of the past, present, or future. The philosophers of Congress at least contradict themselves at very short stages of progress, and give no evidence of either ability or consistency. Why, sir, the records of this body, as well as of the Senate, will show that Virginia, too—Virginia, whose fiery and lofty crest shone in the very front of the rebellion, whose plains were its battle-fields, and in whose soil so many of its heroes lie buried—was here as a State when the roar of her hostile cannon could be heard on Capitol hill. Those who claimed to be her representatives came and they were received. They were required to give no pledges then for the future good behavior of their constituents, nearly all of whom were obeying the orders of General Lee. Then they were to be trusted without guarantees; but now that peace has been restored, and there is not an armed hand in all her borders to dispute the Federal authority, her people are much more dangerous and the presence of their Representatives here would give a fatal blow to the public safety! Such is the miserable position to which the engineers of this new movement are reduced!

Mr. DEMING. Will my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] inform this House when he thinks the right to representation here from these States commenced? Did it commence at Antietam, at Gettysburg, or when did it commence?

Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer the question of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. DEMING.] But as my time is getting short, I trust I shall be excused from further interruption. My answer is, "Peace and obedience to law are the only guarantees for the future which any Government can require of its people." And when peace and obedience to law reign among any portion of the American people, I hold that they are entitled to representation here.

Mr. DEMING. Then I suppose it will be necessary for the gentleman to show that obedience to law exists at this time in the reclaimed territories?

Mr. VOORHEES. Undoubtedly. I think the President and General Grant have shown that fact.

But one step further in this congressional record. As if to forever settle the construction which should be placed upon the condition of the southern States, and their right to representation, Congress enacted and the President approved a law on the 4th of March, 1862, which I here read:

CHAP. XXXVI.—An act fixing the number of the House of Representatives from and after the third March, eighteen hundred and sixty-three.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the third day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, the number of members of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States shall be two hundred and forty-one; and the eight additional members shall be assigned one each to Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Vermont, and Rhode Island.

In order to obtain the number of two hundred and forty-one Representatives as contemplated by this law, every southern State whose citizens were in revolt must have been represented according to her population. What more can I do than to make this statement? What argument could add to its binding force? If men will repudiate to-day what they did yesterday, if they refuse to be bound by their own principles declared in the solemn form of a law, if the highest precedents of their own official action fall without force upon their ears, then, indeed, they are beyond the power of reason and callous to the reproach and derision of the world.

Sir, the most melancholy phase of corrupted and fallen human nature is its selfish tenacity to the low purposes of the hour. In their headlong pursuit it spurns the fixed principles and everlasting laws of the universe from its sordid pathway. It scoffs at wisdom that is "hoary and white with eld," and jeers the venerable experiences of ages if they arise as obstacles to its immediate gratification. Constitutions, laws, and sacred ordinances are lighter than cobwebs in the way of its consuming desires. Even the dread Jehovah, who made man and the code of divinity which claims his obedience, is but dimly remembered when the prize of the heart's dearest passion lies close and tempting to our hands. Our line of vision is on the level before us. We bow to the earth and worship its transient spoils, while the stars which sail over our heads and beckon us to celestial duties and betoken eternity, go unheeded in their grandeur. We hear the siren voice of the moment, but fail to catch the loftier harmony of the eternal spheres. Who has fathomed the dark and mysterious depths of his own motives? The rules of right rise or sink as they can be made subservient to our interests, our hopes, our loves, and our hates. The merchant prince of to-day adopts a new principle of trade from yesterday, because his harvest of profit will be richer and his chambers of wealth enlarged. The rulers and legislators of nations do the same. Napoleon worshipped with the faith of a Moslem at the Pyramids, when he dreamed of reviving and reigning on the throne of the Pharaohs. He imprisoned the anointed successor of St. Peter when the unappeasable rage of his ambition strove for the empire of Europe. He died with the consecrated wafer on his lips when he sought the salvation of his soul in the midst of the storm at Helena. Cromwell commenced his career in the name of the Lord, the champion of liberty, and the enemy of kings. His present purposes were gained by these fair and specious pretensions, but he passed from the earth as the first of an imperial dynasty, with every vestige of civil and religious toleration destroyed, and every evidence of the government swept from the British empire. David, the king, the statesman, the warrior, and the man of letters, yielded to the temptation of a beautiful but momentary vision, darkened his fame with cowardly and cruel murder, and corrupted his line with the offspring of a twofold crime. Even the primeval parents of the human race, who had communed face to face with the eternal Presence, and whose daily guests in the bowers of Eden were the angels and ministering spirits from heaven, looked no higher nor further than the branches of the tree where the forbidden fruit hanging in fatal splendor promised an immediate enjoyment and the fulfillment of immediate desires. And are these mournful instances in the sad philosophy of human nature to bring us no lesson of warning in the discharge of our present duties? Shall we grasp the close, proximate pleasure of power and revenge in defiance of all the principles of the Republic, in violation of its Constitution, and in contempt of all our own deliberate and solemn commitments, with no thought or care for the future, which will be filled with misery, disaster, and shame? It may be so. The present is more powerful here than the past or the future. The majority in Congress as utterly ignores its own record of the last four years as if it was blotted from the memory of man; and to attain an unlawful result would launch the people of this Government on a future destitute of constitutional protection.

Mr. Speaker, I shall here rest the discussion of the relation which the southern States bear to the Federal Government, and their right to representation in these Halls. It was one of the very few great questions that arose during the war in which both the political parties of the North agreed. The principle that the Union was unbroken was declared in the platforms of all the conventions, from the smallest to the greatest; and now that its denial has become the corner-stone of a new and aggressive faith I have found but little difficulty in showing that the doctrines of the Constitution and the highest official actions of every department of the Government alike invoke us to resist the bold advances of this baleful and destructive heresy. There are other points, however, on which I wish briefly to dwell in connection with my support of the principles enunciated in the annual message of the President.

Second only in importance to the mighty question of Union and constitutional government is the financial policy which, through the approaching generations of sweat, toil, and pain, shall govern the tax-payers of this deeply indebted nation. Our public debt has assumed proportions so vast and threatening that thinking men shudder in its contemplation. There would be no profit now in inquiring whether it might have been less and yet the Union preserved. It is a fixed reality, and fastened upon us beyond the power at least of present rescue. I have decided opinions which apply to the past, and which I have expressed, and which I shall never recall. I now approach the future in connection with results over which I had no control, but which none the less impose duties incident to the position which I hold. These duties I shall discharge with not one partisan or selfish motive, in the interest of every taxpayer and every son of labor in the whole land.

Sir, how long can the inequalities of our present revenue system be borne? How long will the poor and the laborious pay tribute to the rich and the idle? We have two great interests in this country, one of which has prostrated the other. The past four years of suffering and war has been the opportune harvest of the manufacturer. The looms and machine shops of New England and the iron furnaces of Pennsylvania have been more prolific of wealth to their owners than the most dazzling gold mines of the earth. I might here stop and dwell on statistics and figures, but the public mind is already familiar with their startling import. They are the result of class legislation, of a monopoly of trade established by law. It may be said that they indicate prosperity. Most certainly they do; but it is the prosperity of one who obtains the property of his neighbor without any equivalent in return. The present law of tariff is being rapidly understood. It is no longer a deception, but rather a well-defined and clearly recognized outrage. The agricultural labor of the land is driven to the counters of the most gigantic monopoly ever before sanctioned by law. From its exorbitant demands there is no escape. The European manufacturer is forbidden our ports of trade for fear he might sell his goods at cheaper rates and thus relieve the burden of the consumer. We have declared by law that there is but one market into which our citizens shall go to make their purchases, and we have left it to the owners of the market to fix their own prices. The bare statement of such a principle foreshadows at once the consequences which flow from it. One class of citizens, and by far the largest and most useful, is placed at the mercy, for the necessities as well as luxuries of life, of the fostered, favored, and protected class to whose aid the whole power of the Government is given. Will not such a privilege be abused? Can avaricious human nature withstand such a temptation? Is it any wonder or mystery that the farmer and the mechanic are paying more than fourfold the actual value of every article which supplies their daily wants and necessities?

But it is claimed that this system is a means of revenue to assist in the payment of the public debt. Even if this be true, its iniquity would be infinitely aggravated. I would rather be directly robbed than forced to assume, in the name of justice and right, the burdens and obligations of others more able to meet them than I am. Must the western people, because they are consumers and not manufacturers, be compelled by indirection to meet a large proportion of the debts of their fellow-citizens in other sections? Sir, this question must be met. It is in the minds and mouths of all our laboring classes in the West; and they will hail with general joy the fact that the President has declared in their favor and against the policy of their bloated and plethoric oppressors. I quote from his message:

"Now, in their turn, the property and income of the country should bear their just proportion of the burden of taxation, while in our impost system, through means of which increased vitality is incidentally imparted to all the industrial interests of the nation, the duties should be so adjusted as to fall most heavily on articles of luxury, leaving the necessities of life as free from taxation as the absolute wants of the Government, economically administered, will justify."

It is true that had I the power I would go further than this position of the Executive. Free trade with all the markets of the world is the true theory of government. No nation should prevent its citizens from buying where ever their hard earnings will buy most and go furthest. If a Hottentot can make and sell a bolt of cloth, or of muslin, or calico, cheaper than a New England Senator, who a few days since asked for increased protection to his manufactures, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] it is the right of any laborer in this broad land to pass by the civilized but rapacious Senator and obtain from the barbarian a better return for the sweat of his brow. For revenue I would look to the actual wealth of the country, and make it contribute accordingly. But this just and philosophic system of trade and government is not now within our reach, and I am content to accept the recommendation of the President to adjust the present impost system to the basis of revenue alone and not of protection. It is a step in the direction of true and practical reform—a reform in favor of that mighty branch of industry on which all nations depend for their wealth and power. It is a manly and honest blow aimed at a monopoly as arrogant, avaricious, and deaf to justice as the British East India corporation under Hastings or Clive. Nor is it any new doctrine. The people will hail it as a familiar friend of their former and happier days, and indorse it as they did then.

In close and immediate connection, however, with this branch of the message, the President has uttered another sentence on which the eye of the toiling, sunburnt tax-payer will linger long and gratefully. At the close of the weary day, as he counts up his feeble gains, looks into the heavy expenses of his family and his farming under high protective tariff prices, and shudders at the thought of the approaching tax-gatherer, knowing that for him and his hard-earned substance there is no escape, he will in his heart thank the man who as President wrote the following lines:

"No favored class should demand freedom from assessment, and the taxes should be so distributed as not to fall unduly on the poor, but rather on the accumulated wealth of the country."

Sir, is there a favored class in our midst that demands freedom from assessment? Are there those who, at such a time as this, demand that their property shall be exempted from the burdens of taxation? Are there American citizens, who boast loudest of their love of country, who will pay nothing to relieve it from debt? Is there an honest man in America who wishes his neighbor to pay his taxes as well as his own? Where is the "accumulated wealth of the country," which shirks its just responsibility and suffers the taxes to "fall unduly on the poor?" Where is this criminal delinquent which grinds the face of poverty and absorbs the widow's mite, in order that it may escape its own just dues and increase its hoarded gains?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH. I move that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] have his time extended to enable him to conclude his remarks. No objection was made.

Mr. VOORHEES. I return to the House my acknowledgments for the favor they have extended to me.

Sir, more than one tenth of the taxable property of the United States demands and has obtained in the hands of a favored class freedom from assessment. The enormous capitalist who has invested all his means in the bonds of the Government thus relieves the principal of his vast estate from taxation. He feels no concern for the movements of the tax-gatherer except as he goes forth and returns to him with the interest on his bonds, which the hands of honest toil pour into his coffers. Is this "equal and exact justice to all men, and exclusive privileges to none?" It is claimed, however, by the friends of this moneyed monopoly that the bonds of the Government are a sacred obligation and must not be touched; that they were purchased by their present holders out of pure patriotism, and that their freedom from assessment is but a proper token of the nation's gratitude. Patriotism was said by the great Dr. Johnson to be the last refuge of a scoundrel. It is now made the refuge of wealthy non-taxpayers, who convert their taxable property into Government securities, in order to evade their honest obligations. The idea that they have made these purchases from other than the ordinary motive of pecuniary profit only provokes contempt. They bought at a heavy discount, owing to the condition of the currency. They paid about fifty cents on the dollar, and now hold them at par, and receive interest at their face.

But it is said that when these bonds were thrown upon the market there was a guarantee that they should not be taxed. Is an act of Congress at the last session a guarantee that another and a different one on the same subject will not be passed at this? Do we live in the days of the Medes and Persians, when it was an offense punishable with death to propose to change a law once enacted? Does any man of sense predicate his business transactions on such a theory? Did the capitalists who are now to be so tenderly relieved from taxation make their investments innocently supposing that an everlasting perpetuity attached to the legislation of this most versatile, fluctuating, and changeable body? If they did, it is very wonderful how men of so little intelligence could have so much money. No, sir, they calculated all the risks of profit and loss, and every contingency of the future, as closely as Shylock did on the Rialto, assured in any event that their ventures would come home to them like richly freighted argosies after a prosperous voyage at sea; still better pleased, however, if they could have judgment forever on the inhuman bond which gives them freedom from assessment and exacts in their favor the pound of flesh nearest the heart of the toiling multitude.

I have listened to appeals in favor of this class, on account of their timely and self-sacrificing services, until I have almost imagined that we dwelt in a new Arcadia, where such a thing as self-interest was unknown. They loaned moneys on good securities and high rates of usance, and therefore the dusty, weary plow-man in the field must pay their taxes for them, and be thankful to God for so sweet a privilege! Yes, and even the soldier, crippled in the shock of battle, with the old flag over his head, returning home to find poverty and want at his hearthstone, must hear these speculators of Wall street hailed as the saviors of the country; and likewise without a murmur scuffle hard with the world, perhaps on crutches, to pay their debts as well as his own. The nation's gratitude takes a strange turn at this point. It lavishes its gifts, its garlands, and its favors on the money-changers of the temple, and causes the defenders of the Government at the cannon's mouth to pay tribute to their monstrous greed. Sir, there are few parallels in the wide annals of all the nations of the earth to such frightful injustice and inequality; and wherever they are found the people have been at last avenged upon their extortionate oppressors. The patricians of Rome, an aristocracy founded upon wealth, at different periods ground the plebeians, who labored at home and bore arms in the field, with debt and unequal taxation; but there was always a point at which the elements of revolution darkened the sky, and the privileged classes were compelled to yield to the untitled millions. State and Church in France had for ages loaded their favorites and parasites with riches and honors, and the peasantry with burdens, until the frenzied insanity of 1790 burst forth, and the whole fabric of government and of human society was involved in one common conflagration and ruin. Sir, there is but one pathway of safety and honor for Governments to pursue in their domestic policy. They must administer justice to their citizens in the spirit and the letter of equality; and there is no instance in the history of nations where class legislation and legalized monopolies have not overthrown the prosperity of every interest, and destroyed public liberty. I therefore indorse the policy of the President's annual message on this great and vital question. Sprung from the loins of the people, they will greet him as their champion. His life has been a battle in their behalf against privilege and oppression, and he has shown that in his proud eminence he has not lost for them his ancient love and care. Declaration on the dignity of labor in the abstract is a cheap indulgence. We listened to it a few evenings since in this Hall, from the eloquent lips of one whose soft hand never did an hour's toil, and who preaches a fashionable gospel at ten thousand a year. But labor finds its true dignity when its rights and interests are defended in high places by one who has felt all its privations and sufferings, and knows by experience "the simple annals of the poor." Let the public debt be paid, but let it be paid honestly and by all. I advocate no repudiation, but I advocate equality in striving to meet its terrible demands. Its exactions will be sufficiently sore even when the whole wealth of the land is brought to the receipt of custom. It will be more intolerable than the requirements which the Egyptian masters laid upon their Hebrew slaves, if only a portion of the people have to meet it all. I implore this Congress, then, to accept these wise recommendations of the Executive. Adjust the present tariff so that the whole labor of the country shall no longer be taxed on the necessities of life for the benefit of a single section. Repeal the law by which a favored class obtains freedom from assessment. Bring the accumulated wealth of the country to the aid of the poor in paying the national debt. Do these things, and you will lift cruel and galling burdens from the shoulders of honest labor, and convince the country that you have some regard for an equality of rights and privileges among American citizens as well as between the different races in our midst.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus far reviewed and discussed, as I understand them, the leading features of the domestic policy of the Executive. The success of some portions of this policy remains wholly with the future. Upon the leading measure, however, of a restoration of the States to union and harmony, an important chapter in history has already been written. Has it been a success or a failure? I have tried it by the high standards of right, justice, constitutional law, and precedent. I submit it now to another test, on which it is bitterly assailed by those who yet claim to be the only friends of the Administration. Those who perform their duties of friendship toward the President by malignant denunciations of his policy are now engaged in impressing the public mind with the belief that he has accomplished nothing worthy of acceptance by the people. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] pronounces his plan of restoration impracticable and untenable. He not only speaks for himself on this point, but also for everybody else. He says that "very few now consider" the administrative position a tenable one. An arrogant Senator in the other end of the Capitol pronounces the whole thing a fraud, a whitewashing process, by which sins and crimes are connived at and hid from the public gaze. Adversitous members of this House have crowded themselves into the presence of the Executive, and with exquisite delicacy assured him that, with their constituencies, they think his plan of restoration not likely to give success to his administration, and that, after an uninterrupted trial of seven months, his efforts to reorganize the rebel States and restore them to the Union must be recognized as a failure. Then with profuse protestations of true friendship they modestly ask him to step quietly to one side, not to lift a finger of interference, not open his lips in remonstrance, while they smash to pieces all his well-ordered plans, and kick to the ground with their Vandal feet his almost completed structure of Union and peace.

Sir, this class of dissatisfied spirits is to be found in every age. It is composed of boding birds of evil omen. It is their mission to destroy, not to build up. The borer in the trees of the forest, the worm in the heart of the flower, the wolf in the farmer's sheepfold, the tiger in the traveler's encampment by night, all pursue their trade of destruction and mark their career with ruin. But no useful thing ever grew from their labors. And like these beings in the animal world, created to destroy, so there are unhappy members of the human family, who never beheld the fair and beautiful creation of another's wisdom without an irresistible longing to strew the earth with its broken fragments. To them I make no appeal in behalf of that policy which has cleared away the wreck of a gigantic fraternal war, laid anew the foundations of government throughout an extent of country more vast than the most powerful kingdoms of Europe, revived confidence and hope in the breasts of a despairing people, and won for its author the respect and admiration of the civilized nations of both hemispheres. I make my appeal to the disinterested, impartial, and enlightened masses of the country, without regard to lines of party distinction. They have witnessed the patient labors of the President, and since this Congress convened they have beheld their grand fulfillment. Those wandering stars from the azure field of the flag, those discontented Pleiades that shot madly from their spheres, have one by one reilluminated their rays at the great center of light and of glory. The whole land wept when the beautiful sisterhood was broken. The wail of the heart-broker over the pallid face of the beloved and untimely dead is not more full of anguish than were the hearts of those who love their fellow-man when many of our most brilliant planets denied the law of gravitation and struck defiantly out upon orbits of their own. The sword that was drawn by all Christian hands, more in sorrow than in anger, hangs peacefully in its scabbard on the wall. Each section has its reminiscences of sublime devotion, of grief, and of glory. These are the brave heart's dearest treasure, and until they will be hallowed as the devotee hallows the rites of his religion. But peace under the policy of the Executive is celebrating "her victories no less renowned than war." The shining symbols of the revolted race are over our heads.

"The good knights are dust"

State after State, kindly assisted by the paternal hand of the President, comes to take its place beneath its ancient coat of arms. They cluster around these vacant seats that have so long invited them in vain. They are welcomed by the President as Israel's greatest king welcomed the warlike son of Ner, whose standard had waved twice four years in rebellion.

Let Congress imitate his example and mark the opening of the new year as an era of perfect reunion and a season of universal joy. "Let oblivion's curtain fall" upon the doleful tragedies of the past. Bury the animosities of a civil war. Take no counsel from their baleful whisperings. Hate is the basest principle of human action. They who have made laws and ruled nations upon motives of vengeance are the monsters whom all history curses with an unbroken voice. The long and deadly proscription lists of Sylla and Marius, Tiberius, and Clodius, gave the names of their victims to the compassion and sympathy of the world, while an immortality of infamy clings unceasingly to those who took private revenge in the name of the public good. Charity for the errors, the follies, and the crimes of the whole family of imperfect man is the leading virtue in the breasts of lawgivers and rulers. Those who have been guided by its sweet, angelic influences constitute the glory of the firmament in the annals of mankind. Cyrus, Scipio, and Washington command the love and veneration of ages more by the forbearance, magnanimity, and clemency of their characters than by the renown of their military achievements. The savage chief may strike his enemy prostrate and powerless at his feet. It is an attribute of divinity which lifts him up and makes him a friend. When Pericles paused upon the opening threshold of eternity, and in his dying moment reviewed the events of his great life, he consoled his parting spirit and rested the chief glory of his reign upon the fact that he had never caused a citizen of Athens to shed a tear. From this hour may this Government dry up the tears of its citizens! May no more hearts be wrung with the gloom of the prison or the anguish of death! May the two sections meet again as kindred and friends! The angel of concord will then stir the healing waters for them both; and renewing their glorious youth together, the future of the American Union will be filled with the love and praise of all its citizens.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] yield to me for one moment? I desire simply to offer an amendment to the resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will excuse me. I desire myself to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment, that I may offer some papers for reference to the Committee of Elections?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES, by unanimous consent, presented papers relative to the contested election in the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

POLICY OF THE PRESIDENT—AGAIN.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, it was to me an agreeable surprise to hear the words of the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Voorhees] in general commendation of the President of the United States. I cannot forget that, when the great body of loyal freemen who dwell between these oceans were engaged in a fierce struggle for the life of the Republic with an armed conspiracy and revolt, occupying and claiming to hold an area of territory equal in extent to half the continent of Europe, they received no earnest support from the gentleman or his party. And when the same loyal people, by the sacrifice of blood, sought to sustain all patriotic citizens then found anywhere within the limits of these insurgent States, of whom Andrew Johnson was one, in their honest endeavors to call back those people from their madness and their crime, neither that loyal people, nor those patriotic citizens of rebel States, received any efficient support at the hands either of the gentleman or of the party with which he was associated. I have not forgotten that the gentleman who attempts this day to arraign the patriotic party of the Union, the party of the Constitution, the party of law, the party of protection to each loyal citizen against the combined power of all, was accustomed, in his place here, to join with others of his party in the cry, "You cannot save the Government by arms!"

I have not forgotten, sir, that when this terrible, and, as the gentleman has well said, unparalleled and unmatched conflict between the friends of the Union and the enemies of the Union was shaking both hemispheres, covering the whole heavens with darkness, and filling the habitations of the people with lamentation and death, the gentleman was among that party of supporters of the conspiracy who assembled at Chicago and declared the war for the Union a failure. Now, sir, I would have remained silent, in view of all the thoughtful and well-considered words that the gentleman has seen fit this day to utter in commendation of the President, but for the fact that he has chosen to attempt to indoctrinate this House and the country with the same fell spirit of his party which in the past originated rebellion, and will in the future, if followed, renew and perpetuate rebellion. The gentleman's position here cannot be mistaken. His argument is elaborate; it is written word for word and letter for letter; it is well considered; but he will excuse me for saying here that it is with me a conviction as strong as knowledge that the proposition upon which the whole structure of his argument rests is the position that was assumed from first to last by every man who entered into the conspiracy against the nation, or who aided it; and if it be acted upon now by the Representatives of the people, it must result only in perpetuating that conspiracy to the destruction of the Constitution.

What is the position that is assumed and enunciated here to-day with so much earnestness, and I may say plausibility, by the gentleman from Indiana? It is simply this—"once a State, always a State," with all the powers and rights of a State within the Union. If I misconceive in any way the gentleman's actual position, as announced in his speech, I will be greatly obliged to him if he will correct me. "Once a State, always a State, with all the rights of a State, with the right of full and equal representation, with the right of local legislation." This seems to be the gentleman's statement, or the effect of it. Wherein does it differ from the position that was assumed at the very commencement of this great struggle, which has happily, thus far, ended so well. No thanks to the gentleman or his party that it has ended so well, but thanks only to God, who has in His keeping the destiny of nations, to the loyal people, and to that grand, heroic army of the Union that stood these four years past as a wall of fire between us and war's desolation, making even death itself beautiful by the sacrifice of themselves for their country.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly; but I prefer first to state my position. But I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHEES. Go on.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I say the position that was assumed at the commencement of this struggle by the advocates of this great treason, which, as I have already remarked, has terminated so happily for us all, is the very position which is assumed by the gentleman to-day. Let him disguise it as he may, the gentleman to-day affirms that which was assumed by his party upon this floor and at the other end of the Capitol, by the President of his party, in December, 1860, and which then energized the arms of the conspirators and gave them the courage to strike at your flag, to strike at your Constitution, and to strike at your nationality.

What was that position? It is burned into my brain as with fire, and will only be obliterated with the extinction of my life. What was that position? It was that the people of the United States, under their Constitution, had not the lawful right to coerce the seceding States. It embraces all the gentleman's argument. It is no new invention with him. Then the assumption of the gentleman and his party was, you could not coerce the seceding States by arms, and to-day the gentleman declares you cannot coerce seceding States by laws. The several States of the Union being original, independent sovereignties, according to the expressed opinion of the gentleman's party, it logically resulted therefore as was then declared by that party, that States might secede; they might make war upon the Union; they might tear down your banners; they might seize upon your custom-houses, your navy-yards, your arms, and your munitions of war; they might hunt to the death the true men found everywhere, thank God! in their midst, clinging to the tottering pillars of the Republic, invoking God's blessings upon the defenders of the Republic, praying that the great treason might perish, that their country might survive, and thus attesting by their fidelity that they were the very elect of human nature, men fit to be enrolled among the immortals. Then we were told we could not, even to protect these true men, coerce seceding and rebellious States by arms, and now we are told by the gentleman we cannot restrain the seceding and rebellious States in any manner by laws. That is the position of the gentleman. Now I should be glad to hear him.

Mr. VOORHEES. Not just yet. I shall be ready for you in time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should be glad to hear the gentleman now or at any time. The gentleman says he is looking up authority. My authorities are all with me. Holding myself, if you please, the humblest man upon this floor, I stand here to assert, and I challenge contradiction in making that assertion, that the American people, when they became a nationality, by the formation of a more perfect Union, by the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, declared themselves clothed with all the powers necessary to the maintenance of their nationality and the enforcement of the supremacy of their laws against all comers, whether these comers were in the guise of seceding States and organized conspiracies within the jurisdiction of the United States, or whether they were their allies abroad in the persons of the chiefs of Great Britain and France, who have been particeps criminis with the traitors in this great struggle. At the adoption of the Constitution this general power of defense was claimed by the friends of the Constitution and admitted by its enemies and made a ground of objection to it. And until the gentleman's party in 1860 denied this general right of self-defense in the United States, it was asserted under and by virtue of that Constitution on all occasions, whether to suppress insurrection or to repel invasion.

Mr. VOORHEES. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio I will now say a word.

I expected, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of course, and consequently I got myself into good humor a week ago, that I would be scolded for the speech I was going to make by gentlemen occupying the position of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM.] I take it all good-naturedly. Let me say this to him in order that my position may be understood. The American Union being a Union of the States, I do not know of any power in the State or the Government to destroy a State.

If that signifies to his mind, "once a State always a State," then he is right. I will read now from a document that I have tried to support, in a few remarks I have made this afternoon, written by the President of the United States, and if these hard epithets apply to my policy they apply to his likewise. The President says:

"But the true theory is, that all pretended acts of secession were from the beginning null and void. The States cannot commit treason, nor screen the individual citizens who may have committed treason any more than they can make valid treaties or engage in lawful commerce with any foreign Power. The States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired but not extinguished, their functions suspended but not destroyed."

Now, the issue formed before the country between the President and the men who supported him on the one hand, and those who opposed him on the other, is this: that at the end of this war the party opposing the policy of the President found eleven States destroyed. Perhaps more passed ordinances of secession. I did not pay enough attention to that hardly to know how many did. I look upon those ordinances as null and void. I consider all those States that passed ordinances of secession as dead to this Government. That is their position.

Now let me ask the gentleman, who killed those States? What power did it? Where did that power come from? Who dealt the blow? Did the State by its own act, or did the Federal Government, or did the government of Jeff. Davis at Richmond kill it? Did this pretended government in the South have power enough to kill eleven vital live States in the Union? Where is this destroying angel that has gone forth and destroyed those States? I hold that there is no element of destruction in them; that as they were in the beginning, so they were through this war, and so they are now—living States of the American Union. And in asserting that position, I have asserted the position of the President of the United States, and every assault the gentleman has made upon me on account of my position is equally made upon him.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad the gentleman has made his explanation, for it only makes clearer the position he assumes in regard to that question. The gentleman in his speech has notified the House and the country, assuming the position which he attributes to himself, in the first place, "once a State, always a State" for all purposes; that the rebel States, had always, and have now, the right of representation, and you have no right to exclude them. Now, the President has never asserted any such thing, either by direction or indirection. In the very passage which the gentleman has read from the message the President has said that "the functions of the rebel States were suspended." Of course if the functions of a State are suspended the powers of the State cannot be exercised. That is the President's position; the very converse of it is the position of the gentleman who comes here to introduce general resolutions of commendation of the President's message!

But I am not to be diverted at this stage from the line of remark I had entered upon. I have said that the position assumed generally by the gentleman in the speech which he has just made, is a position which, if acted upon by the representatives of the people, will prove as disastrous to the future of the nation, as a like assumption, made by his party, has proved disastrous to the nation during the past four years. There is no question about it. The gentleman's assumption is, that after having surrendered to the victorious legions of the Union and laid down their arms, the rebel States of right are entitled, without challenge, let, or hinderance, to representation on this floor.

I undertake to say that the President has not advanced any such proposition. Their right of representation depends exactly upon the actual condition of things in those rebel States, and chiefly upon such conditions as these: that they have not only laid down their arms, but have conformed their constitutions and laws to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and given such evidence to the people of the United States, and their representatives in Congress, as satisfies them that coöperating in this general movement of reorganization is a sufficient body of now loyal citizens to constitute a State.

Will the gentleman undertake by his mere platitudes to assert here that if by chance five thousand men in South Carolina, lately in insurrection, choose to be represented in convention, and in all things manifest a willingness to return to their allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States in good faith, it follows of necessity that the residue of unrepentant insurgents in that State, whose hands are red with the blood of their countrymen, have a right to representation on this floor, and that, too, as provided by the act of 1862, to which the gentleman referred, giving them six Representatives and two Senators? I want an answer. Who undertakes to assert any such thing, and who is to judge in this matter—the Congress or the President?

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not hear the gentleman's question. Will he repeat it?

Mr. BINGHAM. I say, if there were only five thousand men acquiescing in the late reorganizing convention in South Carolina, or represented in that convention, which declared submission to the Constitution and laws of the United States, would that entitle them to six Representatives and two Senators in Congress, and to exercise all the powers and functions of a State in the Union?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, the easiest, and at the same time most absurd mode of argument, is to suppose absurd things. I just step back on the fact that General Grant has been down there, and did not find any such state of things. That is sufficient for my argument at this time. Now, when you find a case of only five thousand in the community willing to discharge their duties, we will consider that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, the gentleman has given us about the stoutest reason for his argument, I suppose, that he could find. He stands behind the shadow of a mighty name. General Grant, I believe, was one day in the State of South Carolina, if at all, on that journey; I am not certain if he touched the borders of the State at all. The gentleman thereupon concludes that it is all right in South Carolina; General Grant did not undertake to say so. But the gentleman by his explanation concedes—and that is enough for my purpose—that the representatives of the people of the United States have some right to inquire. He concedes that by saying he is satisfied with the testimony of General Grant. I concede it, too, that Congress has the right to inquire, but I am not satisfied with the alleged testimony of General Grant, in view of the fact that he has not given any testimony on that subject, and has not proposed to do so. So much, then, for that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not willing that the gentleman, after the struggle through which we have all passed, shall assume that he alone, as a Representative of the people, is faithful to the Constitution of his country and to the sacred rights of the people of the whole country. I claim myself to coöperate with a party of men who are as charitable as the gentleman can be, even toward these late insurgents, these late conspirators, these men who but the other day struck with their drawn daggers at the white breast of our mother country. I am not willing to concede that these gentlemen who, by their utterances, but gave aid and comfort to the rebellion during the gigantic struggle, are the only persons to be intrusted with the honor and dignity of this greatest of all trusts ever committed to the care of any people upon this earth, the perpetuity of the Republic. The Republic, sir, is in the hands of its friends, and its only safety is in the hands of its friends. The party of the Republic proposes only to take security for the future. They do not expect nor hope for indemnity for the past. They propose, however, to take security for the future.

The gentleman, as I understand him, admits that he voted for one of those measures the other day which looked to security for the future, and that was the proposed amendment to the Constitution making it hereafter unconstitutional, by the will of the whole people of the United States, either for the Congress of the United States or for any State of this Union to assume or pay any part of the debt contracted in aid of the late rebellion, or of any debt which may hereafter be contracted in aid of any rebellion against the United States.

Well, sir, if the people of the United States are justified—and I infer from the gentleman's vote as well as from his voice to-day that, in his opinion, they are justified—in taking that one security for the future, are they not also justified in taking such additional security for the future as will bring in all the hereafter peace and prosperity to the South as well as to the North, to the East as well as to the West?

Oh, sir, it ought to have occurred to the gentleman when he was meditating his carefully prepared speech in commendation of the President, that there appeared in that same message of his an utterance which ought to attract the attention of this House, and the attention of the whole country, and that was when he reproduced the words which express the true intent and meaning of the Constitution of the United States. "Equal and exact justice to all men." That is the utterance of the President in his message, an utterance which the gentleman found it convenient to be quite oblivious of when he came to make up his words of commendation. According to the political creed of that party which proposes to take the President into its most holy and jealous keeping, there is only to be equal and exact justice secured to white men. [Laughter.] Yes, his party were for equal and exact justice to white men, uttering the horrid blasphemy all the while that this is a Government of white men.

Mr. Speaker, everybody at all conversant with the history of the country knows that in the Congress of 1778, upon the adoption of the Articles of Confederation as articles of perpetual union between the States, a motion was made then and there to limit citizenship by the insertion in one of the articles of the word "white," so that it should read, "All white freemen of every State, excluding paupers, vagabonds, and so forth, shall be citizens of the United States." There was a vote taken upon it, for our instruction, I suppose, and four fifths of all the people represented in that Congress rejected with scorn the proposition and excluded it from their fundamental law; and from that day to this it has found no place in the Constitution and laws of the United States, and colored men as well as white men have been and are citizens of the United States.

I say, then, to return to the question, having adopted one measure of security for the future, we might as well adopt another, and act upon the suggestion of the President, that hereafter the true intent of the Constitution, which is to secure equal and exact justice to all men, may be carried into effect.

Why, sir, it is a maxim that has come down to us from the infant days of the world that injustice in States is the source of turbulence and resistance to the laws; injustice is the parent of strife and conflict. Oppression makes even a wise man mad. It is a maxim as old as civilization, "for those who do injustice there will be a day of retribution." I thank the President for reminding Congress of this watchword, "equal and exact justice to all men," which was familiar to the people in the purer and better days of the Republic. The spirit, the intent, the purpose of our Constitution is to secure equal and exact justice to all men. That has not been done. It has failed to be done in the past. It has failed in respect of white men as well as black men. It has failed to be done at times in respect of some of the most distinguished citizens of the Republic. Was justice done to your martyr President when he was assassinated in the capital? Time was, within the memory of every man now within hearing of my voice, when it was entirely unsafe for a citizen of Massachusetts or Ohio who was known to be the friend of the human race, the avowed advocate of the foundation principle of our Constitution—the absolute equality of all men before the law—to be found anywhere in the streets of Charleston or in the streets of Richmond.

To be sure, it was not because the Constitution of the United States sanctioned any infringement of his rights in that behalf, but because in defiance of the Constitution its very guarantees were disregarded. I call the attention of the House to this fact merely for the purpose of suggesting for their consideration, that in view of all that has happened; in view of the fact that many of the States—I might say, in some sense, all the States of the Union—have flagrantly violated the absolute guarantees of the Constitution of the United States to all its citizens, it is time that we take security for the future, so that like occurrences may not again arise to distract our people and finally to dismember the Republic.

When you come to weigh these words, "equal and exact justice to all men," go read, if you please, the words of the Constitution itself: "The citizens of each State (being ipso facto citizens of the United States) shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens (supplying the ellipsis "of the United States") in the several States." This guarantee is of the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States in, not of, the several States. This guarantee of your Constitution applies to every citizen of every State of the Union; there is not a guarantee more sacred, and none more vital in that great instrument. It was utterly disregarded in the past by South Carolina when she drove with indignity and contempt and scorn from her limits the honored representative of Massachusetts, who went thither upon the peaceful mission of asserting in the tribunals of South Carolina the rights of American citizens.

I propose, with the help of this Congress and of the American people, that hereafter there shall not be any disregard of that essential guarantee of your Constitution in any State of the Union. And how? By simply adding an amendment to the Constitution to operate on all the States of this Union alike, giving to Congress the power to pass all laws necessary and proper to secure to all persons—which includes every citizen of every State—their equal personal rights; and if the tribunals of South Carolina will not respect the rights of the citizens of Massachusetts under the Constitution of their common country, I desire to see the Federal judiciary clothed with the power to take cognizance of the question, and assert those rights by solemn judgment, inflicting upon the offenders such penalties as will compel a decent respect for this guarantee to all the citizens of every State.

Having said this much touching security for the future, allow me to add that I repel with scorn, come from what source it may, the suggestion that I cooperate with any party that proposes to impose an unequal or unjust burden upon any State in this Republic. I know, and you, sir, know, and every loyal citizen of this Republic has come to know, that the divinest feature of your Constitution is the recognition of the absolute equality before the law of all persons, whether citizens or strangers; and the equality of every State within the limits of this Republic, subject only to the exception made by reason of slavery, now happily abolished. The President, therefore, might well say, as he does say in his message, that "the American system rests on the assertion of the equal right of EVERY MAN to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; to freedom of conscience, to the culture and exercise of all his faculties."

I propose, then, sir, by amending the Constitution, to provide for the efficient enforcement, by law, of these "equal rights of every man," and upon the assertion of which, we are told by the President, the American system rests. In doing this I would impose no restraint upon South Carolina that shall not rest with equal weight upon the State of Ohio. I ask that South Carolina, and that Ohio as well, shall be bound to respect the rights of the humblest citizen of the remotest State of the Republic when he may hereafter come within her jurisdiction. Who makes objection to that, or who can justly object to it?

These, then, are some of the matters that are before this House for consideration. And it strikes me that they pertain quite as much to the House as to the Executive. I undertake to say that the President of the United States will be found cooperating with the representatives of the people in their endeavor to introduce into the Constitution not that which will mar it, but that which will perfect it and enable the people hereafter to secure and reap for themselves and for their posterity forever the great ends for which that Constitution was ordained.

It was ordained to form a more perfect Union, but only as a means to the attainment of all its declared purposes. It is a declared purpose of the Constitution "to insure domestic tranquillity." How? By affording protection by law to the rights of all, in every State of the Union, and upon every sea the world over wherever your flag floats. Not merely "to establish a more perfect Union;" not merely to insure domestic tranquillity; not merely "to provide for the common defense," was the Constitution ordained; but also to "establish justice." It stands written, sir, on the forefront of that imperishable instrument that "in order to establish justice, we, the people of the United States, do ordain this Constitution." Well might the President demand, as he does demand in his message, "equal and exact justice to all men." That is precisely what is proposed to be accomplished.

I repel every insinuation or intimation, come from what quarter it may, that the representatives of the people have manifested thus far the slightest disposition to interfere with the prerogatives, if gentlemen please so to term the powers, of the Executive. I deny that the representatives of the people have taken any step indicating any such purpose, or any purpose to raise an issue or create a conflict between the President and Congress. But I may say further, that if the day ever comes when the President of the United States finds in this House no other supporters than those who combined together at Chicago in 1864 to bury him where they hoped that even the hand of resurrection itself could never again find him, then God help the President and save him from his friends. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair must ask gentlemen upon the floor to restrain any manifestations of applause or dissent, or it will be impossible for the Chair to restrain similar manifestations from those in the galleries. If members upon this floor will not respect their own rules, they cannot complain if they are not respected by spectators in the galleries.

Mr. BINGHAM. Having said this much, Mr. Speaker, upon the general subject, I desire to examine a little more closely the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in regard to the position of the President touching the insurrectionary States. I have understood all my life that a difference only in words, if there is an agreement in the substance, is not a material difference.

I undertake to say here, and to demonstrate it, if my time and strength will allow me, that the position of the President of the United States is in exact accord with the position of this House. He says in his message that the functions of these several insurrectionary States are suspended. This House has said the functions of those States are suspended by their own act of insurrection and treason, and they cannot of right assert their claim to representation upon this floor until the representatives of the whole people of the United States shall become satisfied that they have put themselves in proper position, and that all safeguards essential to the future safety of the Republic have been provided. That is all there is of it. Where is the conflict? The President declares the functions of those States suspended. That is only another way of saying that when a State engages in insurrection—as my learned and excellent colleague [Mr. SHELLABARGER] said yesterday in his able and exhaustive argument; when its people have disorganized the whole machinery of their State; when they have blotted out, so far as they can, the written requirement embodied in the Constitution of your country, that all legislative, all executive, all judicial officers of every State shall be bound by an oath to support that Constitution: when they have utterly blotted it out from their statute-books and inserted in its place the blasphemous oath that they will resist unto death the Constitution, the laws, and the authority of the United States; in that condition of things, sir, I care not whether the President says that their functions are suspended, or whether he says that they have ceased to be States for municipal purposes, it is one and the same thing in law; and I have very little respect for the logical acumen of the man who cannot see it.

Why, sir, I recollect well the occasion, in 1862, in the midst of this struggle, when I ventured to ask upon this floor the question whether South Carolina, having repudiated the oath prescribed by the Constitution, having sworn every legislative, every executive, and every judicial officer within her territory to resist and if possible overthrow the Constitution of the United States, could, by any possibility, rightfully legislate upon any subject affecting the person or property of any American citizen.

The gentleman was not then ready to challenge further debate by asserting any such authority in that insurgent State. I made at that time the further inquiry whether South Carolina had the right to elect Representatives or by her forsworn Legislature choose Senators to the Congress of the United States. I received from this side of the House, and from that, nothing but the reply which silence gives. Wherein has the case been altered? The great body of the people of that State did destroy her organic law and adopt a statute of treason, and from that moment she ceased to be a State for municipal purposes. But, says the President, the continuance of the State is assumed. So it is; but not for municipal purposes. The continuance of the State is assumed for Federal purposes. "Once a State, always a State" for Federal purposes, until that sad day comes—which I pray God, may never come—when treason shall triumph over the arms of the Republic. But, sir, let every State do precisely what South Carolina did and persist in it, and they cease to be States of the Union, for in that event there will be no Union and no Government of the United States.

South Carolina by her statutes of treason and her acts of treason could not and did not carry the territory of South Carolina out of the jurisdiction of the United States. South Carolina, by her ordinance of secession and her statutes of treason, could not blot out the State lines of South Carolina for Federal purposes. South Carolina, in short, could not, by her treason, blot out the provision of the Constitution of the United States which declares that—"In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law."—Amendments, art. 6.

Treason is a crime: South Carolina by her secession could not destroy the State and district of South Carolina even for the purpose of holding therein a Federal court and trying and condemning traitors for the treason and other crimes which they therein committed against the United States. The judicial district of the United States, therefore, remained in South Carolina intact, despite her treason; and the moment our armies captured Hilton Head, that moment, by the authority of the people of the United States, despite the treason of South Carolina, despite the fact, which no man can successfully gainsay, that South Carolina had ceased to be a State for all municipal purposes and could exercise none of "the functions of a State" whatever—could neither legislate, adjudicate, nor execute as a State—yet, that very moment the American people might rightfully have there opened their courts of justice under the protection of their guns, and proceeded to execute judgment according to law upon every criminal offender against the authority of the United States on whom they might lay their hands; and whose crime was committed within that State. I would like to see the man who is bold enough to deny this.

They are States, says the President, but only for Federal purposes; they have, all this while, during rebellion, been States, but only for Federal purposes; they were during their rebellion not States for municipal purposes, and can never be till they reorganize their constitutions of government to the satisfaction of the American people. There are two parties to the reorganization of these rebel States. The President cannot constitute a State; Congress alone cannot constitute a State; nobody upon earth can constitute an organized, constitutional State of the Union but the people of the United States, and the people of the proposed State coöperating. If the people of South Carolina do their part rightly and well, to which end no enabling act is needed, as it is but the exercise of the right of petition, which is guaranteed by the Constitution, and which you can neither confer nor take away by law, it will only then remain for Congress, upon her presenting a complete organization, to admit her to her equal position as a State within the Union, with full power to exercise her restored functions and with full right to her equal representation in the Senate and House. The speedy restoration of every State to its equal position, as soon as it can be done safely for the Republic, is, I am sure, the purpose of this House and of the President.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question for my own gratification, and I may say for my own information, and I should like to have it answered at this point of the debate. I understand him to say that during the four years of the rebellion, as he understands the question, and as the President designates it, the municipal authorities of those States were suspended; that the legislative, executive, and judicial powers were of no effect. The question which I wish to ask is this: If that be the truth relative to the municipal condition of the southern States, what then becomes of the action of those States during the time of the rebellion in reference to the transfer of property, marriages, &c.? In what relation do they now stand to the Government?

Mr. BINGHAM. Which judiciary?

Mr. SMITH. The judiciary of the State.

A MEMBER. The rebel judiciary.

Mr. BINGHAM. So far as marriages are concerned, I never heard of any State in my life out of Paganism where marriage contracted under such circumstances has been interfered with. If there was anything done by the rebel judiciary, to answer the gentleman's question further, such as that which was done for instance in Tennessee, of which we took some cognizance at the time when we tried Humphreys in the Senate for his treason against the country—if they have rendered in any of the rebel States such decrees as that judge rendered in Tennessee, confiscating the property of citizens of the United States, I think the constitutional Government of the United States can now reach them and set them aside.

Mr. STEVENS. With my friend's permission, I should like to ask him a question. I want to know whether at the time the so-called confederate government was a government in fact, was organized and performed all the functions of government, the laws then passed and the decrees then made are not binding upon the people of the rebellious States?

Mr. BINGHAM. They may be if not in conflict with the laws of the United States, and that people choose to submit to them now that peace is restored. They are void under the Constitution of the United States, as against the rights of any citizen who did not assent to them.

Mr. SMITH rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will excuse me from further interruption. I am obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his suggestion. I understand that he is not in the habit of interrupting for the purpose of weakening an argument, but for the purpose of strengthening it, and I am obliged to him for his suggestion. I doubt whether there can be found upon this floor a single man who will deliberately say, if the insurgent State of South Carolina, through her corrupt and treasonable judiciary, had decreed for the use of the southern confederacy the confiscation of the property of that venerable man, Pettigrew, who clung to the Constitution and cherished the hope of restoration as he cherished the hope of a better life, that the United States had not the power to reverse that decree and restore that property.

If South Carolina all this while was a State, with all the powers of a State, within the Union, how can we reach any such case? My learned colleague, [Mr. HAYES,] who does me the honor to listen to me, knows that the State of Ohio, when she legislates touching the transfer of real estate within her limits and among her citizens, and without impairing the obligation of contracts, is beyond the power of the Federal judiciary, and cannot be restrained therein by the Federal Government.

With the explanation I have given his words I see no occasion to take issue with the President upon the status of the States in rebellion, but admit that these States remained States through the conflict for Federal purposes; that means that the State lines remained, that the judicial districts remained intact, so that when the war ceased in those States the Government of the United States could administer justice in every one of those States, and try therein all persons for crimes against the United States therein committed. I do not feel disposed to admit, if a citizen of South Carolina were to-day to commit treason against the United States at Charleston, that he could not be there tried for his crime; nor if he committed his crime there last year that he could escape trial when arraigned, on the plea that the district of South Carolina, previously prescribed by the law of the United States, had ceased, either by his treason or by the treason of others, to be a judicial district within a State.

I never was of that class of persons who believed or assented to the position for a moment, and I do not know if there is any one here who does, that all the people within the limits of that confederacy were alien enemies. According to the Constitution and laws of the United States Government, every man is responsible for his own crime, and not for the crimes of others. So that when the sovereignty of the country comes to be restored—in Virginia and the Carolinas, the judiciary of the United States are bound by their oaths to discriminate between those who contributed by the compulsion of the bayonet to the support of the rebellion, and those who originated it and are the guilty perpetrators of the great wrong. There is a wide difference between Jefferson Davis, the leader of the revolt against the Union, who, to enter upon it, voluntarily broke his oath to support the Constitution of his country, and that poor, poverty-stricken conscript who served the confederacy of traitors only because of compulsion, or to secure thereby his daily bread.

I have said enough, I think, on this subject to satisfy gentlemen that the President stands by the great body of this House touching the status of the States. They need reconstruction. Their functions are suspended. Something must be done to give them an equal place in the Union. That is what the President says and what the House says. Who shall judge whether that which it was essential to do has been done at all, and if done, whether it has been done rightly? Who is to decide it? I say it, without waiting to quote authorities, that the loyal people of the loyal States, who saved the Union, and are represented on this floor, are the final judges upon that question, and from their decision there lies no appeal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having said this much, and a great deal more than I intended to say when I rose, without the slightest preparation, to reply to the carefully elaborated speech of the gentleman from Indiana, I propose to bring this whole question to an issue before the House by offering the following as a substitute for the gentleman's resolutions:

Strike out all after "Resolved," and insert:

Resolved, That this House has an abiding confidence in the President, and that in the future, as in the past, he will coöperate with Congress in restoring to equal position and rights with the other States in the Union all the States lately in insurrection.

And on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] to consent that this whole subject be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, I will withdraw the call for the previous question, and will move that the resolution with my substitute be referred to the joint committee on reconstruction. And upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 107, nays 32, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. So the resolutions and substitute were referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the motion to refer; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS AND BOUNTIES.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide that the death of any soldier, sailor, or marine while in the service shall be considered evidence that said death was caused by said service, and that when the proper rolls fail to show such death it shall be presumed after satisfactory proof that the enlisted man has been absent two years without having been seen or heard from; the heirs in each case to be entitled to pension and bounty; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENVELOPE, PAPER, AND STAMP COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the National Union Envelope, Paper, and Stamp Company, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPALDING, the House (at three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 10, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1865, copies of the records and proceedings, with the review of the same by the Judge Advocate General, of the military commissions by which were tried and convicted E. W. Andrews, of South Carolina; J. M. Brown, and C. C. Reese, of Georgia; J. L. McMillan and Neill McGill, of North Carolina; which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HENDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Missouri, who were soldiers in the recent war, praying that those who entered the military service in the early part of the war may be placed on the same footing in regard to bounty as those who entered at a later period; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Anne E. Huntington, widow of Hiram Huntington, late a member of company A, fourteenth regiment Rhode Island heavy artillery, (colored,) praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOWARD presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a breakwater at Marquette harbor in Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a petition of citizens of Indiana, praying for the equalization of the pay and bounty of the soldiers in the service of the United States during the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

He also presented the petition of Kennedy O'Brien, praying for an increase of his pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of James G. Colman and several hundred other colored citizens of Savannah, Georgia, praying for a change in the laws so as to secure the right of suffrage to all persons without distinction of color, for the granting of homesteads to the freedmen, and for the erasure of the word "white" from the naturalization law of March 26, 1790; which was referred to the joint committee to inquire into the condition of the so-called confederate States.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have received a memorial of the American Free Trade League, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, in which they set forth at some length that a protective tariff, or a tariff for the purposes of protection, is unjust and oppressive to the masses of the people, and opposed to the great principles of civil liberty; and they ask that in the future legislation of Congress, in providing for raising a revenue by the imposition of duties, the principle of protection be abandoned. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Nabb and Sarah Nabb, of the city of Burlington, Vermont, praying for compensation for property belonging to them in Charleston, South Carolina, which was wasted and destroyed during the bombardment and occupation of that city by the United States forces, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

GENERAL GRANT'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution for the printing of ten thousand extra copies of the report of Lieutenant General Grant, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate with an amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That ten thousand extra copies of the report of Lieutenant General Grant be printed for the use of the Senate.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was to strike out "ten" and insert "six."

Mr. SUMNER. May I ask which report that is?

Mr. ANTHONY. The report of the Lieutenant General—the military report.

Mr. SUMNER. Not the report on the condition of the southern States?

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

ASSISTANT ASSESSORS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 58) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint assistant assessors of internal revenue, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass; and as I propose to ask that it be passed at once, I will simply state that the act passed at the last session of Congress conferred the appointment of assistant assessors of internal revenue upon the assessors in each district. By the Constitution, all officers are to be appointed by the President with the assent of the Senate; but there is a provision that Congress may confer the appointment of such inferior officers as may be provided for by law upon the President alone, or upon the heads of Departments, or (I believe) on the Judges of the Supreme Court. Consequently, this power thus granted was one that could not be exercised by the assessors, and the President has been obliged to make the appointments. This bill is a very short one, and confers the power upon the Secretary of the Treasury to make these appointments, which is undoubtedly the best mode of providing for them. I ask, if there be no objection, that it be acted upon at the present time. It is a matter that should be acted upon immediately.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint any assistant assessors of internal revenue now provided for by law.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the Senator, has he not that power now?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; I have already stated that by the act of the last session, the power—[Mr. JOHNSON. I did not hear you; I beg your pardon]—was conferred upon the assessor of each district to appoint assistant assessors.

Mr. JOHNSON. This bill gives it to the Secretary?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I will make one remark on this bill. In voting for its passage, I do it certainly only with the understanding that the Secretary of the Treasury shall recognize the existing laws of Congress, and shall require of all persons appointed under this act the test oath, and shall not undertake of his own mere authority to relieve certain persons from taking that oath. We all know that the Secretary of the Treasury has undertaken to do that. I object to the exercise of any such power on the part of that functionary, and I shall insist that any appointments that are made by virtue of this act shall be made also with reference to all the existing laws of Congress, and that whoever enters upon duties under this act shall take the oaths required by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I learn that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] wishes to propose an amendment to the bill, and I suggest, therefore, that it lie on the table for the present. I do not understand that any specific motion has been made for the amendment of the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I made none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be laid on the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it be laid aside informally, and I will call it up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued.

INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION AT PARIS.

Mr. SUMNER. I will inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether he has looked into the report from the Department of State with reference to the Industrial Exposition at Paris so that the resolution can be proceeded with.

Mr. CLARK. I have. I have no objection to that being taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I move that the Senate take up the joint resolution that I reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 28, in relation to the Industrial Exposition at Paris, France.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the resolution.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, if convenient to him, state what were the proceedings of the Secretary of State in relation to this exposition, which the resolution approves.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will remember that I asked him a moment ago if he had had time to look at the report from the Department of State which has been laid upon our tables. In that report he will find those proceedings set forth at length, being a somewhat elaborate correspondence on the part of the French minister at Washington and the Secretary of State here, and the minister of the United States in Paris, and Mr. Beckwith, a citizen of the United States, now in Paris, who has been appointed commissioner for the purposes of the exposition. In approving what the Secretary of State has done, I understand that we confine our approbation to what appears in this correspondence, the effect of which is simply this: in the first place there was a proposition in the nature of an invitation from the French minister at Washington, in which he set forth that this exhibition was to take place, beginning on the 1st of May, 1867, and inviting the United States to participate therein. There the correspondence began. The Secretary of State expressed his sympathy with the object proposed, and communicated that to our minister in Paris. Our minister was already in relations with the French Government on the subject, and so far as he felt authorized without special instructions from home, he also had expressed his sympathy with the object proposed. By a letter to the Department he then recommended the appointment of Mr. Beckwith, a citizen of the United States in Paris, as a commissioner to superintend the interests of the United States there. That recommendation was acted upon by the Secretary of State, and Mr. Beckwith, acting as commissioner, has proceeded to make certain arrangements with the French Government for the reception of articles that shall be contributed to the exhibition by citizens of the United States.

That, in brief, is the actual condition of the case; and I understand that Congress, by passing this resolution, simply approves of what the Department of State has already done: first, in expressing its sympathy with the general objects proposed; and secondly, in the appointment of Mr. Beckwith as an unpaid commissioner to superintend the interests of the United States at that exhibition. The resolution farther proposes that a paid agent shall be appointed at New York, with clerks paid according to the terms of the resolution, whose duty it shall be to expedite articles from New York, and generally there to superintend the interests of contributors.

Mr. CLARK. That is the point to which I pointed directly, to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. I find in the report of the Secretary of State the following list of officers or persons selected for this business: "John Bigelow, Esq., (the minister of the United States at Paris,) special agent of the United States for the exposition, (without extra compensation for that service;) N. M. Beckwith, Esq., commissioner general of the United States, (without compensation;) Monsieur J. F. Loubat, honorary commissioner of the United States, (without compensation;) J. C. Derby, Esq., general agent in the United States, resident at New York," with an implication that he is to have compensation.

Mr. SUMNER. I have already stated that he is.

Mr. CLARK. So I understood the Senator. Now, I desire to inquire why, if it is necessary, as it certainly is, to limit the number of clerks and prescribe their compensation, we should not do the same in regard to the general agent. Why should we leave that matter, as to him, in the indefinite manner this resolution does? Why should we not fix his salary as well? If it is necessary to fix the salary of the clerks, why not of the general agent, instead of allowing him to run ad libitum to any expense for services that he may think best? I merely make the suggestion.

Mr. SUMNER. Has the Senator any proposition to make on that subject?

Mr. CLARK. I have not, because it is new to me, and I thought the committee might have considered the subject. I found the report yesterday in some haste after the adjournment of the Senate, and had not time to read the whole of it, because it is very voluminous.

Mr. SUMNER. There is nothing on that point that appears in the report, to my knowledge. There is nothing in the report with reference to the compensation of the agent.

Mr. CLARK. I will then inquire of the Senator whether he had not better himself take a little time to see what these services will probably be, and endeavor to fix a reasonable compensation for them, so that the Senate may know the point beyond which it will not be required to go. Perhaps by reflection by himself, perhaps by a conference with the Secretary of State, that may be arrived at, or if there should be insuperable difficulties to fixing it, we might know the reason why. That would be a little more considerate legislation.

Mr. SUMNER. The joint resolution that is now under consideration did not come originally from the committee of the Senate; it came from the House of Representatives, and I understood that they had in view further action by another bill or resolution hereafter, in which some other points relating to this question should be treated. The committee of the Senate confined their attention to the points actually presented by the resolution as it came from the other House, and they undertook to affirm all that the House had adopted and recommended its passage; beyond that the committee have not gone. This resolution makes no appropriation for the compensation of the chief agent: that question is left open.

Mr. CLARK. It is very true that this is a House resolution; but nevertheless it came to the Senate, and by the Senate was referred to the committee for the committee's action. The committee have considered it, and reported it back here without making any provision with respect to the compensation or salary of the general agent. Now, it would seem that if any limitation was to be fixed upon the amount of his compensation, it should be done in the bill or resolution which provides for his employment, so that when you look to find the authority for his employment you may find exactly the pay which he shall have; and it may be material for the Senate to consider whether they will employ this man until they know what is to be his pay. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that if we are to fix any limit to this man's wages, it should be done here in the measure that provides for his employment. This is the very point to do it. I have no hostility to this joint resolution generally; I have certainly no hostility to its object; I merely suggest whether it would not be better to do this right here in the very place where provision is made for the employment. If I knew what would be a fair compensation for the general agent I would move that amendment; but I am at a loss to know, because I am not aware what services may be required of him. I would not wish to stint him in his pay for any services fairly rendered. The Senator certainly ought to know what will be required of this agent, or at least the nature of the business which will be required of him. I think we had better have the limitation here.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator perseveres in his suggestion, I shall not oppose it. I only suggest to the Senate that this resolution simply undertakes to provide for a certain class of cases, and does not go beyond that. The Senator wishes it to go further. I have already said that there are other matters in connection with this exposition which must come up hereafter in another bill or resolution, and I doubt not, though I am not able to say positively, that the House of Representatives, in adopting the measure they have adopted, limiting it to the cases to which they have confined it, had in view subsequent legislation, which was to treat other parts of the question. If the Senator thinks it advisable that we here, in this stage, should undertake to treat the other part of the question beyond that which has actually been presented to us by the Department of State and by the House of Representatives, I am ready that the resolution should lie over for further consideration.

Mr. CLARK. I prefer that it should lie over, for although we may have another bill treating of other matters, I think the Senator cannot say that that other bill will provide for the salary of this general agent, and we may be put to the necessity of moving the amendment upon that bill. We may as well do it here as anywhere.

Mr. SUMNER. I would only remind the Senator that in this matter time is of some importance. It has been delayed so that the interests of contributors have suffered.

Mr. CLARK. It may be that time is all-important; but the exhibition is not to commence until 1867, and I think if we take one day to fix this salary we shall not cause any injury.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator had read the report, he would have seen that though the exhibition does not open till the 1st of May, 1867, it is expressly required by conditions that the articles must be there months before that time, and the United States is now behind.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that, and I understand also that the time has been extended; but still I do not think we shall suffer by a delay of one day. I move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNTY OF MISSOURI TROOPS.

Mr. HENDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to inform the Senate whether the bounty of $100, authorized by the fifth section of the act of Congress, approved July 22, 1861, entitled "An act to authorize the employment of volunteers to aid in enforcing the laws and protecting public property," has been paid to the ten regiments of three years' volunteers organized in Missouri and mustered into the United States service, known as Missouri State militia; and, if not paid, that he state the reasons now existing for such refusal.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HENDERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 65) to amend an act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, passed March 3, 1863; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. NYE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 66) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 67) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of the late Nathaniel H. Perry, United States Navy; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. No. 16) for the relief of Josiah O. Armes.

INTER-STATE INTERCOURSE.

The message further requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military intercourse among the several States.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill just called for by the House of Representatives is at present in the possession of the Committee on Commerce. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be returned by the Secretary to the House, according to the request of that body.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL subsequently said: A few moments ago the Senator from Michigan made a motion to discharge the Committee on Commerce from the consideration of a bill which had been referred to them, with a view of returning it to the House of Representatives. I think the attention of the Senate was not called to the situation of that bill, and it may be questionable whether we can properly do what has been attempted. The bill alluded to was read twice in the Senate, and referred to a committee, and was in the possession of that committee. Now, if in this stage the Senate undertakes to return the bill to the House, what is its condition? It has already had two readings here. Ought we not to reconsider that action? I have never known a case of this kind before. It is common for one House to return a bill to the other House before it has taken action; but after a bill has been read twice in this body, it occurs to me that to return it to the other House places it in a very strange situation. Perhaps we ought to reconsider what the Senate has done. Senators more familiar with parliamentary rules than I am may know how the fact is; but I have never known a case like this.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe it has always been the custom, when such a message has been received from either House, for the other House at once to accede to it; such has been the practice according to my observation, and hence I made the motion. I am sure it is according to the usage of the Senate; whether it is strictly right or not, I cannot tell.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Illinois to make any motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the bill was ordered to be returned to the House of Representatives, so as to hold it until the question can be considered here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish that question put to the Senate at the present time?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. Why not let it lie on the table for the present?

Mr. TRUMBULL. My object is merely to let it lie until we can look into the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SUFFRAGE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1) to regulate the elective franchise in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. As originally introduced by Mr. WADE, it proposed to declare that hereafter each and every male person, of the age of twenty-one years and upward, who has not been convicted of any infamous crime or offense, and who is a citizen of the United States, and who shall have resided in the District of Columbia for the period of six months previous to any election therein, shall be entitled to the elective franchise, and shall be deemed an elector and entitled to vote at any election in the District, without any distinction or discrimination on account of color, race, or nationality. The second section provided that if any person or persons shall willfully interrupt or disturb any such elector in the exercise of such franchise, he or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned in the cell or dungeon of the jail in said District, and fed on bread and water only, for a period not to exceed thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court; and the third section proposed to make it the duty of the several courts having criminal jurisdiction in the District to give the act in special charge to the grand jury at the commencement of each term of the court.

The bill having been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, was reported with amendments, the first of which was in section one, line four, after the words "male person" to insert "excepting paupers and persons under guardianship."

Mr. RIDDLE. The bill comes from a committee of which I am a member, and I ask that it be postponed, and made the special order for Tuesday next.

Several SENATORS. What day?

Mr. RIDDLE. Any day of next week will suit me; say Tuesday.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will allow the bill to be considered so far as to act on the amendments at the present time, perhaps there will be no objection to his suggestion.

Mr. RIDDLE. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Delaware to withdraw for the present his motion to postpone.

Mr. RIDDLE. Yes, sir.

The first amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line seven, to insert after the words "United States" the words "and who shall be able to read the Constitution of the United States in the English language, and write his name."

Mr. YATES. I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on the District of Columbia when this question was considered; and unless there is some urgency for immediate action, I should like to have the bill and the amendments recommitted to the committee. I make that motion.

Mr. WADE. I should like to hear from the Senator from Illinois what particular reason he has for the proposed recommitment, what amendments or alterations he would wish to have the committee consider, because we hardly know what the Senator considers the defects in it, or wherein he wants it further considered.

Mr. MORRILL, and others. He is on the committee, and was not present when it was acted on.

Mr. WADE. Very well, I have no objection to the recommitment if the Senator has had no opportunity to examine the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. If this bill is to be recommitted—and I have no objection to that course—I wish to make a suggestion or two to the committee in regard to this amendment. If we are to base the franchise upon the ability of the individual to read and write the Constitution of the United States, I submit whether we ought to require him to be able to read and write it in English. A person may be very well educated in some languages, and yet not in the English language. In the State that I, in part, represent, we have to print our laws in German. We find persons very well educated in the German language, and very loyal, who cannot read a word of English—men who are good citizens, too, and good voters. I submit that a person may have a very good education without knowing English. That is the first suggestion I would make.

The second is, that I have my doubts whether we ought to require reading and writing at all. There is a class of people that we have legislated away from the spelling-book and the Bible, whom we have legislated out of school; and now, as we are introducing a new order of things, a new civilization, emancipation having taken place and having had effect everywhere, we come to these people and tell them, "Now, if you can read and write, you shall have the franchise." It might do very well to apply it to persons who have always had educational opportunities, white men who have had schools open to them all their lives and have not availed themselves of them. It would not be as hard to deprive them of the franchise for that reason; but here is a class of persons that by a systematic course of legislation have been prevented from learning to read and write. If we intend to do anything for them we had better just do the fair thing, and let them vote. But after having legislated them away from schools and science and everything else, to thrust in their faces a law saying, "If you can read and write, you can vote," I think is adding insult to injury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the question now is not on the merits of the amendments, but on the reference of the amendments and the bill to the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I appeal to my friend from Illinois to allow the bill to be considered in other respects. I understand his objection to lie to this amendment. There are other amendments to the bill which I am very anxious should be perfected, and I would like to have the Senate consent informally to pass over this amendment and consider the other amendments to which there may be no objection. Then I shall not resist the motion to recommit.

Mr. YATES. On the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, I withdraw the motion to recommit for the present.

Mr. MORRILL. I move now that we pass over the amendment under consideration informally, and proceed to the consideration of the other amendments reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that course will be taken. This amendment will be considered as passed by temporarily, and the next amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The Secretary read the next amendment, which was in section one, line thirteen, to strike out the words "or discrimination," and in line fourteen to strike out the words "or nationality;" so that the clause will read:

And shall be deemed an elector and entitled to vote at any election in said District, without any distinction on account of color or race.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was to insert as section two the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person whose duty it shall be to receive votes at any election within the District of Columbia, who shall willfully refuse to receive or who shall willfully reject the vote of any person entitled to such right under this act, shall be liable to an action of tort by the person injured, and shall be liable, on indictment and conviction, if such act was done knowingly, to a fine not exceeding $5,000, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year in the jail of said District, or to both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two of the original bill, line six, after the words "imprisoned in," to strike out "the cell or dungeon of;" and in line seven of the same section, after the word "District," to strike out "and fed on bread and water only;" so that the clause will read:

Shall be fined in any sum not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned in the jail in said District for a period not to exceed thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments reported from the committee, except the one passed over by common consent, have been acted on.

Mr. MORRILL. I now offer three sections as additional amendments to this bill, which I ask to have printed. I do not ask that they be acted on at the present time, but let them be referred to the committee with the bill when it shall be recommitted.

The amendments were ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES. I renew my motion that the bill and amendments be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 21st of December, 1865, approved and signed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 6) authorizing the President to divert certain funds heretofore appropriated, and cause the same to be used for immediate subsistence and clothing, &c., for destitute Indians and Indian tribes.

He also communicated several messages in writing, which were placed on the table of the President pro tempore.

JOSIAH O. ARMES.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire here to interpose a motion to reconsider a bill that has been returned to the Senate by the House of Representatives, for the relief of Josiah O. Armes. I do it at the request of my colleague, who was not present when the vote was taken. I desire to give him an opportunity of examining the question.

Mr. CLARK. I suggested to the Senator's colleague to let it lie, before that motion is made, a little while, until I can confer with him.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not want the motion considered now, but only to have it entered.

Mr. CLARK. If that be entered, I do not wish to lose any right as to any question of order that may interfere with the making of the motion, or anything of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the understanding.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. HOWE asked leave to introduce a joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Whereas the people of Virginia, of North Carolina, of South Carolina, of Georgia, of Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Tennessee have heretofore declared their independence of the Government of the United States, have usurped authority denied to every State by the supreme law of the land, have abjured duties imposed upon every State by the same law, and have waged war against the United States, whereas the political functions formerly granted to those people have been suspended; and whereas such functions cannot yet be restored to those people with safety to themselves or to the nation; and whereas military tribunals are not suited to the exercise of civil authority: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That local governments ought to be provisionally organized forthwith for the people in each of the districts named in the preamble hereto.

Mr. HOWE. I should like the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the resolution at the present time, at least long enough to allow me to make some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is on the introduction of the resolution: it requires unanimous consent to introduce it, no notice having been previously given. Is the present introduction of this resolution objected to?

Mr. JOHNSON. I certainly do not object to the introduction of the resolution, and should be very unwilling to object to hearing the honorable Senator express his own views upon the question which the resolution presents; but questions of the same kind, involving perhaps the same principles involved in his resolution, are now before the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, and I submit, therefore, to my friend whether it would not be advisable to let this be referred in the same way, and not to involve us in a discussion prematurely.

Mr. HOWE. I shall not object to this resolution going to the same committee, and I intend to move its reference to the committee, but still I should like to submit to the Senate my views upon the resolution at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSON. I make no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the introduction of this resolution at this time, it will be received.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to introduce the joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) in relation to the organization of provisional governments within the States whose people were lately in rebellion against the United States, and it was read the first and second time.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, when Paul stood there "in the midst of Mars hill," aneedy, perhaps a ragged, missionary, and told the indolent, idolatrous, and luxurious Athenians that God had "made of one blood all nations of men, to dwell on all the face of the earth," do you believe he was playing the demagogue or not? When the Congress of 1776 assembled in Independence Hall, representing a constituency few in numbers, poor in resources, strong only in their convictions of right, and announced to the world that "all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men;" and when the members of that Congress pledged their "lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor" to maintain those assertions against the whole power of the British empire, do you really suppose they were talking for bunkum or not? And when the American people declared in their organic law that—

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding"— do you think they actually meant that, or did they mean that the constitution and laws of each State should be the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution or laws of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

I have put these questions, because however generally we may assent to these propositions in our speech, there are scarcely three theses in the whole field of discussion more flatly denied practically than these three.

We do very generally admit Paul to have been a minister of the true religion, and yet if he had proclaimed in the Smithsonian Institute six years ago what he did in the Areopagus at Athens, he would have been driven out of the city.

We do with our lips very generally assent to the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence, and yet when the American auto-da-fe kindles its hottest fires it is to roast some reckless radical who dares to assert the political equality of men.

We cannot well deny that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, because the Constitution says so, and we have sworn to support it; but practically we do seem to treat it much as if every law was supreme but that.

I cannot now afford the time to defend the teachings of the apostle or the doctrines of the Declaration. But if it will not annoy the Senate, I would like to make a few remarks in vindication of the Constitution of the United States.

In my judgment, Mr. President, it is time the American people adopted the Constitution. We have, indeed, been taking the tincture for nearly a century. I am sure it has done us great good. I believe now we should try the sublimate, and I am confident it would cure the nation. Hitherto we have taken the Constitution in a solution of the spirit of State rights. Let us now take it as it is sublimed and crystallized in the flames of the most gigantic war in history.

The war, as we know, was designed to demonstrate that the will of each State was supreme, and that the United States must defer to it. Before the Constitution was adopted such was the case precisely. The several States were sovereign, and for that very reason the Union formed between them was worthless. The Congress of the Confederation could enact laws, but as their laws were addressed to the States, and the States were sovereign, they would obey or not as they pleased.

Said Mr. Sherman:

"The complaints at present are not that the views of Congress are unwise or unfaithful, but that their powers are insufficient for the execution of their views."

Said Mr. Randolph, of Virginia:

"The true question is whether we will adhere to the Federal plan or introduce the national plan. The insufficiency of the former has been fully displayed by the trial already made."

The national plan was adopted. Thirteen weak and thriftless sovereignties were welded into one great and prosperous republic. It was not the purpose of the Convention to destroy the State governments, but to change their character, to strip them of sovereignty, and leave them no manner of authority to impede the execution of the national will.

Hence it provides a national Legislature, to enact laws, not for the direction of States, but for the government of the people, whether within or without any of the States; a national Executive, sworn to see those laws executed if they are constitutional, whether a State dislike them or not, and a national Judiciary, to determine whether they are constitutional or not.

The President, therefore, aptly says in his late message that "the sovereignty of the States" is the language of the Confederacy and not of the Constitution."

But in the Convention which framed the Constitution there was a party opposed to depriving the States of their sovereign authority. And since the adoption of the Constitution, there has been a party in the country which has stoutly maintained that the States have not been deprived of their sovereignty. They insist that unless each State can defy the authority of the Government the rights of the States are in imminent peril. They forget that it was the existence of this very power of defiance which imperiled all the States under the Confederation.

And, sir, there can be but little danger that the several States will be despoiled of their rights by a Government constituted like that of the United States. The President rightly says that "the subjects that come unquestionably within its jurisdiction are so numerous that it must ever naturally refuse to be embarrassed by questions that lie beyond it."

Mr. Madison urged this same consideration in support of the national plan in the constitutional Convention. To my mind the States have another security against the encroachments of the national Government even more reliable than this. It lies in the fact that the people who compose the several States make the Government of the United States. It is not much to be apprehended that the creature will devour the creator. But the State-rights party resemble a congregation of derisives dancing before an idol their own hands have created and frantically imploring it not to destroy them.

And the Government often seems almost as nervous as that party. Like the elephant with its owner under its belly, the Government often seems so conscious of its own weight as to be afraid to move for fear it will crush its proprietor. Let the Government move. It will not destroy the States unless it betrays them. When true to its office it is but the voice of the States. Is there danger that the voice will slay the speaker?

Mr. Madison declared in the constitutional Convention—

"That in the first place there was less danger of encroachment from the General Government than from the State governments; and, in the second place, that the mischiefs from encroachments would be less fatal if made by the former than if made by the latter."

Who that has lived during the last fifteen years will deny the correctness of that estimate?

Yet, in spite of the terrible admonitions we have received against the liability to State encroachments, and of the disastrous consequences resulting therefrom, there are those among us still who talk rapturously of the priceless value of the States to the nation, who persist in estimating its grandeur by the number of States subject to its sway, and who dwell upon the idea of their "indestructibility" with something of that fond and reverent air with which we speak of the immortality of the soul.

Sir, it is not the business of the national Government to sway States. That was the business of the old Confederation. It is the business of this Government to control people, and I estimate its strength, as I estimate the strength of all other Powers, by the extent of its territory, by the number, the wealth, the intelligence, and the loyalty of its people. I dissent entirely and altogether from the idea that a citizen is worth nothing to the nation unless he is included in the government of a State. I aver that a citizen of this District, that a citizen of Washington Territory, is worth as much to the nation, and adds as much to its strength and its greatness as a citizen of New York or of Massachusetts.

If a citizen be loyal, he adds to the strength of the nation, equally whether he be in a State or Territory. If he be disloyal, he diminishes the strength of the nation, whether he be in a State or Territory, but not equally. The citizen of a State has more authority than the citizen of a Territory, and, therefore, if he be disloyal, he can do more injury in the former than in the latter position.

Has any one yet attempted to explain what principle that is which renders a State indestructible? Does any one comprehend it? For myself, I do not. A State is a manufacture as much as a wagon is. It is not, indeed, made in the same way nor at the same shops. But it is nevertheless made, and made by mortals. My friend from Nevada has just helped to make one. A State can be made only by those who are permitted by the nation to make one, by those who are willing to make it.

But once made, we are told "a State can never die." "Once a State always a State," they shout. And when, a few years since, it was hinted that the rebellious States had committed suicide, politicians laughed the suggestion to scorn.

Galileo, when condemned to renounce the heresy of the earth's motion, is said to "have made his abjuration with all the formality commonly attending such proceedings. Clad in sackcloth and kneeling, he swore upon the Gospels never again to teach the earth's motion or the sun's stability. Then rising from the ground, he exclaimed, 'It does move, after all.' And so I, rising as well as I can under this load of derision, cannot refrain from assuring the Senate that States can commit suicide and can die. History is but little more than a graveyard in which one reads the epitaphs upon buried States.

Sir, it is poetical license and not political science which talks of the immortality of States. Have the people of Nevada made an organization which they cannot unmake? If they refuse hereafter to choose Governors and legislators and judges and municipal officers, will the State survive that mere neglect?

On the contrary, would it not be the imperative duty of Congress, in such an event, to resume the prerogatives you have just granted to that people, and provide a government to save the people from anarchy? Do you say the State is still theirs in contemplation of law, the national authority cannot enter upon its sacred domain, and if the people choose anarchy they must have it? So, then, because of your passionate desire to drag a State to heaven you would let its people plunge in the other direction.

There are those among us who seem really to believe that we have been fighting these terrible battles expressly to uphold the governments of the several States. I did not understand such to be the purpose of the war. If I had so understood it I should have comprehended the significance of Earl Russell's criticism. "I understand," said he, "how you may lead a horse to the brook, but I do not understand how you can make him drink." As much as to say, "I know the United States may overcome resistance to its Government, but I do not see how the rebels can be made to maintain State governments."

Mr. President, the Constitution does not command any portion of the American people to maintain the organization of a State. It permits such organizations only. I repudiate the whole theory that there is any political necessity requiring the people of any district to be a State against their will. I stand upon the doctrine, and I want the American people to understand it, that it is a high political privilege to be an American State. It is a privilege which California had to struggle hard to obtain; and I do not believe this nation would have voted $3,000,000,000 and sacrificed two hundred thousand lives to force upon South Carolina and her confederates privileges which were so reluctantly yielded to California. For one, I would not have consented to sacrifice a man or a dollar for such a purpose. I understood the purpose of the war to be not to maintain the governments of the several rebellious States, but to defend the Government of the United States. As such I stood by its prosecution; as such I stand by its results.

A State is a public corporation. It has limited powers of government. The exercise of those powers by some one is necessary to the welfare of its citizens, and therefore to the welfare of the nation. If it utterly refuses to exert them it defeats the purposes of its being, and the common welfare requires the nation to resume them. It is charged with duties also, and if it persistently disregard those, or willfully persist in the exercise of powers not intrusted to it, it may thereby forfeit its right to being, and the common welfare and the common safety may require the nation to resume its prerogatives.

But it is not every neglect of duty nor every usurpation of power which will justify the resumption of the franchises of a State. The Constitution declares "that no State shall make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts." But suppose the Legislature of Massachusetts should provide by law that bank notes should be a tender in payment of debts. Such an enactment would not justify the nation in denying to her a representation in Congress, or in depriving her of the functions really belonging to a State. Such a remedy is needless, and therefore unjustifiable. The courts could afford ample protection against such an act, and no detriment could arise from it.

But the Constitution also declares that "no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation." Suppose the State of Texas does negotiate an alliance with Maximilian, by which she engages to furnish a given number of troops, her whole military strength, indeed, to support him in his enterprise against the republic of Mexico? What is the remedy for that violation of the supreme law? You may say her people are not bound by the compact. But suppose they are consenting to it? Suppose they demand it? Suppose they choose their Governor and Legislature for the express purpose of making it? Suppose her whole militia force is officered and trained with the view of supporting the alliance?

What is your remedy? You say the compact is illegal: so it is. You may say that in law it is null: so indeed it is, but in fact it is none the less mischievous. If your courts could get jurisdiction of the compact they would doubtless declare it null and void. But how is a court to get jurisdiction of a contract against which neither party complains, but to which both parties are resolved to adhere? You may enact laws, perhaps, for punishing criminally State officers who shall thus offend against the supreme law; but when you have punished the officers you have not terminated the compact.

You may picket with your army the whole border of Texas to prevent the egress of troops or munitions of war; but can you prevent unarmed citizens from crossing the boundary of a State? And if you can, can your picket guard tell whether the traveler he halts on the line is from Texas or from New York? But suppose you could by sleepless vigilance and boundless expenditure prevent all the citizens of Texas from crossing into Mexico, that is not the mischief against which you have most to guard. It may not much harm the nation that citizens from Texas go into Mexico and shoot, or get shot; but it does harm the nation that the whole municipal authority of a State is lodged in tribunals pledged to the support of an alliance which the Constitution forbids, and to the prosecution of a design which may involve the nation in a foreign war. It does harm the nation that a people and government so compromised by a compact which the supreme law condemns should still be allowed to appoint representatives to participate in the enactment of your laws, and to sit in the secret councils of this Senate, to supervise treaties, perhaps, which have been negotiated with Mexico herself. Is the Government of the United States helpless against such perils?

I put another case. The Constitution contains this provision:

"The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

That is the supreme law, as every part of the Constitution is.

The nation forbids that any part of the authority vested in the several States shall be wielded by any agent who is not bound by oath to support the authority of the nation. The Constitution expressly exacts of the President that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." And each incumbent thereof, before he enters upon the execution of his office, must solemnly swear that he will faithfully discharge that duty. He must then see that the Governor and every other officer in each State take the oath of allegiance to the national Government. How will he do it? How shall this law be enforced? The President has no methods or means for enforcing the laws but writs and armies. Marshals and major generals are his forces. But they are not forces in the use of which the President has an option. When the marshal can do the work there is no use for the major general.

I mean to say, and I want it heard by all whom it may concern, that wherever the marshals of the United States can execute the writs of the United States, there is no work for an army; and an army cannot actively be employed in the execution of municipal law. But when the marshal is resisted by force, force may be employed to overcome the resistance; so much force as is needed for that purpose—the posse, if that will suffice; the Army, if that be necessary; the whole military resources of the nation and the whole enginery of war if the exigency requires them. But what writ will you employ to make the Governor of Virginia take the oath to support the Constitution of the United States, in case he is determined not to take it, and the people of Virginia are determined their officers shall not be bound by such oath? This question is not speculation.

I remember, Mr. President, when you offered a resolution in the executive session of 1861 to expel a member of this Senate because he declared upon this floor that he owed no allegiance to the Government of the United States. The resolution was opposed by a Senator from Virginia. In the course of his remarks he went on to explain how and why his allegiance was pledged to Virginia, and not to the United States. I quote from his remarks the following:

"The oath of allegiance in Virginia, to be taken by all those who are admitted in any way to a participation in the political power of the State, is this:

"I declare myself a citizen of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and solemnly swear that I will be faithful and true to the said Commonwealth, and will support the constitution thereof so long as I continue to be a citizen of the same."

"I will be faithful and true to the said Commonwealth—that is allegiance. Am I to be told by the Senator that we have a divided allegiance, that we can owe allegiance to two sovereigns? Am I to be told by the Senator that when I come here as a representative from a sovereign State I put off my allegiance and put on a new garb, and not to a sovereign, but to a mere agency?"—Congressional Globe, second session Thirty-Sixth Congress, part two, page 1449.

When, then, a State binds her officers by the most solemn oaths to allegiance to herself, and forbids their taking the oath prescribed by the United States, what is your remedy? Clearly, neither writs nor armies can supply a remedy. But cannot this law be enforced?

Must we permit the municipal authority of Virginia to be administered by officers who persistently defy the Constitution? Must we admit to the counsels of this Chamber Senators appointed by a Legislature who refuse to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States?

Sir, we have been diligently taught from our youth up that the Government of the United States is a Government of delegated powers; that no power not delegated to it can be rightfully exerted by it. I admit the doctrine. I have adhered to it all my life, and I abide by it to-day. But I ask the country to comprehend at last the extent of the powers which are delegated.

Among the powers delegated to this Government are not only the power to levy taxes, to borrow money, to regulate commerce, to coin money, to establish post offices and post roads, to declare war, to make treaties and alliances, to raise armies and maintain navies, but there is also this other power:

"To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

If, then, the supreme law commands the officers of a State to be bound by oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and if the President be authorized to enforce that law, how is authority for making any law necessary, and proper for its enforcement? What conceivable law is so necessary and proper for that purpose as a simple enactment, which declares that, since Virginia will not require her officers to take the oath prescribed to the officers of every State, Virginia shall not be a State; since her people will not elect officers who will take the oath of allegiance, this Government may appoint officers to administer her municipal affairs; since she has no Legislature whose members are qualified as the Constitution prescribes, her Legislature shall not send members to this Senate; since she abjures the obligations imposed upon her by the Constitution, she shall forfeit the privileges conferred upon her by the Constitution?

Sir, I know of no remedy so complete as such a law would afford, and therefore I can conceive of no law so necessary and so proper.

But this, we are told, is in effect a dissolution of the Union by act of Congress. Dissolution of what Union? Dissolution of the Union of the States under a compact? We have had no such Union since 1787. Before that time we had just such a Union. But then we formed a "more perfect Union." A more perfect union of what? Of States? No, there could be no more perfect union of States than we had under the Confederation. But in 1787 we formed a Union, not of States, under a compact, but of the people, under a Government.

From that Union there is no withdrawal except when the citizen withdraws his allegiance, and the citizen can only withdraw his allegiance by withdrawing his domicile, not merely beyond the limits of a State, but beyond the limits of the United States.

The Union which the Constitution ordained, and which I champion; is no close corporation, monopolized by a few States more or less. It is, on the contrary, a broad and national association of the people, coextensive with the boundaries of the Republic, and holding under its shelter the rudest hamlet on your remote frontier no less than this magnificent marble pile in which I now speak.

But we are told that only States can appoint members of this Senate, and only the people of States can choose members of the other House, and that only States can appoint electors of President and Vice President.

I admit it. And it is argued that if there were no State governments there would soon be no Government of the United States.

I admit it. And hence we are admonished that if we admit the destructibility of the State governments we do, in effect, admit the destructibility of the national Government. Unquestionably. Who doubts that the people of the States can destroy this Government? The people of one State cannot destroy it. That, I think, South Carolina will admit. The people of eleven States cannot do it. That, I hope, is settled. But that the people of all the States can do it, I do not think has ever been denied. They can destroy it, too, without first destroying themselves.

Sir, is it not evident that if every elector in Massachusetts should blow his brains out on a given day there would be no one left to choose her Governors and her Legislatures? And yet who would think of arguing that it was unconstitutional to affirm that an elector could commit suicide because it would argue the destructibility of a State?

But the flag! We are pointed to the flag of the Union; we are impressively told that it bears thirty-six stars, and that it "declares, in more than words of living light, there are thirty-six States still in the Union;" and my colleague asked the other day, with much emphasis and fervor, if that was a truth or a "hypocritical, flaunting lie." Nay, Mr. President, the stars do not lie; only my colleague, I think, fails to read them aright. If they asserted what my colleague seems to think they do they would not tell the truth. But, in fact, they make no such assertion.

Sir, it was a law of my father's household that the name of every child born to him should be inscribed upon a certain page in the family Bible. It was not provided that when death removed one from the circle the name should be erased from the record. And so it happens that the Book, which is still extant, bears to-day the names of eight brothers and sisters. But I know, sir, I know full well, that only four of us are now living.

So Congress enacted in April, 1818, that upon the national flag there should be "twenty stars, white, in a blue field," and "that on the admission of every new State into the Union one star be added to the union of the flag."

It was not enacted that when any State should revolt against the authority of the nation, and impiously raise its hand against its own life, a star should be dropped from the flag. And so it happens that our flag, wherever it floats to-day, flashes thirty-six stars in the light. But they gleam there not in evidence that thirty-six States still exist, but that thirty-six States have been created.

Sir, whatever may be thought of the right of Congress to strike South Carolina from the roll of States, I take it no one will seriously question the authority of Congress to strike one or all the stars from the flag; and what would then be the testimony of the flag?

But the great argument against the doctrine of the destructibility of the States is this: it is urged that the States cannot be destroyed, because the law forbids it. Every suicidal act is illegal, and is therefore null and void. Sir, I believe the laws of Connecticut forbid murder. But if some near and dear friend of yours should be waylaid, and have his throat cut from ear to ear, and you should apply for letters of administration upon his estate, would you not be surprised after you had marshaled in the probate court the proofs of his death, to be gravely told by the judge, "Sir, you are mistaken; your friend cannot be dead; the law forbids murder. The cutting of your friend's throat was clearly illegal, and therefore null and void?" If South Carolina had done nothing but adopt her ordinance of secession no one would have urged that she had thereby forfeited the prerogatives of a State.

We would have been content to have the courts pass upon its validity, and they would have pronounced it invalid. But she did more. Having declared her independence of the United States, she proceeded to have her officers take an oath which bound them to resist the Constitution instead of support it. And when the local government had thus disqualified itself for the exercise of any authority whatever, it proceeded to usurp every power which the Constitution denies to a State, and to abjure every duty which the Constitution imposes upon a State. And when she had thus revolutionized her local government she proceeded to crush out the Federal organs within her limits; to take possession of her forts; to convert her post offices and post roads to her own use; to shut up her custom-houses; the judge of the United States district court pulled down the national flag from the court-house and hoisted the palmetto flag in its place; the judge of the circuit court was excluded from the State, and I think has not since seen the State; marshals resigned, so that there was no officer who could serve the writ of the United States, and there was no Federal court in which the citizens of another State could collect a debt that was due, or recover a horse or a ship that was tortiously converted.

And then she planted her batteries opposite one of your own forts, garrisoned by a handful of your own troops, and for forty-eight hours hurled their iron hail upon the walls until they were said to resemble a honey-comb.

I do not doubt but all this was illegal, but I could not readily admit it was all a nullity.

If it was a nullity, what authority had this Government for planting the "swamp angel" off against Charleston and raining its iron messengers upon the city, or for sending Sherman flaring through the State as if he were himself the angel of retribution?

Sir, the awful truth is, these acts were not nullities, but were great, unprovoked, unparalleled, atrocious crimes, by which every State official forfeited not only the franchise of his office but his life, and by which every citizen who participated in that guilt forfeited not only his right to vote but his right to breathe.

The President is pleased to say that by these acts "the States attempting to secede placed themselves in a condition where their vitality was impaired but not extinguished, their functions suspended but not destroyed." I am, myself, quite unable to find any clause of the Constitution which discriminates between those acts which impair the vitality of a State and those which extinguish it. Nor do I comprehend that principle of philosophy which admits that any form of life can be impaired and yet cannot be extinguished. With all deference, I should suppose that any form of vitality, in order to be sure against extinction, should be proof against deterioration. But I am not disposed to insist upon this criticism.

Nor do I think it worth while for the great Union party to divide upon the question whether the Constitution requires us to say that the functions of a State in a given emergency are "suspended" or "destroyed." Being classed with the radicals this year, I acknowledge a leaning to the more positive forms of expression. I have, therefore, rather insisted upon the theory of suicide. But rather than disrupt our organization I think I could compromise upon that of syncope. But it is conceded that the functions of the rebel States were suspended, were gone. Perhaps the most succinct and apposite term to be found in the American lexicography would be to say they were "played out." At all events they were suspended. Now, that is precisely what ailed Lazarus. When he had lain four days in the grave and already stunk, it was only because his "functions were suspended." [Laughter.] Nevertheless, "Jesus said unto them plainly Lazarus is dead," notwithstanding He knew he could raise him from the grave. And so I say these rebellious States are dead. But I know although they have lain in the grave four years, and smell worse than Lazarus did, [laughter,] yet the recreative power of the nation can make them live again. Indeed, the suspension of the functions is sure death to a man or a State.

But since their functions were suspended the question remains, for how long were they suspended? Were they suspended during the pleasure of the several States, or during the pleasure of the United States? Certainly during the pleasure of the United States. That is already decided, at least by the executive department of this Government.

In April last, General Johnston of the rebel army offered to surrender his whole army upon condition that the several districts might be allowed to resume the functions of States at once. But the Government then wisely and firmly said, "No; we do not propose to purchase the surrender of that army, nor sell the remission of those functions. That army we propose to take, because it belongs to the United States. Those functions we will restore when we see you know how to use them." Is it then the pleasure of the United States that these suspended functions be now restored?

But, first, who shall answer that question? What department of the Government is charged with the duty of declaring from time to time the pleasure of the United States? No one pretends that the judicial department has this power. But there are those who argue that it is for the President to decide when these functions shall be restored, and that he has already decided it. I do not myself understand that the President has decided that question. If he had done so, I think he would not have withheld so important a fact from Congress when he made his annual communication upon "the state of the Union." I have carefully read that well-considered and able message. I find an unequivocal declaration that the functions of those States which attempted to secede have been suspended, but I find no intimation that they have been restored.

And manifestly it is not within the purview of his official duty to restore them. It is the province of the President to execute the national will, not to expound it. He is placed in command of the Army and Navy, to enable him to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," not that they be wisely made. With all that power in his hands he cannot rightfully so much as transfer an old musket from one citizen to another without the warrant of the United States, tested by a judge, declaring the right of the claimant to have it. The President cannot fix the price to be paid for an acre of the public domain nor the duty to be paid upon the importation of a pound of tea. Is it supposable that the people who withheld from the Executive the right to legislate upon such trifling concerns would authorize him to fix the terms upon which eight million people, who had forfeited their lives by law, should be organized into eleven States of the Union? I am not only confident that this is the last power which the people would confer upon the executive department, but I am persuaded it is the last power which the present Executive would consent to exert; and that not solely or mainly because of the unsuitableness of his office for ascertaining the national will upon the question, but chiefly because of his personal relations to and his possible interest in the question to be determined.

Do Senators comprehend what consequences result necessarily from restoring the functions of those States? It will add fifty-eight members to the House of Representatives, more than one fourth of its present number. It will add twenty-two members to this Senate, nearly one half its present number. The Constitution designed the Legislature to be independent of the Executive. But what independence has that Legislature into which the Executive may at his pleasure pour so many votes? The Queen of Great Britain has no such power over the Parliament of the realm. She may constitutionally add that number of votes to the House of Lords, but it is beyond the stretch of her vast prerogatives to add a vote to the Commons. But this is not all. Restoring the function of States to the people of those lately rebellious districts adds eighty votes to the Electoral College which chooses the President and the Vice President of the United States. Suppose the present incumbent of the White House was ambitious of a reelection—the supposition is in no wise derogatory to him—that is an ambition which becomes any distinguished citizen of the Republic, and no one better than himself. But suppose he were, as some aspirants for that exalted place have been, not over-scrupulous as to the means by which he secured his election; who is so blind as not to see the terrible advantage which would be placed in his hands by conceding him the power to add to the vote of the Electoral College more than one third of its present number?

A few years since we heard much of a set of fellows in San Francisco who were designated as ballot-box stuffers. But what ballot-box stuffing ever known in San Francisco could parallel that which such a concession of power to a candidate for the Presidency would legitimate?

I make this comment because it is forced upon me by the attitude of those communities which are seeking at the hands of the President a restoration of the functions of States. Their professions of obligation, their proffers of support, are too conspicuous to pass unnoticed. To the inducements which they hold out as the price of prompt restoration, I understand that a somewhat distinguished citizen of New York has lately added a proffer of the support of the Democratic party of the existing States. That tender, however, I am bound to say, does not, in my judgment, amount to an attempt at bribery. [Laughter.] And that for these reasons: first, because the gentleman making the proffer did not own what he tendered; second, because the thing he tendered had no value in the market; and third, because if it should come to have a value by the time the offer is to be redeemed, the legal presumption is the tender would be withdrawn. [Laughter.]

And I make this comment the more freely because from nothing I have seen or heard have I been led to believe that the judgment of the President has been swayed a single hair's breadth by the seductive arts which have been practiced before him. I am happy in the belief to-day that if Congress will but discharge its duty as firmly, as dispassionately, and as conscientiously as the President has addressed himself to the discharge of his, the country is safe.

To the legislative department there is delegated the responsibility of determining when these suspended functions shall be restored. To Congress it ought to be delegated, because its members coming more directly from the people, and from many different localities, are supposed to be better informed as to what is the popular will than any individual can be. To Congress it ought to be delegated, because its members have no personal interest in the decision of the question. The people of those revolting districts will have no more and no less influence upon the reelection of the members of these Houses whether the functions of States are restored to them or not. To Congress this power is delegated by the express terms of the Constitution. "New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union," is the language of the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution. To Congress also the Supreme Court assigns this power by necessary implication, if not by express adjudication, in the celebrated case of Luther vs. Borden, reported in the 7th Howard, Supreme Court Reports, page 1. Then two distinct rival organizations claimed to be the government of Rhode Island. The question presented to the court was which of the two was the legitimate government. The court decided that the question was political and not judicial, and in the opinion of Chief Justice Taney I find the following conclusive words:

"The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution of the United States provides that the United States shall guaranty to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on the application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence.

"Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is established in a State. For, as the United States guaranty to each State a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the State before it can determine whether it is republican or not. And when the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding upon every other department of the Government, and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal. It is true that the contest in this case did not last long enough to bring the matter to this issue; and as no Senators or Representatives were elected under the authority of the government of which Mr. Dorr was the head, Congress was not called upon to decide the controversy. Yet the right to decide is placed there, and not in the courts."

If Congress, then, may rightfully determine which of two rival organizations is the legitimate government of an acknowledged State, a fortiori must Congress decide when a particular organization is or is not the government of a State.
